Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on certain two promissory notes for £67 16s. 3d. and £50 respectively.

Order granted.

POOLE V. FORSYTH AND PALMER.

Mr. Burton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £6,000, less £500 paid on account, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

BEYERS V. KINNINGS.

Mr. Long moved for provisional sentence for £23 5s. 1d., on certain acknowledgment of debt.

Order granted, subject to note being stamped forthwith.

HANAU V. PARRY.

Mr. Uppington moved for provisional sentence for £200 on certain acknowledgment of debt, less £27 9s. 6d. paid on account, and for certain scrip pledged as security to be declared executable.

Order granted.

VAN ZYL V. WHITEHEAD.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence for £134 16s. 10d., on certain dishonoured cheque.

Order granted, subject to production of certificate of presentment.

At a later stage, Mr. Swift asked his lordship's permission to call his attention to the provisions of section 49 (sub-section 1) of Act 19 of 1893. The matter, he said, involved a point of practice. A drawer was in the position of an acceptor. He contended that it was not necessary to produce certificate.

Buchanan, J., said he was afraid that the practice of the Court was against counsel. He thought a certificate of presentation should be produced.

SELIGMAN V. LAVAK (ALIAS HARRIES).

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Middelburg, for £14 and taxed costs, and for certain erf to be declared executable.

Order granted.

LAWRIE V. GELB AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence against the first and second defendants on a certain mortgage bond for £230, due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. He said that there was no return of service upon the first defendant.

Order granted as prayed, subject to production of executors' appointment.

HAZELL V. TRUSTEES, A.M.E. CHURCH, KALK BAY.

Mr. Pyemont moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

SPIILHAUS AND CO. V. { 1906.
KLAAS. { Sept. 12th.

Mr. Toms moved for judgment in terms of consent for £2,193 6s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

WILLIAMS BROS. V. FERNANDEZ OR GOLDSTEIN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £32 18s. 9d., for work and labour done and materials supplied, and costs. Counsel also moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, interdicting certain funds lying in the bank, and for the said funds to be attached.

Defendant admitted the debt. As to the funds in the bank, he said that a portion must go towards the education of his children. He had offered £2 a month to the plaintiff.

Judgment granted and interdict made absolute, amount in the bank to be attached, less £10 to be sent by defendant to his children.

MONARCH COLLIERIES V. STRAUSS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £100 in respect of certain 100 shares in the plaintiff company, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

STEPHEN FRASER AND CO. V. SINDLER.

Mr. Long moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £529 9s. 4d., balance of account, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

MACCALLUM V. CAPE MINERALS, LTD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £25 11s. 4d., bill of costs, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

DOOVEY V. ALLIE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £48 18s., balance of rent due, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GOVEY. } 1006.
 } Sept. 12th.

Mr. Long moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising the removal of F. St. V. Brooks from the Valkenberg Asylum to a lunatic asylum at Warwick, England. Petitioner was curator bonis of the lunatic, whose relatives in England desired him to be removed.

Order granted, authorising the removal of the lunatic, applicant to file his final account in the estate with the Master.

WATSON AND CO. (IN LIQUIDATION) V. WRIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved as a matter of urgency, on the petition of the liquidators' agent, for the arrest of the respondent, who was about to leave the Colony by the Home-going mail steamer this afternoon. Defendant, the petitioner said, was indebted to the firm of Wm. Watson and Co., in the sum of £55 11s. 9d., and he had just come down to this colony from Johannesburg en route for Europe. The debt was incurred in this Colony, and referred to certain clearance charges, and so forth. Defendant had admitted his liability, and offered to pay, but he had failed to redeem his promise. Counsel distinguished this case from McLeod v. Benjamin (2 C.T.R., 119). He added that the Registrar had declined to grant a writ of arrest.

Buchanan, J., observed that the affidavit was very bald, and the Registrar would, if the information had been more detailed, have had no difficulty. The Registrar would, under the circumstances, be authorised to issue a writ under Rule 8.

Mr. Pohl moved for a certain rule nisi authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis to be made absolute.

Rule absolute, Mr. Pohl being assigned as advocate and Mr. David Tennant as attorney of petitioner.

Ex parte RICKETTS.

Mr. Bailey moved for a certain rule nisi authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis to be made absolute.

Rule absolute, Mr. Bailey being appointed to act as counsel, and Mr. David Tennant as attorney of petitioner.

Ex parte HAMP.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue her husband in forma pauperis and by edictal citation.

Ordered to stand over, pending appearance of petitioner in person tomorrow.

Postea (September 13th).

Petitioner (in reply to the Court) said that their income by her own and her children's earnings was £26 a month. Witness wanted to obtain a divorce.

Hopfly, J., said that he did not know whether it was a sensible course for the petitioner to pursue. He thought she would be very wise if she went on working for herself and her children. The Court could only grant a rule at present. He advised counsel to consider the question of letting the matter stand over at present, as there was a suggested rule now before the Judges in reference to publishing notices of this kind in an abbreviated form. If desired, he would grant a rule at present, and then before the citation was published the suggested new rule might have been adopted.

Eventually, the matter was ordered to stand over until the first day of term for further information on certain points.

Ex parte ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Toms moved for a certain rule nisi authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis to be made absolute.

Rule absolute, Mr. Toms being appointed to act as counsel, and Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton as attorneys of petitioner.

Ex parte PRETORIUS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a certain rule nisi authorising the High Sheriff to pass transfer of certain property to be made absolute.

Respondent did not appear.

NKOMO V. NTSHINGA.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an interdict restraining respondent from parting with certain 29 head of cattle, pending action to be brought in the Resident Magistrate's Court, in the district of Matatiele. Respondent, he said, did not now oppose the application.

Interdict granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte SOUTH AFRICAN WIDOWS' FUND SOCIETY.

Mr. Molteno moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising distribution of the funds remaining in the hands of the Master to the three surviving widows.

Rule absolute.

SOUTH AFRICAN TRADE PROTECTION SOCIETY V. GUTHRIE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the liquidator of the applicant society, for an order upon the respondent, who is manager of the Kimberley branch, to deliver up the originals of all books and other documents relating to the society, applicant tendering cost of carriage.

Order granted, with costs, without prejudice to any rights which respondent may have to preference for his claim.

LESSEYTON VILLAGE MANAGEMENT BOARD AND OTHERS V. TABATA.

Mr. McGregor moved for an interdict restraining respondent from obstructing, removing, or diverting, or otherwise interfering with the stream of the Lesseyton River, passing over the farm Tabata, to the 32 garden allotments in the Lesseyton Location, division of Queen's Town. Counsel read an affidavit by the chairman of the applicant Board and produced other affidavits.

Interdict granted, with costs against respondent.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SMITH AND ROLLINS V. } 1906.
JENKINSON. } Sept. 13th.

Mr. Palmer (for plaintiffs) moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration, a settlement having been arrived at.

Provisional order set aside.

KHAN V. AHAMED.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £60, with interest, and for confirmation of a certain writ of arrest.

From the affidavits, it appeared that plaintiff alleged that defendant had signed the promissory note for two sums of £35 and £25 advanced to Ahamed, and that defendant had been arrested, because it had come to plaintiff's notice that he had booked a passage to Bombay per the Prinzeregent, and that plaintiff had no security for his claim. Plaintiff and defendant had been fellow-workmen at the Castle Breweries, and both had lived in Cape Town. Plaintiff said that the defendant signed the note by making his mark. Defendant flatly denied the alleged loans, and declared that he had not made his mark to the note in question. He said that he always signed his name in his own language. He did not deny that it had been his intention to proceed to his home in India. He repudiated any liability under the note.

Mr. Upington was for plaintiff; Dr. Greer was for defendant.

Mr. Upington, in view of the denial of execution of the note, applied for a day to be fixed for parole evidence to be led.

Hopley, J., said it was evident that the matter could not be decided on motion. The plaintiff must go into the principal case.

Postea (September 20th and 24th).

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Evidence was led on behalf of the plaintiff.

Bhikhabhai Desai, Indian fruiterer, 138, Caledon-street, said that he drew up the document in question at Feroz Khan's house, No. 1, Selkirk-street, Cape Town, on the 20th June. Feroz was the plaintiff's uncle. The cross was made by Fajale Ahmed. Feroz

Khan signed the document as witness. Plaintiff told witness that he had previously lent defendant £35, and he was going to lend him £25 more, and he asked witness to fill up the document in English. The conversation at the house was in Hindustani. Witness asked defendant if he could sign his name in English or Hindustani, and he said that he could not write in either language. Plaintiff gave a sum of £25 to defendant.

Cross-examined: Witness was sure that the man who signed the note was Fajale Ahmed (pointing to defendant). Witness was paid nothing for writing out the promissory note. He had not told anyone that he had been paid for making out the promissory note. He did not see the man Khirdie on the 2nd September; he had never spoken to the man.

Re-examined: Witness was a Hindu, and plaintiff was a Mohammedan.

By the Court: Witness spoke and wrote a different language from defendant.

Plaintiff said that he lived at 11, Tennant-street, and was employed as a driver at the Castle Breweries, Woodstock. He was sure that defendant was the man who signed the promissory note produced on the 20th June, about 7.30 or 8 p.m. The loan was to be repaid in two months.

Cross-examined: The note was signed at 11, Tennant-street, which was the same building as No. 1, Selkirk-street. The promissory note was written on the 20th June. Witness was sure that defendant could not sign his name when the document was executed. If he could write his name now, he had been taught since the 20th June. Defendant was known by three names. Desai entered on the document the name given to him by defendant. Desai was paid nothing for drawing up the note. Defendant lived in the same house as witness until about a fortnight before he left for India. He denied that defendant left the house because witness had threatened him. There was no truth in the allegation that Ahmed detected him committing a serious crime. The money that defendant had when he was going on board had been got by gambling. Defendant was only employed at Simon's Town for a few weeks.

By the Court: Witness could not read or write.

[Buchanan, J.: Then how do you recognise this promissory note?]

Witness: I know it by the cross and my uncle's signature.

Feroz Kahn (plaintiff's uncle), an elderly Mohammedan (in answer to the Court), said that he had learned to write a few months ago. He wrote his name in English at the request of his lordship.

Kurdy Khan, another Indian labourer, also gave evidence for the plaintiff.

Mr. Upington closed his case,

Alexander S. Roberts, chief time-keeper in the employ of Sir John Jackson, Limited, said that the defendant was employed by Sir John Jackson, Limited, at Simon's Town, on the 20th June. He would be working until half-past seven in the evening. Witness produced his time-book. Defendant, he said, had been employed by Sir John Jackson at Simon's Town for a considerable number of months.

Cross-examined: Witness did not make the entries in the book. They were made by his assistant, Pearce. He was sure that the entries were correct.

Mr. Upington pointed out that, according to the entries in the book, defendant worked on the average over 12 hours per day.

[Buchanan, J.: That is not out of the question. Children in Scotland used to work fifteen hours a day.]

They did, and they died like flies until legislation intervened.

[Buchanan, J.: I mean that it is not a physical impossibility.]

It is not, for a certain time. The troops worked 18 or 20 hours a day. Counsel added that the Court ought to have the evidence of the clerk who made the entries in the book.

Witness (in answer to the Court) said that he was only subpoenaed at 6 o'clock last night.

Buchanan, J., said that witness's assistant had better come to the Court and prove the entries to-morrow morning.

Mr. Upington said that the matter was very serious for his client, and he should like an opportunity of going into it.

Buchanan, J., said that he could not let the case stand over for long. The timekeeper's assistant must come on Monday and give evidence as to the entries.

Fazla Ahmed (the defendant) said that he had lately been employed at Simon's Town by Sir John Jackson. He denied that he had made his mark on the promissory note produced, or indeed that he had ever seen it until he was arrested. Witness was able to write his own name. At the request of his lordship, he proceeded to write his name in Hindustani. Continuing his evidence, he said that he had been able to write his name about twelve years. He had not borrowed money from the plaintiff. When he was arrested he had £94 in his possession; at that time he intended to go back to India, because he had enough money. While in South Africa he had earned about 23s. or 24s. a week. Witness left Feroz Khan's house because he had been threatened by Feroz Khan. Witness saw certain criminal conduct taking place at the house two and a half years ago, and Feroz said that if he made any disclosure he would cut his neck.

Cross-examined: Witness had never borrowed money from either Feroz Kahn or the plaintiff. When he was leaving this country he had altogether £116. It was not his intention to return.

Khirdo, an Indian, said that to his knowledge defendant had been employed at Simon's Town for over two years. Ahmed stayed with witness about a fortnight before he was going away. There was no secrecy about defendant's intention to go away. Witness said that on the day after Ahmed had been arrested at the Docks, he had an interview with Desai, who said that he could not tell him the truth about the promissory note, as he had been paid money to make out the document. Desai said that he had been paid £28. Witness offered to give him £30 if he would speak the truth, and he arranged to meet Desai again in the evening.

Cross-examined: Witness belonged to the same district in India as defendant, plaintiff, and Feroz Khan. Witness had £60 of his own money, and he had been prepared to give Desai £30 if he would speak the truth in regard to the note. Witness had, as a matter of fact, given Desai £30. He had been very angry because the Khans had stopped Ahmed from going to his home, because of a quarrel they had about two years ago.

Harrison Pearce, an employee of Sir John Jackson, Limited, said that the book produced was his time-book, and the entries had been made by himself. On the 20th June last Ahmed started at 7.30 a.m., and gave up at 7.30 p.m. On the two following days he worked similar hours.

Cross-examined: The book produced was entered up from witness's book-keeping in time-book. He took Ahmed's name from his number; Ahmed carried a brass ticket. Ahmed, as far as witness could trace him, had been in the employ of Sir John Jackson, Limited, since February. If Ahmed were able to give his number while employed in other departments, they would probably be able to trace his service with the firm still further back. If a man worked during his lunch-time it would not be counted on to his day's work. Witness had a book which he himself entered up showing the time at which the defendant commenced work; the time at which he ceased work was shown in the overtime book, which, however, was kept by another employee.

Mr. Upington: Do you never make a mistake in regard to these Indians?

Witness: If you made a mistake with an Indian, he would soon be on top of you.

Further cross-examined: They had about 300 Mohammedan and Punjabi Indians at the Docks at Simon's Town; they were employed in forty different gangs.

Mr. Upington having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: Plaintiff in this case, Merdad Kahn, sues the defendant, Fazla Ahmed, on a promissory note for £60. This promissory note is dated 20th June, 1906, and is payable 20th August, and signed by a mark. The witness to it is Feroz Kahn. The note was written by one Desai, who appears to be an educated Indian compared to the others, and he said he wrote it at the request of the plaintiff. About half-past seven on the evening of the 20th June he was called in to the shop of the plaintiff, and there the defendant was present; he saw £25 paid out to the defendant, he saw the defendant make his mark, and he saw Feroz Kahn witness the mark, and he himself wrote on the note, "Written by B. Desai." Now, as Desai himself knew better than anybody else what was going on, he took care not to sign as witness of the signature. The signature is denied by the defendant, who says that he was not present on the 20th June, and the burden, therefore, is upon the plaintiff to prove that the defendant signed this note. Then Merdad Kahn, the plaintiff, gives a similar story, and so also does Feroz Kahn, his uncle, and the only other witness is another Kahn, who says he is not a relative of the plaintiff, and he gives evidence also as to this £25 being paid over to defendant, but he did not see Feroz Kahn sign any note. He is contradicted as to this fact, and there is no other witness who has been called. From my own experience, the evidence in cases between Indians is apt to be of the most conflicting nature, and so I am not surprised to find that the defendant positively denies all these allegations made by the plaintiff and his witnesses, and that the evidence of the defendant also corroborated. Going outside these Indians, Mr. Roberts, the chief timekeeper employed by Sir John Jackson, Ltd., was called to produce the time-book, showing that the defendant in this case was actually employed at Sir John Jackson's works both on and before and after the 20th June. On the 20th June, from the time-books, it appears that defendant was actually employed from half-past seven in the morning till half-past seven in the evening at Simon's Town, when, according to the plaintiff's witnesses, he was here in Cape Town signing the note. It is suggested that this note might have been made on a different date. But against that we have the evidence of Desai, who said that he knew distinctly from the calendar what the date was. Then to-day we have had the evidence of Mr. Pearce; he actually kept the time-book; he knows the defendant; the defendant was employed at Simon's Town, and he himself from his entries is positive that this man (the defendant), who is alleged to have been signing the note in Cape Town, was at the time working at Simon's Town. Then, again, the defendant is supposed to have made his mark to the note, but he could write Hindustani clearly and distinctly, and it is not an uncommon thing for notes to be brought into court which are signed in Hindustani. It has been shown in court that he could have written his name in Hindustani characters, and he has not written his name in this case. There is also another point against plaintiff's story. Desai, if I understand him rightly, says he cannot write Hindustani, and if he cannot write Hindustani, that accounts for the note being signed by a cross and not in Hindustani. He spells the man's name wrongly, while, curiously enough, at Simon's Town, where he is employed at the docks, his name is correctly spelled in the time-book. Under these circumstances, I do not wish to go further than is absolutely necessary in the case before me, and I hold that the action brought by the plaintiff has failed. He has failed to discharge the onus of proving that the defendant signed this note, and the arrest of the defendant must be discharged, with costs. Defendant will, therefore, be released, and the bond cancelled. One other point I ought to have mentioned is that the defendant, when arrested on the 12th September, had not only paid his passage to India, but he had also £116 in his possession. It is alleged by the plaintiff that he got this money by gambling, but I do not believe that he got it by this means, for he is shown by the books to be a steady, hard-working man, and he is not the kind of man who would be likely to risk his savings in gambling. That strengthened my conviction that defendant did not sign this promissory note.

LAWRIE V. GELB AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin applied for an extension of return day until the 15th October, so far as the first defendant is concerned. Counsel explained that judgment had been taken against the other defendants on Wednesday, but the summons against the first defendant seemed to have miscarried.

Return day extended until the 15th October.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE, LTD. V. DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE FOR COLD STORAGE. 1906. Sept. 13th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea for certain sums set out in the declaration, amounting in all to about £20,000.

Mr. Searle said that the amount was arrived at on certain accounts, which plaintiffs said had been stated as between the parties.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), appeared for the defendants, and read an affidavit by their attorney (Mr. G. Fairbridge), who said that the matters at issue between plaintiff and defendant, related to contracts for the supply of meat extending over a very long period. There were, defendants alleged, over-charges, incorrect accounts, and failure to credit allowances in the accounts rendered by plaintiffs to defendants, and, generally, they said, the accounts rendered by plaintiffs were incorrect and misleading, both in principle and also in matters of detail. Upon debate of the account, it would be found that there was a large balance in defendants' favour. Deponent added that there had been no unnecessary delay in preparing to file a plea, but that, owing to various causes, defendants had not been able to file a printed copy of their plea before they were barred.

Mr. Searle read a replying affidavit by Mr. Reid, secretary of the plaintiff company, who entered at some length into the transactions between the parties. He said that an investigation had been made as to the accounts between the parties, and the syndicate's accountants had reported that they did not find any overcharges. The Imperial Co. were not satisfied as to the bona fides of the defence, and they asked for an order upon defendants to pay a sum of money into court under security de restitucendo. Deponent said that indulgence had been allowed the defendants in regard to filing their plea. The defendant syndicate had not been overcharged, but, as a matter of fact, had been undercharged. If a debate of the pool prices of the meat supplies were desired, the account of the Imperial Cold Storage would have to be increased.

Mr. McGregor read certain answering affidavits.

Eventually it was agreed between the parties that the matter should stand over until the first day of next term, with a view, if possible, of having the matters in dispute then submitted to a referee.

In the meantime, the Court ordered the bar to be removed, and directed defendants to file plea on or before Monday next, costs to be costs in the cause.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SINCLAIR AND ANOTHER v. } 1906.
MATZ. } Sept. 13th.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to issue a writ of execution pending an appeal to be brought from a judgment of Mr.

Justice Hopley, sitting as a Divisional Court. Counsel added that the applicants' attorney was willing to hold the money in trust, pending decision of the appeal.

Leave granted to execute judgment as prayed, security to be given to the satisfaction of the Registrar, pending result of appeal.

Ex parte DRURY.

Mr. Upington moved, on the petition of Eugene J. Drury, as executrix in the estate of her late husband, Joseph Herman Drury, for leave to pass a general mortgage bond over the estate, including a special mortgage bond for £1,500 over the landed property. Counsel said that the matter was urgent, and was in connection with a tobacco manufacturer's business at Port Elizabeth, which was in financial difficulties, and the creditors, unless an arrangement were come to by Wednesday next, were proceeding to extremities. Mr. Drury carried on in his lifetime a manufacturing tobaccoist's business in Port Elizabeth as J. H. Drury and Co., and was also the owner of certain landed property there on the Garrison ground. He died in 1898, having in 1896 made a mutual will with the applicant as spouse, under which he left his property to his children in equal shares as sole and universal heirs and usufruct, and administration to applicant. Two of the children were now majors, and supported the application. Early in 1905, the business became involved in difficulties, and it became necessary to apply to the Court for leave to borrow £1,500 to meet the claims of creditors, and, after considerable delay, the Court authorised petitioner to raise £1,500 on first mortgage of the property. Meantime, things had been going from bad to worse, and £1,500, which was sufficient in January, 1905, was not sufficient in May, 1905. It might be said that the manager who carried on the business for applicant was not highly successful in a business sense, and investigation by a good accountant showed that, although a good business it was starved for want of capital. Subsequently, meetings of creditors were held, and eventually a deed of inspection was entered into in July, 1906, under which one E. L. Webber was appointed to carry on the inspection, and he was practically in sole control and management of the business. He agreed under the deed to carry on for 12 months, and during that period he advanced £1,500 to enable the business to be continued. At the end of 12 months he was to have the option of leaving the money in the business, and going in as a partner pro rata for his £1,500. To enable this arrangement to go through and to satisfy a recalcitrant creditor, it was necessary that petitioner should pass a general bond and a special second bond.

Hopley, J.: You may take your order as prayed. The arrangement seems to be the best thing for the business, and for the minors. The Master has reported favourably upon it. Costs will come out of the funds.

CAUVIN AND ANOTHER V. BONCKER (1).
BONCKER V. S. A. ASSOCIATION FOR ADMINISTRATION AND SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES (2).

CAUVIN V. BONCKER (3).

In the first matter, Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for plaintiffs, and Mr. Burton was for defendant.

Mr. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,800, with interest, less £17 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Burton read an affidavit by defendant, who said that Mr. Juritz, of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, had agreed to allow her a few days in which to get her affairs in order, so that she would be able to pay the interest.

Mr. Jones read an affidavit denying that any such undertaking was given.

In the second matter, Mr. Burton moved for an order directing the South African Association to carry into effect an order granted by Mr. Justice Maasdorp in Chambers on the 8th February, 1906.

Dr. Greer was for the respondent association.

Applicant some years ago had had transferred to her certain property in Cape Town in trust for her children, and subject to a life interest in her favour. The property was sold for £1,000 to one Mr. Ford, who gave a bond for £800. Applicant had surrendered her life interest in the trust in favour of her children. She had obtained an order from the Court in February last authorising distribution of the balance of proceeds of the sale to her children. Mrs. Boncker complained that the association had not proceeded for recovery of the bond from Mr. Ford with sufficient diligence. The association said that they had sued Ford for arrears of interest, and that provisional sentence had been obtained, but a nulla bona return had been made. The property had been offered for sale, but no bid had been obtained. The whole of Ford's immovable property had been seized under a previous judgment.

Applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that if the association had taken timely steps to recover the amount of the bond from Ford, they would have been successful. The association had acted upon part of the order, and had paid out a sum of £20 to her daughter Frances. If respondents had duly carried into effect the order of the Court, she would have been able to meet the interest on the bond held by Cauvin and another. The sale of Ford's property was merely voluntary.

Mr. Jones said that there was a third matter, in which Cauvin applied for an interdict restraining Mrs. Boncker from parting with her interest in the trust. The respondent's attorneys had, however, refused to accept service.

Mr. Burton said that he did not appear in the matter of the interdict.

Hopley, J., said that he was not aware of any practice of the Court which would enable such an application to be made.

Mr. Jones contended that a well-defined practice had grown up in the Court, under which the application was quite regular. Here they had a woman who was in difficulties and could not meet her debts proposing to give away a valuable portion of her assets, to the value of £40 or £50 a year, to her children.

[Hopley, J.: It is a free country and you can give away your property if you like. I don't know of any law by which she could be stopped. There must be some distinguishing feature in every case where the Court has interdicted moneys for the benefit of a third party.]

Dr. Greer having been heard on behalf of the South African Association,

Mr. Burton addressed the Court on behalf of Mrs. Boncker, in reference to the three matters. In reference to the motion against the South African Association counsel argued that the Court should grant cession of the bond to the applicant's children. In regard to the provisional case, he submitted that a stay of execution should be granted to enable Mrs. Boncker to meet her liabilities.

Hopley, J.: There are three matters before the Court arising out of the affairs of Mrs. Boncker. The first I shall deal with is the application made on behalf of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, as the agents for Mrs. Cauvin, to interdict Mrs. Boncker from alienating her interest in a certain trust fund under the administration of the South African Association, or otherwise dealing with the fund or her life interest, to the prejudice of the applicants. It would appear that a certain amount, £1,000, as to which Mrs. Boncker had a life interest, and her children are eventually entitled to the corpus of this £1,000, was placed in the hands of the South African Association, and as to £200, they have administered that amount, I believe, but, as to the sum of £800 that was invested in a mortgage bond on property belonging to a man called Ford. On the 8th February, 1906, Mrs. Boncker, having made application to the Court in chambers for leave to surrender her own life interest in favour of her children, who are all majors, the Court, as was natural under the circumstances, granted the order, and she has no longer got any right over that property, because, by that order of February, the South African Association were ordered and authorised to distribute the balance of the aforesaid sum of £1,000, and to pay to each of the petitioner's children the amount falling to his or her share, so that, so long ago as February last, Mrs. Boncker ceased, as far as I can see—unless this order be set aside by some process of which I am not at present aware—to have any right to the corpus of this £1,000. It seems, however, that now the Colonial Orphan Chamber, as the agents of Mrs. Cauvin, come and ask that she should be restrained from parting with her interest in this property, but they come a good deal too late, because she long ago did part with her interest in it, and unless the order of Court be set aside, there is nothing to restrain her about, because the property in the hands of the association belongs to the children, and not to Mrs. Boncker. That order, however, Mr. Jones insists that they have a right to get. Without giving a decision on the point, which he most strenuously argued, that such moneys, although not in the slightest degree bonded in any way, were attachable—a position in which I cannot at the present moment give my consent—it seems to me that the application must be refused for another reason, that Mrs. Boncker is no longer in possession of the funds in question. That application will be refused, with costs. Then there is a sort of cross-application on the part of Mrs. Boncker against the South African Association, calling upon them to show cause why they should not hand over the moneys which they hold. It would appear that there has been a good deal of correspondence going on, and that the association has been doing something, but rather by way of working with the debtor Ford than by way of strenuously taking up the case for Mrs. Boncker and her children to get rid of this property, and get the funds into their hands for the purpose of distribution to the children, as they were authorised to do by the order of Court in February last. They have not taken a judgment against Ford, nor have they offered to hand over the bond to the children to enable them to realise the bond in their own way. If they saw a difficulty in realising the bond, and so giving each child a pro rata share, they could have made an offer to the children, and have said, "Take your bond and realise it yourself." It was their duty to obey, as quickly as they could, the order of the Court, which was to distribute this money to the children of Mrs. Boncker. Since February a fairly long time has elapsed, nothing has been done, the property has not been realised. Ford was sued for interest on the bond, and a return of nulla bona was made. They did not make Ford insolvent, so that the bond could be proved in his insolvent estate, and realised they did not proceed to sue him on the bond, and get the property attached, and made executable, as they might have done, and the whole thing has been allowed to go on from month to month. In the meantime, the children who have been depending on this fund, as far as I can see, to assist their mother, have been stopped from getting anything, and the result is that Mrs. Boncker has fallen into difficulties. With regard to the action of the association, it seems to me that they have been entirely in the wrong in not being more prompt in this matter. They may have the excuse that the times were bad, and that in their judgment it would not be easy to realise a property like this. They may have a further excuse that Ford put up this property for sale, the place seems to have been offered, and the association seems to have acted for Ford in the matter. The sale was not successful. Things went on until on the 7th of this month the association received verbal notification, and on the 8th a written notification from the Colonial Orphan Chamber asking or ordering them—I don't know what right they had to do that—to refrain from handing to the children or anyone else the funds in their hands. I do not know why they should have obeyed or submitted to the dictation of their sister association. The attitude taken up by the South African Association seems to me to be wrong, and a fair order to make in this matter would be either that they realise forthwith, or hand over the bond to Mrs. Boncker's children, so that they might realise it, and that, as far as the application in which the South African Association are involved is concerned, they should pay costs of this application. As to the application for provisional sentence on the bond, I think that the documents show, and I am satisfied on the statement of Mr. Juritz, that there was no agreement not to sue her, but that they agreed that she should make payments as she could, this, however, not affecting the legal position. They have sued her, and, strictly, they are entitled to their provisional sentence, but I should think that, rather than precipitate matters, it would be a wise thing on their part to wait a little time, instead of ruining the present debtor. Provisional sentence will be granted, with costs, but I think we might, in the circumstances, postpone execution for six weeks from the present date. I do not think the creditor can possibly suffer, and he might gain a good deal by waiting.

Mr. Jones asked his lordship whether it could not be directed that the rents falling due from the property should in the meantime be attached.

Hopley, J., said that execution would be stayed for six weeks, any rents falling due within that period to be handed over to the Colonial Orphan Chamber towards payment of the overdue interest.

Dr. Greer said that there would be certain commission chargeable by the South African Association against Mrs. Boncker.

Hopley, J., said that, in the application by Mrs. Boncker against the S.A. Association, the order would be that the bond be handed over, to be ceded to the applicant's children upon payment of any charges due to the association in the administration of the matter, the association to pay the costs.

OHLSSON V. TURNBULL. { 1906.
 { Sept. 13th.

Landlord and tenant—Hotel lease —Partnership—Eviction.

O. had leased certain hotel premises to D. and P., then trading in partnership. Thereafter the partnership was dissolved, and D. was accepted by O. as sole tenant. T. alleged that, for valuable consideration and with the verbal consent of O.'s manager, he had been accepted by D. as a partner. D. subsequently became insolvent, and his trustee abandoned the lease. O. now applied on motion for the ejectment of T. from the hotel premises.

Held, that as it had not been proved that O. had ever accepted T. as a co-tenant or recognized his alleged partnership with D., he was entitled to the order applied for; reserving to T. the right to bring an action for damages for eviction, if so advised.

This was an application, upon notice, calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not deliver up to applicant, or his nominee (Boffy), certain licensed premises known as the Royal Hotel, Wynberg.

A number of affidavits were read, from which it appeared that respondent refused to vacate the premises on the ground that he had a right to remain in possession under his alleged partnership with one Dickson (the late tenant), whose estate had been sequestrated. Applicant admitted that Dickson had been tenant of the hotel under a lease which had been assigned to him, but he denied that he had ever recognised respondent as having any interest in the lease, although he had seen him (Turnbull) at the hotel acting as manager, or in some similar capacity. Applicant said that the lease was put an end to by the insolvency of Dickson, and that he had now leased the house to one Boffy.

Mr. Upington was for applicant (Anders Ohlsson); Mr. Burton was for respondent (James Turnbull).

Counsel having been heard in argument chiefly on the facts,

Hopley, J.: This is an application on notice calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to deliver up possession of the Royal Hotel, Wynberg, and the keys thereof to Anders Ohlsson, the landlord, or his nominee, and considerable conflict of evidence arises upon the affidavits which have been filed, upon which conflict the respondent argues that it is impossible, or, at all events, dangerous or inequitable, for the Court to order any ejectment of the respondent. Now, as a rule, of course, the Court does not, in case of conflict of testimony, order a man in possession of property to quit such possession at the suit of any applicant when there is, as I say, great conflict of testimony, which the Court cannot decide, but in the present instance the first question that arises is whether the respondent is actually in legal possession at the present moment of the lease of this hotel. There is no doubt that he has been there for some years, for four years, I think, and that he has been, in conjunction with one Dickson, managing the place, and there is no doubt upon the papers which have been submitted to me that people, including the applicant in this case, have known that he was there working in connection with Dickson in some sort of way as Dickson's partner. Does it, however, follow from such contract, from such knowledge, that Ohlsson knew that there was anything in the nature of a purchase by the respondent of a share in this lease? The lease clearly says that it should be in writing if there be any assignment or dealing with the rights under the lease. The onus of proving that there was such a partnership as this, the onus of proving that there was such an assignment as this from Dickson to the respondent, and the onus of proving the acceptance of such an assignment by the landlord, all seem to me to lie on the respondent in this case. The fact of his presence does not seem to me to raise any presumption in his favour, because, first of all, the lease had been assigned from one Ricci to

Dickson and Pentelow, and it is acknowledged that Pentelow has, with the landlord's consent, left the partnership, so that, with the landlord's consent, Dickson was left in sole occupation of the place. It does not seem to me that the fact that Pentelow was leaving has not been chronicled on the face of the lease is of any importance, certainly not of as much importance as the omission to put upon it a new person having rights under the lease. A man goes away from the lease, and it is not necessary to chronicle upon it that a person, who is his partner, remains in sole occupation. That person is allowed to go away, and probably there are other documents to show that he is released. But for a new person to come in, in face of the stringent terms of the lease, seems to me to want a considerable amount of proof before such a thing could be accepted as having taken place. It is difficult to conceive that the respondent did, in 1902, simply relying upon the word of Mr. Bultitude, who certainly is the manager of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, but who could not possibly have authorised any assignment on the part of the landlord, Mr. Ohlsson himself; it is difficult to believe that the respondent, simply relying upon Bultitude's word, casually given, that he would be accepted by Mr. Ohlsson, was induced to part with so large a sum as £4,000 for the purpose of joining in this lease. It is still more difficult to imagine that if he did part with so much money, he did not see that it was put into writing. He did not get the consent in writing of Mr. Ohlsson, nor does he in any interview with Mr. Ohlsson himself, for a couple of years after he has paid his money, and relied, as he says, simply upon the word of Mr. Bultitude. All these things make it very difficult, and there is a considerable conflict, but it is very hard in such a state of affairs to say that the respondent is in possession of the leasehold at the present moment. Taking the terms of the lease, I should say that the position would be, as far as one can see from the written documents, the person who is in possession of it is the insolvent. We know that he has gone insolvent; we know further that his trustee has abandoned that lease, and abandoned it, therefore, to the landlord, and therefore, one would say, on the legal state of facts the landlord has a right to get possession of this place. The respondent sets up rights there, and it appears to me that it is for him to prove, and the onus would be upon him to prove that he is there as of legal right in some way or other. I wish to express no opinion as to how the matter would stand if there were an action in this matter, but, upon the documents as they stand, the fact that there is nothing upon the lease showing any rights on the part of the respondent inclines me to believe that the legal position is that he has no rights whatsoever. There are documents produced by him certainly showing the course of trade with the breweries by a firm apparently of Dickson and Turnbull, but it does not follow by any manner of means that in recognising such a firm the breweries were at all thinking of or in any way contemplating the position with regard to who actually were the tenants under the lease. There are other documents, such as cheques and letters, signed in various ways Dickson and Turnbull, and sometimes by Turnbull alone, and some of them are sent to Mr. Ohlsson or his representative. They do not seem to me to prove that they necessarily drew the attention of the landlord to the fact that respondent was claiming any rights as being a participant in this lease. They are mostly payments by cheque, and it does not follow that, because such cheques were taken, the landlord necessarily looked upon Mr. Turnbull as being the lessee. I do not think anything of the sort follows. At the same time, inferences may be drawn, and these things might have considerable weight with the Court that eventually has to weigh the conflict of evidence that there undoubtedly would be. Another point is where does the balance of convenience lie in the present position? It would seem that the business has been brought to a standstill; there is a deadlock, because the respondent will not give up possession, and Mr. Turnbull has not got a licence to carry on the business. On the other hand, there is the lessee ready to carry on—the lessee recognised by the landlord—who has a licence to carry on the business, and it seems to me that it would be more convenient to put him into possession for the time until this matter can be decided, so that the business may be revived, and the loss may be minimised as much as it possibly can be. I should think, therefore, that the order the Court should make in the present instance is that the respondent do give up possession of this place forthwith, but that there be reserved to him the right to bring his action for damages, in which case the costs of this application may abide the result of such action, if brought, failing such action the respondent to pay the costs, this action not to be brought later than some time or other during next term. I may say I am influenced in this decision by the fact that I think the respondent, if left in possession, might possibly not be able to pay damages to the landlord for keeping him out of this place, whereas there is no doubt that the landlord in the present instance will be able to pay any damages that Mr. Turnbull may be able to prove in his action as having been incurred by him by having been unjustly ejected if he can prove such a thing when the action is brought.

Ex parte THE SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES.

Mr. Payne moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising petitioners to enforce their landlord's hypothec over certain premises in Plein-street, known as the Excelsior Bottle Store, of which Max Kussell was sub-tenant.

Order granted, restraining Kussell and all parties acting with him from removing any of the movables in the said premises, providing, however, that the manager in charge may carry on the business thereof, placing the receipts to a special account, pending result of an action for rent to be forthwith brought.

Hopley, J., requested the Registrar to make a note so that the attorney in the matter should not be allowed costs for attendance. He added that if the attorney knew this application was to be made as an urgent matter he might have had the courtesy to wait and give any information to counsel that might be required.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REHABILITATION.

In re PEREL. { 1906.
Sept. 14th.

Insolvency—Insolvent Ordinance, Sec. 117 — Creditors "in value."

A secured creditor, when a question of voting for the discharge of an insolvent under Sec. 117 of the Insolvent Ordinance arises, may only vote "in value" in respect of such portion of the debt due to him as is unsecured by lien or other security.

In re Findon (2 Searle 301) followed.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers mentioned the application of Isaac Perel for discharge from insolvency. The matter was standing over from Wednesday for a written statement from the Master of his objection to grant the certificate under section 117 of the Insolvency Ordinance.

The Master now reported that he declined to grant the certificate, on the ground that the insolvent had not obtained the consent of three-fifths in value of the creditors entitled to consent. In the reckoning, he had omitted the secured creditors, Lochner and Van der Hoff, who gave their consent to the rehabilitation. They proved for £150, being balance of purchase price of landed property, transfer of which had not yet been passed to the insolvent, and their claim was paid in full. Unsecured creditors received a dividend of about 1s. 4d. in the £. The practice in his office had been invariably to exclude, in reckoning votes, secured creditors and those creditors who had been paid in full, and there was no precedent where the Court had departed from this practice, which was based upon the decision that a secured creditor was entitled to be reckoned only on the value of his unsecured balance in regard to his consent in granting the certificate under section 117 of the Ordinance. (In re Findon 2, S. 301.)

Mr. De Villiers submitted that Lochner and Van der Hoff were not secured creditors. In Findon's case the secured creditor was secured by a mortgage bond, and it was clear that he had a preferable security. Here the trustee had an option, and he need not have paid at all. He paid voluntarily to get possession of the land. Counsel relied strongly on section 30 of the Ordinance. The words "preferable security or lien" should be used in strict legal meaning. Security meant a ius in re aliena and Lochner and Van der Hoff had no security over any part of the estate. The dominium of the land was still vested in the creditors. Section 103 expressly gave the trustee a right to obtain sales.

Buchanan, J.: Under the 117th section of the Ordinance an insolvent, if he obtain the consent of three-fifths of the creditors in number and value, may apply for his discharge. In this case the insolvent has not obtained, according to the Master's report, three-fifths in number and value of the creditors, unless among these creditors is included the claim of Lochner and Van der Hoff. The Supreme Court has held In re Findon that a secured creditor is entitled to be reckoned only for the unsecured balance, and the question is therefore, were Lochner and Van der Hoff secured creditors? The section says "any person who has any claim or lien." In this case Lochner and Van der Hoff had the best possible security for their claim, which security resulted in their being paid in full. They had sold certain property, but had not yet given transfer, and for the portion of the purchase price unpaid they were amply secured in not being bound to pass transfer unless this amount were paid. The trustee took possession of the property, and paid them in full. The Master is quite right in saying that the applicant has not obtained the consent of the required number of creditors. I think, on the decision referred to, the Master is quite right in refusing his certificate, and this application must be refused.

ENGELBRECHT V. RUSSOUW.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be directed to restore to the applicant quiet and peaceable possession of his property right up to the boundary laid down by Government surveyor A. Frieslich in 1875, to which applicant and his family had had undisputed right for the last 28 years, and also for an order restraining respondent from using violence or trespassing upon the land of applicant, and compelling him to institute an action in this court to establish his right, if any, to the said ground.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the parties are respectively owners of portions of the farm Ezelsfontein, division of Namaqualand. A partition was agreed upon between certain parties a good number of years ago. To that partition applicant's father and the present respondent were parties. A survey took place. Respondent said he was to receive 3,000 morgen of Ezelsfontein, and that he only received 2,641 morgen 430 square yards. Respondent at the time eventually acquiesced in the survey, though he said that he had to remonstrate with the conduct of the surveyor, who was frequently in drink, and under the influence of applicant's father. A subsequent survey was carried out by one Mr. C. L. Smuts. Respondent claimed that, on the strength of an error pointed out by Mr. Smuts, applicant moved a certain beacon, and he (respondent) took possession of the additional ground to which he was entitled. It transpired that there had been a good deal of bother between the parties, and that one of the respondent's sons had been fined at Springbokfontein for an assault upon the applicant arising out of the dispute. Furthermore, last year applicant commenced an action in the Supreme Court against respondent for a declaration of rights in respect of the farm, and summons was served on the respondent, but applicant did not proceed with his action. Applicant said he was unable to file his declaration within the time allowed by the rules of Court.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Watermeyer) was for applicant (Andries Francois Engelbrecht); Mr. Upington was for respondent (Gideon Joshua Russouw).

Mr. Burton said this application was for a writ of spoliation. All that the applicant had to show was, that he was in possession of the property, and had been forcibly ousted from the possession. Here the applicant had been in possession for 28 years, and all that the respondent could rely upon was an agreement to which he was no party. Counsel quoted the case of Rez v. Rossouw (15 C.T.R., 279).

Buchanan, J.: In this case a serious dispute exists between certain owners of the farm Ezelsfontein, division of Namaqualand, and it cannot possibly be settled on the application now before the Court. This motion before the Court is to compel the respondent to give up possession of certain land, and, further, that the respondent shall be ordered to bring an action to declare the rights of the parties. It appears that before 1875 the farm in question was held by three owners in undivided shares, together with other surrounding property. It is alleged that an agreement was then come to, that the respondent Russouw, who had a third share in the property, was to take a specific divided portion, and to have 3,000 morgen surveyed and transferred to him, and a surveyor, one Frieslich, was called in, and he made a diagram, which cut off 2,600 odd morgen, and though this did not give him the full amount, still the respondent accepted this sub-division and took transfer. Frieslich put up a beacon on this land, which beacon seems, as far as one can gather from the affidavits, to be on land claimed by the applicant. In 1904 the applicant, with a number of others, six in all, who were proprietors of undivided shares in the remaining extent of the farm, called in Mr. Surveyor Smuts to sub-divide the farm, as between themselves. Smuts made a survey for the purpose of this sub-division, and he found that, although Frieslich's diagram was in itself consistent and represented the acreage described, still the beacon put up by Frieslich cut off about 200 morgen of the land included in the diagram, and gave about 260 morgen more in the remaining extent than it ought to have contained. Smuts says he explained to the parties where the true beacon ought to be, according to Frieslich's diagram, and that the parties all agreed to the correct spot being adopted, so that the beacon was shifted to the correct spot in 1904, and respondent then came up to the new line, and has since then occupied the land up to the new line. Shortly afterwards the present applicant, who was one of the co-proprietors of the undivided, remaining extent, objected to this beacon being shifted, and in 1905 he instituted an action to have the rights of the parties declared. He did not proceed with his action, but now, in 1906, he comes to the Court with an application which is virtually an application for a writ of spoliation, and for an order to compel the respondent to commence an action to declare rights. The objection to an action for restitution is that in 1904, according to the affidavits filed in this case, the land in question was peaceably restored to the respondent, and he is in possession at the present time, and there has been no recent disturbance of possession. This, therefore, is not a case of spoliation. The respondent being in possession, there is no sufficient reason to order him to restore the land which he had obtained possession of two years ago, nor is there sufficient reason for ordering him to commence an action to declare any rights of the parties who own the undivided shares. He has his diagram, he has his transfer, and he has the word of two surveyors against the word of one surveyor that the land of which he is now in possession is included within his true boundary. Though I cannot say that the one surveyor is necessarily right, and that the two surveyors are necessarily wrong, in this case the application is not justified and it must be refused, with costs.

Counsel having been heard on the question of costs.

Buchanan, J.: I think that the proper course in this case would be application refused, with costs, with leave reserved to applicant, should he institute an action, to make a claim for costs incurred in these proceedings.

NEW CAPE CENTRAL RAILWAYS V. DOIDGE.

Mr. Upington moved for removal of the trial of this case to the ensuing Circuit Court, to be held at Riversdale. Counsel stated that respondent had instituted an action against applicants for £100 damages for flooding his premises from a culvert at Riversdale, constructed by the defendant company, for an order compelling defendants to remove the furrow and an interdict. Applicants said that the witnesses were resident at Riversdale, the suit was in the village of Riversdale, and an inspection by the Judge trying the case would lead to a great saving of evidence, such as would be necessary if the case were heard in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Watermeyer (for respondent) read an affidavit to the effect that he wished the action to be tried before a jury, and that it would not be possible for him to have the case heard before a jury if it were removed to the Circuit Court. Furthermore, he could not be ready for the ensuing Circuit Court.

Mr. Upington said that pleadings had been closed, and plaintiff had now no right to demand a jury trial. The balance of convenience was altogether in favour of trying the case at Riversdale.

Mr. Watermeyer said that the application was premature. The applicant had taken advantage of the rules of Court in order to bring the present application. Respondent had the right to choose his forum, and he had a right to demand a trial by jury. He would not be able to have the case heard before a jury if it were removed to the Circuit Court (Rule 41).

Buchanan, J.: Plaintiff has instituted an action in this court, and has filed his declaration and the plea was duly filed, plaintiff was barred from further pleading, and the pleadings have been closed. Application is made for removal of the trial to the Circuit Court at Riversdale. Not only the balance of convenience, but the whole circumstances of the case show that it would be far better to try this case at Riversdale. It is alleged also that the plaintiff intends to claim a jury. If he intended to claim a jury he should have done so within 48 hours after pleadings had been closed. He has not done so, and, therefore, he has lost his right. He could apply to the Court to grant him a jury, but he has not made that application. There has been no notice given that he intends to apply for a jury. The case will be removed for trial at the ensuing Circuit Court at Riversdale. If the plaintiff is not ready to go on with the case then, it will probably stand until the next Circuit Court. Case removed to Circuit Court at Riversdale, costs to be costs in the cause.

MATHEW V. WATKINS AND ANOTHER.

Pledge of movables — Traditio brevi manu.

This was an application upon notice to the respondents calling upon them to show cause why the applicant should not be allowed to take possession of certain furniture pledged to him by the first respondent in a certain letter, dated the 26th August, 1904, which the respondent's wife had been allowed to remove to a house at Plumstead, and for delivery of the said furniture, or, in the alternative, why he should not be restrained from selling or dealing with the said furniture, pending further order of Court.

Applicant's case was that the furniture was pledged to him by Horwood Watkins as security for his having guaranteed an overdraft to the bank.

The affidavit of Mrs. Horwood Watkins stated that she was married by ante-nuptial contract, that she bought the furniture in England, that the furniture was her own property absolutely, that she had never authorized her husband to pledge it, and that she knew nothing of the document of the 26th August, 1904, until recently. The respondent in his affidavit admitted that the applicant became guarantor for the overdraft, and said that he had made an offer to pay off the indebtedness at £10 a month, provided applicant would give him an account of the matters between them.

The replying affidavit of the applicant, stated that when the furniture was pledged, respondent held his wife's general power of attorney. It was only by his consent that the furniture was removed from Roubosch to Plumstead. Dependent added that he was prepared to accept £20 a month in discharge of the liability for the overdraft, subject to certain conditions.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant (A. H. Mathew); Mr. Burton was for respondent (Edgar Henry Horwood Watkins).

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: The respondent, Edgar Henry Horwood Watkins, obtained from the applicant, Mathew, a document guaranteeing an overdraft due by Watkins to the bank for £500, and to secure Mathew in giving him this guarantee, which seems to have been given without any consideration, he pledged to Mathew certain 23 cases of furniture by a written contract, in which he says: "I hereby hand over to him, the said Mathew, 23 cases of furniture." Watkins did not pay his overdraft to the bank, and Mathew was called upon to and has had to pay £500 to the bank, from whom he has taken cession of action. The applicant now calls upon Watkins to deliver up the furniture, which, in his good nature, he had allowed Watkins to remove from the place where it was stored at Roubosch to his house at Plumstead. Watkins and his wife now come forward and say: "This furniture is not Watkins's, but his wife's, and we are married by ante-nuptial contract." At the time the pledge took place, Watkins either was or was not authorised to pledge the furniture. He held his wife's power of attorney. If he were not authorised to pledge her furniture, it might almost be said that he committed a fraud on Mathew. That is, however, a matter I don't want to say anything upon at present. If Mrs. Watkins wishes to establish her claim to this furniture, she must do so in the future. As the case now stands, Watkins and his wife will be ordered to deliver up the furniture in question to the applicant, pending further order of Court, the respondent (Watkins) to pay costs of this application.

why a judgment granted by the Court on the 23rd August last for £22,000, together with a writ of execution and attachment, should not, as far as concerns any rentals payable by applicant company in respect of their tenancy, be discharged or qualified, or amended.

Mr. McGregor was for applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. De Waal), was for respondents.

Mr. McGregor said that the question in this case was whether or not the respondents were entitled to attach certain rents which were due by the applicants to one Cornelius Mostert, who was the owner of certain property situate at the corner of Longmarket-street and Plein-street, Cape Town, and of which the applicants were the lessees. It would appear from the affidavits that the applicants guaranteed payment of £1,000 owing by Mostert to Ohlsson, and they were to be repaid by every month being allowed the amount of £75 rental, plus £25 to be paid by Mostert. While the agreement was still in force, and there was still a sum of £375 due to the applicants by the landlord, the Gresham Co. obtained provisional sentence against Mostert on a mortgage bond, and the rents were declared executable.

Affidavits having been read,

Mr. Searle submitted that no arrangement could have been made in January, 1906, which would deprive the mortgagee of the fructus of the rent. He cited a number of authorities in support of this contention, though, he said that there was no direct case touching the point now raised. If such an application as this were granted, mortgagees would be placed in a most extraordinary position.

Without calling upon Mr. McGregor, Buchanan, J.: In this case Mostert mortgaged his property to the Gresham Life Assurance Company, for whom the South African Association are the agents. This mortgage was registered in 1904. Previous to this mortgage, Mostert had leased certain portion of his premises to the present applicants, Hepworths. The mortgage has now been called up, and provisional sentence has been granted upon it, and the property specially hypothecated has been declared executable, and also the rents of the property mortgaged. Insolvency has not yet intervened, and, consequently, the cases which have been referred to by learned counsel do not altogether apply to this case. When there is insolvency and a concurso creditorum, and when the debtor is deprived of the ownership of the property and it is vested in the trustee different considerations arise, especially as to the rights of preference of different creditors. Up to the present, however, the property is still vested in Mostert, the debtor, and the Association hold Mostert's power of attorney to collect the rents of his property, as well as the order attaching the rents. Until HEPWORTH'S, LTD. V. GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondents to show cause sequestration intervenes, only those rents can be paid under the power of attorney, which can be demandable by Mostert, and only such rents as are due to Mostert, who is the debtor in the original action, can be attached to pay his debts. In this case there are certain rents which were pledged to Mostert and have, in effect, been dealt with by him in a way equivalent to a payment in advance to Mostert of these rents. Mostert, being indebted to Ohlsson, induced the lessees, Hepworths, to guarantee Ohlsson £1,000 due to him, and agreed with them to deduct the payments to Ohlsson from the rents, which would become due by Hepworths to Mostert. This amount of rent of which Mostert had disposed himself, before the action was brought against him, can no longer be demanded by Mostert from Hepworths, and those rents are not able to be attached under a judgment of the Court as the property of Mostert. That is what the judgment of the Court comes to. It authorises the Sheriff to attach the property and the rents due thereon, which are the property of Mostert. These rents are not the property of Mostert, and cannot be demanded on his behalf. The Court will order that the order of Court attaching the rents of the property shall, so long as insolvency does not intervene, apply only to such rents as are payable by the tenants to the debtor. I think it was perhaps advisable, though I do not think absolutely necessary, for Hepworths to come into Court. They could have refused to pay any rents which are alleged to be due by them to Mostert. The respondents, if an act of insolvency has been committed by Mostert, can sequestrate his estate. If, however, they do not wish to sequestrate his estate they can test the value of their judgment by putting up the property mortgaged for sale in the way indicated by the previous judgments in this court. In this case, it would have to be put up for sale subject to the lease, which was entered into before the mortgage was passed. I quite agree with Mr Searle that a person who has once mortgaged his property cannot afterwards deal with that property in such a way as to prejudice the mortgagees, but that is not the present case; and should there be sequestration it may hereafter be a question whether or not the trustees would be entitled to claim from applicants any rents accruing after such sequestration. It is quite possible that when the property is put up for sale there may be ample not only to pay the debts due to the mortgagee, but also any other debts which have been incurred. As the matter stands at present, only the property of the debtor attachable will be affected by the order of Court. An order will be made accordingly, with costs.

ESTATE BLEIBERG AND OTHERS V. GREENBERG.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicants; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin said that an arrangement had been arrived at between his learned friend and himself, whereby all disputes between the parties would be referred to arbitration, subject to the approval of Court. He moved for an order by consent in the following terms: "That Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead be appointed with all powers under the Arbitration Act as referee to settle all disputes between the parties and their representatives arising out of the partnership of Bleiberg, Greenberg and Co., and all disputes between that firm and the firm of Bleiberg and Co.; the business of Bleiberg, Greenberg and Co. to be carried on pending settlement, the referee's award or further order of Court, by Greenberg under the supervision of Mr. Muirhead; banking account to be reopened in the name of the firm Bleiberg, Greenberg and Co., and all moneys (if any are standing in the private account of Greenberg, in the Bank of Africa, as shall be decided by the referee to be the firm's money) to be transferred thereto, and cheques on the said account to be countersigned by Mr. Muirhead, costs to be costs in the arbitration."

Mr. Jones (for respondents) acquiesced.

Order granted in terms of consent.

TOWN COUNCIL OF CAPE TOWN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT AND TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler as referee under the order of Court of the 23rd February last, in an action brought by the Town Council against the Colonial Government, and the Harbour Board regarding the expropriation of land at Fort Wynyard.

Mr. Searle said that the referee would no doubt bear in mind the directions given by the Chief Justice in his judgment, which was subsequently upheld on appeal.

Mr. Nightingale, on behalf of the Government, consented.

Order granted, appointing Mr. G. W. Steytler referee under order of Court of February 23, 1906, subject to the directions contained in the judgment of the Chief Justice, costs of reference to be referred to referee, and award to be made rule of Court.

Ex parte MEADE.

Mr. Close moved for transfer of certain articles of clerkship to the surviving partner in certain firm of attorneys at Umtata, of which the petitioner's late principal (Mr. J. C. Blakeway) was a member.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES, LTD.

Mr. Payne applied for an amendment of an order made by Mr. Justice Hopley on Thursday, in which an interdict was granted against Max Kussel, "and all parties acting for him." It was desired that the interdict should be against all other persons.

Buchanan, J., said that the order would be amended so as to restrain Kussel "or any other person."

Ex parte ATTWELL.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to issue execution against the insolvent estate of Jacobus Nicolaas Botha for the sum of £300, and for a temporary interdict restraining disposal of certain assets.

His Lordship declined to make an order.

In re REYNOLD'S VEHICLE AND HARNESS FACTORY (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Burton presented the first report of the official liquidators, and applied for the usual order.

Usual order granted as to lying for inspection.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. NGAMBU. { 1906.
REX V. MAFU. { Sept. 17th.
REX V. LONEY.

Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 75—Evidence.

Evidence as to a native having been found in possession of intoxicating liquor is not sufficient to support a conviction under Sec. 75 of Act 28 of 1883.

Buchanan, J.: Three cases have come in review from the Assistant Magistrate of Woodstock. In each case the accused was charged that, without a licence, he or she did sell, deal in, or dispose of or offer or expose for sale a quantity of intoxicating liquor. They all pleaded not guilty, but they were all convicted. From the records it would appear that outside the gates of the Ndabeni Location there are what the police call "smuggling dens," but what the accused call coffee-shops. There were a number of natives recently returned from German South-west Africa apparently with a considerable amount of money in their possession, who had come to town to get passes to return home, and after obtaining them they went out to the N'dabeni location. That day there was an extra amount of drinking and drunkenness going on around the gates of the location, and the police accused these three different sets of people of contravening the liquor licence Act as just set forth. In the first case all the police could say was this: "I saw the accused making for the 'smuggling dens.' He was carrying a bag over his shoulder, and I heard bottles rattling in it. I went towards the accused, and he threw down the bag and ran away. I ran after the accused, and subsequently caught him. I brought him to the spot where he threw down the bag. I found the bag contained six bottles of Cape beer (produced) and six broken beer bottles." This does not amount either to selling, dealing in, disposing of, exposing, or offering for sale intoxicating liquor. In the second and third cases the circumstances are much the same. A number of natives were seen coming out of the place wiping their mouths. The police in each instance saw a woman carrying a parcel entering the premises by the back door. On searching the house they found no other liquor than three bottles of brandy hidden in a mattress. Much as I regret having to quash the convictions, there is no actual evidence of the crime charged against the prisoners. The papers have been submitted to the Attorney-General, who is not prepared to support the convictions. The convictions will be quashed.

Ex parte ESTATE WRIGHT.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Pohl), moved for an order authorising the Master to convene a meeting of next-of-kin of the late George B. Wright, attorney, Graham's Town, to elect executors dativo. Counsel said that in the early part of this year curators bonis were appointed to Mr. Wright. Some little time afterwards he died, leaving a will without, however, appointing executors. Thereupon, the curators bonis proceeded to act as executors dativo, under section 41, of the Lunacy Act of 1897. One of the sons, who had been appointed a curator, had been unable to accept office, because he could not provide security. The curators had taken steps with a view of disposing of certain of the property, and the heirs, who were not represented, were afraid that valuable family heirlooms would be dispersed. The late Mr. Wright was not declared of unsound mind, but was declared unfit to manage his own affairs, having reached a great age. The Master had presented a report in which he took up the position that the curators were entitled under the Lunacy Act to act as executors dative.

Buchanan, J.: I think the parties are entitled to come before the Court. If this were a case in which there was no possibility of an executor being appointed, then the course indicated by the Lunacy Act might be followed, although it is not expressly applicable to this case, and the curators bonis might have continued the administration of the estate. But here the heirs are willing to have executors appointed, and the Court will authorise the Master to call a meeting of next-of-kin and creditors to appoint an executor or executors dative of the estate under Ordinance No. 104, costs to come out of the estate. Pending such appointment, the curators to be directed to stay further sale of any assets.

GELDERBLOM V. GELDERBLOM.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why a certain award of umpire in arbitration proceedings for the partition of certain three farms in the division of Riversdale should not be made rule of Court, with costs.

It appeared that two of the farms had been sub-divided by the arbitrators, and that they did not enter into the present matter. The umpire was called in to deal with the third farm owing to a dispute. Respondent objected to the award, on the ground that the farm in question, Rietvlei, was not divided in a fair and impartial manner, the umpire Daniel J. van Tonder having been unduly influenced by applicant and his arbitrator (D. C. Luyt). Respondent said that he was prepared to give £300 to the applicant if he would make an exchange of the ground. Applicant denied the allegations, and said that the umpire was not in any way influenced either by himself or his arbitrator. In support of this statement, affidavits by Mr. Luyt and Mr. Van Tonder were also read. Mr. Van Tonder said that he tried to make a fair and equitable division of the land. Replying affidavits by respondent and others were read, repeating the allegations as to undue influence having been brought to bear upon the umpire and as to the sub-division being unfair.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant (Isak Johannes Gelderblom); Mr. Upington was for respondent (Christian Johannes Gelderblom).

Mr. Upington submitted that the award, on the face of it, could not stand. The award was wrongly dated the 4th March, instead of the 4th April. It was clear that the sub-division had been quite partial. The ground ought to have been fairly and equally divided up. That that was not the case was admitted by Van Tonder himself, who said that the applicant had made the part which he had awarded so much more valuable by his own industry. The applicant had, as a matter of fact, been given credit for industry which had been shown, not by himself, but by the old people.

Buchanan, J.: This is an application to make an award of arbitrators a Rule of Court. Applicant and respondent were owners in undivided shares of three farms in the division of Riversdale. They wished to have these shares divided, so that each share should be apportioned, and for that purpose they appointed two arbitrators (Luyt and Van Wyk) and an umpire (Van Tonder) to sub-divide the farms. The arbitrators agreed as to the division of two of the farms, but they could not agree as to the division of the third farm, Rietvlei, whereupon Van Tonder was called in, and he had made an award dividing the third farm between applicant and respondent. To this division respondent now objects. He objects to the award on three grounds. The first is an objection taken on the face of the award. By the deed of submission, which is dated the 8th March, the division had to be completed within one month. The umpire visited the place at the beginning of April, and on the 4th April he made his award between the parties within the month, but, through an inadvertence, when signing the award, he affixed the date of the 4th March, instead of the 4th April. If this clerical error was in any sense material something might be said for having it corrected, but I think it would be absurd to say that the award is altogether invalid, simply because the umpire made such an error. It is not material in any way to the division between the parties. The second objection is that the umpire went on a wrong basis. On this farm Rietvlei there were extensive cultivated lands, gardens, and fencing, and the umpire said he found that the portion which had been occupied by the applicant was much better cultivated than the portion which had been occupied by the respondent, and he gave the applicant the benefit of his previous industry and the previous improvements made by him. This, on the face of it, seems a proper course to follow, and standing alone is not a ground for setting aside the award. But the respondent says that the ground awarded to the applicant is worth to him £300 more than the ground awarded to him (the respondent). I see that the umpire directs that the applicant should pay to the respondent the sum of £30 for their difference in value. This stands very much in the same position as if the award were a judgment in an action brought in the Court. The Court, as a rule, does not satisfy both parties by its judgment, but that is not ground for saying that the judgment is necessarily wrong. The third objection is that the umpire displayed partiality and prejudiced the case. I think this is a very serious charge, and would go to the root of the award. But on the affidavits I must find that it is not substantiated. Van Tonder was the umpire proposed by the respondent, and accepted by the applicant, and was a man in whom the respondent had full confidence before the award was made. The umpire does not seem to have been influenced by either the applicant's arbitrator or the respondent's arbitrator. He went on the ground himself, and used his own judgment, and in using his own judgment, gave a decision in which he differed from both the arbitrators. It is quite possible one party may not be satisfied with the division, but that is not a ground for setting aside the award. The award will be made a Rule of Court, and as both parties are liable for the costs of making the award a Rule of Court, no order will be made as to costs.

Articled clerk—Breach of service —Matriculation.

The Court granted two months' leave of absence to an articled clerk to enable him to prepare for the matriculation examination, on condition that he should serve an additional four months after the expiration of articles.

Mr. Pohl moved for leave to petitioner for absence from his articles of clerkship for two months, to enable him to prosecute his studies for matriculation examination.

(Buchanan, J.: Another boy that wants to go back to school.)

Mr. Douglas Buchanan (for the Incorporated Law Society) briefly laid their views before the Court, and called attention to a circular which they had sent out, urging that clerks should not be articled unless they had passed their matriculation examination. The society asked for a ruling of the Court.

Buchanan, J.: The Court will allow a break in the articles for two months, on condition that an additional four months be served at the expiration of the articles. It should be understood that this is only allowed as a matter of indulgence. I must say that, personally, I am strongly against persons who have not matriculated coming to the Court and asking for their articles to be broken for the purpose of going back to school, for that is what it amounts to.

Mr. Buchanan: Will your lordship give any direction in regard to future applications?

Buchanan, J.: I can only express my own opinion very strongly. If this thing is to go, the only way is to alter the Rules of Court. I do not like these constant breaks of service.

Ex parte BISSEKER.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of John Bisseker, as chairman of the "East London Daily News" printing and Publishing Company, Ltd., for a winding-up order under the Companies Act. Petitioner said that the company was duly registered under the Companies Act, and carried on business at East London. The nominal capital was £25,000, of which 12,000 shares had been issued. On May 30 last petitioner was elected a director of the company, and thereafter he was elected chairman. On taking office he found that the company was financially embarrassed through calls on shares not being paid, and outstanding accounts. The assets of the company far exceeded the liabilities thereof. There was now an amount due to creditors of, approximately, £5,000, and the assets of the company stood in the books at £9,000. It was decided, at a meeting of the shareholders, that debentures should be called for £5,000 in order to pay off existing liabilities, the issue of such debentures to be made conditional on the whole sum of £5,000 being subscribed. Of this sum, up to August 31, only £4,000 had been subscribed. At a general meeting on that date it was resolved that application should be made by the Board to the Court for the company to be wound up under official liquidation. At a further meeting on September 14 this resolution was confirmed. Petitioner now made application accordingly, and prayed for the appointment of Mr. J. E. P. Close, accountant, of Cape Town, who had been nominated by Messrs. Wiener and Co as official liquidator, and that there should be joined with him, as co-liquidators, Mr. Herbert J. R. Pope, in his capacity as secretary of the East London Board of Executors, and Mr. Chas. A. Odum. Petitioner said that there would be considerable litigation in collecting the various calls still unpaid, there were several accounts in dispute, and there was still a claim that the company had against the Northern Press, Ltd., South Shields, England. The details of these matters were well known to Mr. Odium. Counsel added that the prayer was that the liquidators should be vested with the powers under the 149th and 151st sections of the Act 25, 1892.

Ordered that the company be wound up under the Companies Act, and Messrs. Close, Pope, and Odium be appointed to act as liquidators, and rule to issue calling upon all persons interested to show cause on October 18 why the persons named should not be appointed official liquidators, with powers under the 149th and 151st sections of the Act, rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette," "Cape Times," and "East London Dispatch."

Ex parte ESTATE JAVA.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain landed property at Somerset West Strand in the estate of petitioner's father, of which estate petitioner is executor.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte OOSTHUYSEN.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the appointment of a curator bonis to the petitioner's daughter, who had inherited certain property in the estate of her late father.

The Assistant R.M. of Lady Grey was appointed curator ad litem, on whom the summons is to be served, as well as on the defendant, curator to report to the Court, evidence as to the condition of the alleged lunatic and the position of her estate to be embodied in affidavits, and summons returnable on the 18th October.

Ex parte BEREND.

Mr. Long moved, on the petition of Katrina Berend, a Griqua living at Kokstad, for leave to raise a loan on or sell certain property which she acquired subsequently to having been deserted by her husband. She desired power to execute the necessary documents without the assistance of her husband.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE WILLS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary of estate John Richard Wills, for leave to hypothecate certain property, to enable petitioners to pay certain proceeds of life insurance policy to the surviving spouse. The proceeds had been erroneously applied to the estate owing to a settlement under the ante-nuptial contract having been overlooked.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LIQUIDATOR, WESTERN PROVINCE BANK.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising petitioner to distribute the balance after paying expenses of certain sum of £208 received as dividend from an insolvent estate at Pretoria.

Order granted, as prayed.

Ex parte OSBURN BROS.

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising registration of certain transfer of land at Plumstead. Petitioners said that the party from whom they bought had left the Colony without having granted power of attorney to pass transfer.

Buchanan, J., said he thought it would be much better to proceed under the Derelict Lands Act. The matter should go through the chamber book. No order on the present application.

Ex parte PITERS AND WIFE.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to petitioners to sell certain life policy to creditors, in order to pay debts due. The policy had been passed in favour of the wife and children of the first-named applicant. The wife and the major children consented to the application.

Leave granted to sell the policy.

Ex parte ROOS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Jan Roos, for a rule nisi restraining and interdicting one E. Ingle, an adjoining occupier, from trespassing on the farm Steenbras, division of Caledon, hired by petitioner. It was stated that respondent claimed to have leased the farm hired by Roos, and that he had endeavoured to, and had, exercised certain rights of occupation.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as a temporary interdict, restraining E. Ingle from trespassing on the farm hired to applicant by Mr. Struben, rule returnable on October 15.

Ex parte HART.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Cyril Wm. Elliott, attorney, Cathcart, as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of one Smith, against which petitioner was a creditor.

Mr. Elliott was appointed provisional trustee, with the powers prayed, leave being given to telegraph the order.

Ex parte MCGREGOR.

Mr. Gutche moved for amendment of a certain order of court under the Derelict Lands Act, in which the extent of the ground was erroneously described.

Order amended accordingly.

LESTER V. LESTER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for extension of return day in a certain application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation. It was stated that the respondent had not yet been served. He had been living in Christchurch, New Zealand.

Return day extended until February 1, 1907, service as before.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MCALLUM V. TAXING OFFICER, SUPREME COURT AND LIQUIDATORS, B.S.A. AS-PHALT CO., LTD. 1906. Sept. 20th.

Costs — Attorney and client — Taxing officer.

C. had been engaged by A., the managing director of a certain company, as attorney to the company, then in process of liquidation on the petition of certain creditors. The Court, in granting the order for liquidation, directed that all costs of opposition thereto, together with costs of the application, should be paid out of the liquidation. C. taxed his bill as against A., who endeavoured to recover from the liquidators: but the Court held that, in view of its former order, A. had no locus standi, and that C.'s bill should be taxed as against the liquidators. Certain of C.'s attorney and client fees were claimed in respect of ordinary work done in connection with the liquidation, and others as extra fees for work done at late hours, costs of typing, &c.

Held, on review of the Taxing Officer's award, that the ordinary fees were chargeable to the liquidators, but that A. was personally responsible for all extra fees incurred without special authority.

This was an application upon notice to respondents to show cause why the taxation by the Taxing Officer of certain bills of costs as between attorney and client due by the B.S.A. Asphalt Co. to applicant, and payable as a concurrent claim, should not be reviewed in reference to certain items set out under three heads.

Mr. Russell was for applicant; Mr. Molteno was for respondents.

Mr. Russell said that applicant had acted as attorney to Mr. Andrew Allan, who was managing director of the B.S.A. Co. The items falling under the first head had been taxed off the original party and party bill, and they were afterwards brought up in an attorney and client bill. There were two taxations as between attorney and client. At the first the managing director of the company (Mr. Allan) was present, but the liquidators were not present. At the second taxation the liquidators were present, as well as Mr. Allan, and the items were then disallowed. The second section consisted of an item of £1 ls., fee for typist, which the applicant said was specifically authorised. The third section of items were not in the original party and party bill. These items were brought up in an attorney and client bill. With one exception, they were allowed at the first taxation, and all the items were disallowed at the second taxation.

Mr. Molteno said that originally there was an application for the sequestration of the company, and the bill of costs was taxed at the time. The costs between party and party were taxed, and nothing more was heard of the matter until, about two months ago, an application was made to the Court by Allan, who practically applied on behalf of McCallum, for these costs between attorney and client. The applicant had had two bills taxed and allowed, at £84 party and party and £108 attorney and client. The latter bill originally amounted to £127, and it was this bill which formed the subject matter of the present proceedings.

[Buchanan, J.: I suppose when the company was placed in liquidation, the applicant's costs were ordered to be paid by the company?]

Mr. Molteno: They were. I think the order was costs to be costs in liquidation.

Buchanan, J.: The costs of the application and opposition?]

Mr. Molteno: Yes. About two months ago Allan applied for costs between attorney and client. (See 16 C.T.R. 664.)

[Buchanan, J.: That would be the costs between respondent and attorney?]

Mr. Molteno: Yes. The application came before the Chief Justice, who held that Allan had no locus standi, and it was then stated by counsel that Allan having guaranteed payment when he employed McCallum, was attempting to obtain from the company the costs which he had been charged by Allan. The Court indicated that the matter should go before the Taxing Officer, and he should accept the costs as between attorney and client.

Affidavits in support of counsels' statements having been read on both sides, and counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: As a rule, the Court will not interfere with the Taxing Officer's discretion as to items of attendance, and things of that kind which the Taxing Officer is supposed to inquire into judicially, and is supposed to have proved before him. As a rule, in reviewing the Taxing Officer's taxation, the Court endeavours to keep to general principles which should guide the Taxing Officer. The applicant, Mr. McCallum, was originally engaged by the managing director of the B.S.A. Asphalt Company to act on behalf of the company. Certain creditors and others took up an antagonistic position, and applied for the liquidation of the company. The company, as represented by the managing director, opposed the application, and though the application was granted, the Court ordered that all costs of opposition to the company being placed under liquidation should with costs of the application be paid out of the liquidation. Mr Allan, as being liable to the attorney, endeavoured to recover the costs from the liquidators, but the Court intimated that Allan had no locus standi, that the attorney should have his bill taxed as against the liquidators, and that whatever he taxed against them should be costs in liquidation. The Taxing Master, on going through the account, which was taxed as against Allan, allowed a certain number of items, amounting in all to £12 2s. These items, however, when he came to tax the account between the attorney and the liquidator, he taxed off. These items, amounting to £12 2s., the attorney now brings in review. A general principle may be applied to each of the two classes into which these items may be divided, which, I think, will decide whether they ought to be allowed or not. As to the first class of items, the test to be applied is, whether or not these costs were incurred in connection with the application for liquidation. That the attorney had done the work and was entitled to be paid for doing it is shown by the fact that the Taxing Officer did allow them to the attorney when the bill of costs was first placed before him, when taxing the bill of costs as between the attorney and Allan. The only question is, are these items to be charged against Allan personally, or against the liquidation? Now, looking at the items objected to here, I think that all these items are items connected with the liquidation, and, therefore, ought to be allowed against the liquidation. The second class of items are charged as extra fees, and special fees. There is an extra fee paid to the typist, an extra fee paid to the attorney on account of petition being drawn after office hours, and then special fee for work done at late hours, and the Taxing Officer in the first taxation made these depend on the certificate of the managing director. The Taxing Officer said that the attorney may be entitled to these items, but it is a matter which would require to be certified by the managing director before he could allow them as against him. As a general rule, if a client allows an attorney excess fees, those items are not chargeable as against the other party, and I think the Taxing Officer was correct in refusing to allow these items against the liquidation. These special fees together with an item of 6s. 8d. taxed off the full bill of costs amount to a sum of £8 1s. 8d. Taking that off £12 2s., it leaves a sum of only £4 0s. 4d. It is a pity that this small matter should have engaged the time of the Court. But a person is entitled to have what is due to him, and, though the amount is small, the only way of obtaining it was by way of review of the taxation court. The Court will allow the sum of £4 0s. 4d., with costs, but will limit the costs to the hearing, the notice of motion, and the first affidavit only. Subsequent affidavits need not have been filed.

Ex parte McCALLUM.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for a winding-up order against the Cape Minerals, Ltd., under the Companies Act of 1892. Petitioner said that the company was registered for the purpose of prospecting for precious stones and minerals throughout the Colony, with a nominal capital of £1,000. It had only been in existence since March last. Petitioner acted for the company, and had obtained judgment in this Court for £25 odd for professional services. All the directors of the company had resigned. Execution had been taken out under the judgment, and a return of nulla bona had been made.

The Court ordered that the company be placed in liquidation, and that Mr. McCallum be appointed to act as liquidator, and rule nisi to issue, returnable on the 18th October, calling upon all persons interested to show cause why the applicant should not be appointed official liquidator, with powers under the 149th section of the Companies Act, rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and "Cape Times."

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Ex parte VILJOEN. { 1906.
Sept. 24th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of Willem Viljoen, of the Orange River Colony, in his capacity as sole trustee of the insolvent estate of one Van der Walt, for an order confirming and recognising his appointment so as to enable him to administer certain assets in the estate situate in the Cape Colony. Petitioner said he had discovered that the insolvent was owner of certain movable and immovable property at Jamestown, Cape Colony, of the value of £20 and £80. By virtue of his appointment petitioner was vested with the title to the assets in the Cape Colony, and entitled to administer the same. Counsel relied upon In re Motam (22 Supreme Court Reports) as authority for the application.

[Buchanan, J.: It would have been as well to have had a request from the High Court of the O.R.C.; it would have made the thing much more simple.]

Mr. Buchanan: It would still have been necessary for the trustee to apply to this Court.

Buchanan, J.: If you have a request, then you act under statute. During the last session of Parliament they tried to provide for cases of this kind. It would be better if there is a request in future, because there is the Imperial Statute which would govern the application, and you would have something to go on. An order will be granted similar to that in the case of Motam, returnable on November 1.

Ex parte SECCOMBE.

Mr. Alexander moved, on the petition of William Thomas Thorne Seccombe, of Cape Town, for a winding-up order under the Companies Act, against the Assets Realisation Association, Limited. Petitioner stated that he was the registered holder of one fully-paid-up share of the face value of £1 in the Assets Realisation Association, Limited, a company duly registered on March 1, 1906, in terms of the Companies Act, No. 25, 1892, with a nominal capital of £5,000, divided into 5,000 shares of £1 each. The names of the subscribers to the memorandum and articles of association were: (1) H. H. Drummond, (2) Charles W. McDowell, (3) J. H. Martyn, (4) John Perry, (5) G. Williams, (6) W. T. Seccombe (petitioner), (7) C. A. Mackintosh, and (8) Mrs. E. H. Drummond. No. 1 was incarcerated; No. 2 was not a fit and proper person to be allowed to continue the business of the company; Nos. 3 and 4 had left Cape Town, and their whereabouts were unknown; No. 5 stated that he had no knowledge of the company's affairs; No. 7 was the former office boy in the company's employ, and was aged about 11 years, and No. 8 was the reputed wife of the said Drummond. No other shares had been issued or allotted, neither had any meeting of subscribers been called or held, nor had any officers been appointed to act for the company. One Hilyard Home Drummond, the promoter of the company, in his assumed capacity as general manager or managing director, had carried on business in the name of the company on his own account, taking securities, obtaining credit, and incurring liabilities in the name of the company to a very considerable extent, and had exploited a banking account also for such association in the name of the company, upon which he had drawn for his personal expenditure, including his hotel bills. On Tuesday last, the 18th inst., the said Drummond was arrested on a charge of theft by conversion of the sum of £210 from one Webster, this person being introduced to the association by the aforesaid McDowell, who had assisted the said Drummond in the management of the business from the commencement. The said Drummond was now incarcerated in Roeland-street Prison. There was, therefore, no fit and proper person to continue or conduct the business of the company. In or about the end of August last the Atlas Printing Company obtained a judgment against the said company for £16 odd and costs. Execution was subsequently issued, and was held over for about a week, until on or about the 10th September, when the movable property of the company was removed by the messenger of the Court. The association was indebted (amongst others) to a large number of persons, in respect of accounts collected for them, and such debts were being paid in many instances by way of instalments. There were assets belonging to the company which required to be protected for the benefit of the creditors and subscribers, as the business, as it now stood, was fast being reduced to a state of ruin. The association was practically a bogus company, and such business had been carried on by the said Drummond fraudulently and for his own benefit, and it was urgently necessary for their lordships to appoint liquidators to wind up the affairs of the company. Petitioner urged that it was just and equitable in the interests of the subscribers and creditors that the affairs of the company should be wound up by order of the Court. He prayed that the Court would appoint Messrs. Wyndham Bishop and Theodore Alfred Lougher, accountants, Cape Town, as joint liquidators. Counsel added that the application was brought under section 135 of the Companies Act.

[Buchanan, J.: This bogus company has been in court, and acting in the way it did, it was disgraceful.]

Mr. Alexander said that all the shareholders were away, and the managing director was in prison. Accounts were due in instalments payable at the office, and nobody was there to receive the money.

Buchanan, J.: Can we treat this seriously as a company.]

Mr. Alexander: I submit that we must; it is a legally registered company.

[Buchanan, J.: Petitioner is not a creditor?]

Mr. Alexander: He is one of the shareholders.

[Buchanan, J.: Party to a bogus company.]

Mr. Alexander: Apparently the managing director has been using the company for his own ends. Petitioner does not say that it was started with that idea. It is to protect him and the other creditors that we have come into court.

[Buihanan, J.: It is a bogus thing all the way through. Only the other day an action was before me in which this company was concerned; it is perfectly disgraceful.]

An order was granted placing the company under liquidation, and appointing Messrs. Bishop and Lougher to act as official liquidators, with powers under the 149th section of the Act, and rule nisi to issue, returnable on the 18th October, calling upon all persons interested to show cause why the persons named should not be appointed official liquidators, with power to wind up the company, rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and "Cape Times."

MATHEW V. WATKINS AND ANOTHER.

This was an application ex parte calling upon the respondents to show cause why the order granted by the Court on the 14th September should not, in terms of section 26 of Act 35, 1886, be carried into execution upon such terms as the Court may deem proper, and why respondents should not pay costs.

Mr. Benjamin (for Alfred H. Mathew, the applicant) read an affidavit by Mr. Buissinne, attorney, who said that an order had been granted by the Court requiring respondents to deliver up possession of certain furniture pledged to him. Compliance with the order not having been made, application had been made to the Registrar for a writ, but he declined to sign the same, saying that an appeal had been noted. No written notice of such appeal had been served upon applicant.

Execution granted on the order of Court, notwithstanding appeal being noted, with costs against both respondents.

REX V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Upington moved for an extension of time within which to prosecute a criminal appeal. Counsel said that the application was rendered necessary by the fact that the period of 41 days would have elapsed before the first day on which the appeal could be set down, viz., the 15th October. The Attorney-General raised no objection to the appeal being set down for the 22nd October.

Leave granted as prayed.

GLYNN V. THERON.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of James A. Glynn, shipping agent, Cape Town, for an order for the attachment of a certain inheritance falling due to respondent. Petitioner said that he had a claim against respondent, Pieter Nicholas Theron, for £19 17s., for rent of a stable and goods supplied, and he had obtained judgment in the Magistrate's Court, Woodstock. Theron had made no efforts to satisfy the said judgment. Under the will of his mother respondent would be entitled to certain funds, and petitioner prayed for an order for the attachment of his inheritance, and an interdict against the executors restraining them from paying over to respondent any moneys whatsoever until petitioner's claim for £19 17s. with taxed costs shall have been paid. Counsel added that the matter had previously been before Mr. Justice Hopley, but at that time there was no judgment, and now judgment had been taken and an execution issued.

Buchanan, J.: An idea seems to have sprung up that you can always go and attach property as soon as you have a debt against a man. Here you have a judgment and an execution. An attachment will be ordered as prayed, with costs, with leave reserved to defendant, if so advised, to move to set aside the order.

Vagrancy—Ejectionment.

Certain natives who had for some time resided on a Mission Station had misconducted themselves, and at the instigation of the missionary were charged and convicted under the Vagrancy Act.

Held, that the Act did not apply and that the missionary should sue for ejectionment. Conviction quashed.

Buchanan, J.: A case has come from the Magistrate's Court at Ladismith, in which four persons, coloured labourers, were charged with contravening the Vagrancy Act in being wrongfully and unlawfully found, without permission of the owner, upon the Amalienstein Mission Station. Prisoners pleaded guilty, but when we look at the evidence we find that these four persons were residents at Amalienstein before the present missionary came. The missionary had some difficulty with the men, and he threatened to summon them, but, upon their promising amendment, he withdrew the charge. He again had difficulty, and complains that these persons make his life absolutely a burden to him by their conduct, and that their example is injurious to the other members of the community. They were tried and convicted and sentenced to imprisonment under the Vagrancy Act. Now, the charge brought against them is evidently intended to be one of ejectionment, to remove them from the mission station. A vagrant is generally described as one who wanders abroad having no visible means of support. Now this is applying the Vagrancy Act to a purpose for which it was never intended. These parties are not vagrants; they reside at the mission station. If the missionary wishes to eject them he must take proper steps. The conviction will be quashed.

REX V. SWAARTBOOI.

Stock theft—Failure to pay fine—Additional term of imprisonment—Hard labour.

Act 7 of 1905, Sec. 4, authorizes an additional term of imprisonment in the case of a person who has been convicted of stock-theft, but does not sanction the imposition of hard labour during such additional term.

Buchanan, J.: This is a case from the Magistrate's Court at Beaufort West. The charge against the prisoner is that of stock theft. The Magistrate sentenced him to 12 months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and to pay £3 10s., or undergo additional imprisonment, with hard labour, for three months. This additional imprisonment is authorised by the Act of last year. In that Act authority was given to the Magistrates to sentence prisoners who did not pay their fine to an additional term of imprisonment, but they were not authorised to add hard labour. An Act was introduced into Parliament this year for the purpose of enabling hard labour to be imposed in such cases, but that Act did not become law, and until it does become law the Magistrates cannot act upon it. The words "with hard labour" after "additional imprisonment" must be omitted from the record, and, so amended, the sentence will be confirmed.

ADMISSION.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of John Richard Black as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Ex parte THE SOUTH AFRICAN WIDOWS' FUND SOCIETY.

Mr. Molteno said that in the rule nisi which had been published in connection with this matter it was omitted to state that Mr. J. E. P. Cloos had been appointed, subject to approval, to distribute the funds. Application was now made for an amendment of the order.

Buchanan, J.: The rule nisi was made absolute, but in the Master's report he recommended that the liquidation and distribution be authorised as requested, and that Mr. Close be appointed liquidator, and that additional power was not asked for. The Court will now order that Mr. J. E. P. Close be appointed liquidator to carry out the order of the Court.

 { Sept. 28th.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of J. C. Fraser, in his capacity as liquidator of Wood and Williams, Ltd., for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of certain persons in reference to the business.

Petitioner said that, by a special resolution passed on the 20th August last, and confirmed on the 18th September, the shareholders resolved that the company be wound up voluntarily, and that petitioner be appointed liquidator. One James Edwin Williams, chairman of directors, had charge of the financial affairs of the company. Since the passing of the resolution aforesaid petitioner had appointed Alfred T. Hennessy, accountant, Cape Town, to make up a statement of the company's affairs. The said Hennessy had stated that it was necessary in order to prepare such statement that the said Williams should attend at the company's offices and give him information on matters of detail connected with the transactions of the company. There was also missing from the offices a certain stock-book required for the purposes aforesaid, and which there was reason to believe was in the possession of the said Williams. Deponent went on to describe the efforts which had been made by the accountant to obtain an interview with the chairman of directors. It appeared that certain of the company's officers had been examined by the accountant, and that Mr. Williams had objected to this, and refused to give any information until the return of the petitioner, who, however, pointed out that he had left his power of attorney with the accountant. Mr. Fraser added that it was desired that the liquidation of the company should be completed as early as possible, and the action of the said Williams was vexatiously delaying the same. There were many transactions of the company which required further information, as the evidence given by various officers and servants of the company was contradictory on a number of important points, and a large and, at present, unaccountable, deficiency had occurred in the trading of the company for the past year. Petitioner stated that the business was so interwoven with the business of two other companies, viz., Wood, Williams and Co., Ltd., and A. J. Coleman and Co., Ltd., that it was necessary to refer to the books in the possession of the other companies. He prayed for the appointment of a commission to examine James Edwin Williams, Wm. Francis Wood, and Wm. Seals Wood, directors of the company; George Kerr Sloan, the secretary; David Stephen, auditor; Gustav Hermann Rubinstein (representing the principal creditor); Wm. S. Brown, accountant (manager of the accountancy business of A. T. Hennessy) and the Cape Town agent of Mr. J. B. Robinson; and certain other persons whom it may be desired to call. Counsel added that the application was made under the 186th section of the Companies Act, 1892. It was desired that Mr. E. R. Syfret should be appointed Commissioner. He understood that the work would involve the examination of very complicated accounts.

[Buchanan, J.: You ought to state the name of Mr. Robinson's agent.]

Mr. Benjamin: I am informed that his name is Mr. Colvin. Will your lordship order a general commission?

[Buchanan, J.: No. I think you will have to come to the Court again if you want to examine other persons. I cannot give you a roving commission.]

Order granted as prayed in the last portion of the petition. Mr. E. R. Syfret to be commissioner to examine the persons named, costs to be costs in the liquidation.

Ex parte WOLFE.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of A. W. Wolfe, in his capacity as curator bonis of the estate of James Hy. McKillop, for his release from office. McKillop, it appeared, had been personally discharged from curatorship, but his estate was left under curatorship, being in an embarrassed condition at the time.

Petitioner, who had been acting in the interests of Mrs. McKillop, said that he had kept the estate out of the Bankruptcy Court, and he had filed his account, supported by proper vouchers.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for McKillop) said that he consented to the application, subject to his client being re-vested with the administration of his estate.

[Buchanan, J.: That will follow.]

Mr. Buchanan: The applicant does not ask for it in the petition, and we want to make it secure.

Order granted in terms of prayer of petitioner, Mr. McKillop to be re-vested with the administration of his estate, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte TRUSTEES, INSOLVENT ESTATE
SHUTTE.

Mr. Long moved, on the petition of Hy. de Luke Vis and Jacobus P. Viljoen, in their capacity as trustees in the insolvent estate of Walter Percy Shutte, lately an hotel proprietor, of Prieska, for the appointment of a commission to examine certain persons with respect to a sum of £1,150, proceeds of a bond, which had come into the possession of insolvent. Insolvent, petitioners stated, had absconded, and they had been informed that he was at present in South America. They had made inquiries, but were unable to obtain any information in regard to this amount of £1,150. Petitioners prayed for the appointment of the Resident Magistrate of Prieska and J. B. Schultz, attorney, Prieska, to examine the following persons: D. G. Aspelting (manager of the Prieska branch of the Standard Bank), T. B. Davies, Leopold Rose, Daniel C. S. Naude, H. de L. Vos, and J. Marcuse, all of Prieska.

[Buchanan, J.: Why should the attorney be appointed commissioner? It is altogether unusual.]

Mr. Long: I don't know what the circumstances are.

Order granted, directing a commission to issue for the examination of the persons named in the petition, the Resident Magistrate of Prieska, or person acting all such, to be commissioner, costs out of the estate.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right
Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

HIRSCHHORN V. SCHROEDER } 1906.
AND VAN COPPENHAGEN. } Oct. 12th.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer), moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Jan Willem van Copenhagen (one of the defendants in the action). The ground of the application was that Mr. Van Copenhagen, a member of a firm of solicitors at Upington, was secretary of the Municipality and of the Waterworks, and that he had to act as deputy sheriff, and it was therefore impossible for him to come to Cape Town to give evidence. It appeared that Mr. Schroeder, the other defendant, intended to come to Cape Town to instruct counsel, although Mr. Van Copenhagen was a material witness.

It was stated that the action was for damages on account of defendants having taken certain cattle which plaintiff alleged were his property. Defendants acted as agents of the German Government, and they set up the case that the cattle they took belonged to the German Government, and that the person who sold the cattle had no right to sell them to Hirschhorn, and that Hirschhorn knew when he bought that he was buying cattle, and had no right to buy.

Mr. Burton (with his Mr. Van Zyl) read affidavits in opposition to the application, on the ground that Mr. Schroeder was the deputy sheriff, and Mr. Van Copenhagen held offices to which he might appoint any competent person to act on his behalf, and that the respondent was about 100 miles from Upington, in the Prieska division, and to secure his attendance at Upington would mean great inconvenience and expense.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: There is always an advantage to a person to appear in court personally to give his evidence and it seems rather an advantage to the other side that the opponent should not be there to give his evidence in person, but on commission, seeing that the evidence given before the Court must have more effect than evidence given on commission. In the present case there appear to be circumstances to justify the Court in making the order asked for. The distance from Upington is very great, the defendants are both partners, and one can well understand the great inconvenience for both to be away from their place of business at the same time. Moreover, Mr. Van Copenhagen holds some important offices in the place, and on the whole I think a good case has been made out for granting this commission. The Court will, therefore, grant an order as prayed, and appoint the Resident Magistrate of Upington as the commissioner, costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

GRAND JUNCTION RAIL- } 1906.
WAYS, LTD. V. RECEIVERS, } Oct. 12th.
GRAND JUNCTION RAIL- }

Company—Debentures.

The members of a partnership gave the following undertaking to the G. Company "in consideration of your having ceded your concessions from the Cape Government to the T. Company, we hereby agree to pay all debts, including 1,700 debentures, and to undertake all the liabilities and engagements of the Company, on condition that no debentures or shares are issued after this date without our sanction in writing." After the date of this undertaking, 1,000 additional of £100 each were issued by the Company with the sanction, in writing, of the members of the partnership, but only £700 worth of these debentures were lawfully issued.

Held, that the plaintiff, as the official liquidator of the Company, was entitled to claim payment concurrently with the other creditors from the receivers of the partnership the amount of the 1,700 debentures, but not more than £700 of the face value of the remaining 1,000 debentures.

This was an action brought by Edward Ridge Syfret, in his capacity as official liquidator of the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., against the said E. R. Syfret and John Edwin Paul Close, in their capacity as receivers of the Grand Junction Railways, for an order declaring plaintiff to be entitled to prove and claim concurrently upon the partnership for 2,700 debentures of £100 each.

The object of the action was to have the right of the liquidator to prove as a concurrent creditor upon the Grand Junction Railways partnership, certain debentures issued by the company at different times, 2,700 in all. The receivers admitted in their plea that they were willing to allow proof in respect of 1,700 of those debentures, and consequently that reduced the number as to which there was any dispute to 1,000, and with regard to that number it was alleged that 500 of them had been given up and surrendered under some arrangement made by Mr. Hills, who had paid some of them, so that those 500 would be out of the question also.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Upington) was for defendants.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do you say about the 500?]

Mr. Searle said that 500 were surrendered to the receivers of the partnership by arrangement with Mr. Hills, who had paid them. The receivers took up the position that they would give a dividend on those claims made by people who had debentures, on an understanding that they would refund if it were shown that their proofs were not good in connection with their debentures. When these persons came, they said that they would not give the guarantee, and they would accept a dividend out and out, without making any further claim in respect of some of their debentures. They were intimate friends of Mr. Hills, and he (counsel) understood that Mr. Hills had made some arrangement to pay those people their claims, not their debentures, and he had actually paid some of their claims already. Counsel went on to say that 2,200 debentures, 1,700, and 500 had been proved upon the liquidator of the company, who had admitted all those debentures to proof. Of the 1,700, 785 were held by the African Banking Corporation, and of the 1,000, 500 were held by the A.B.C. It was admitted now on an admission paper which had been put in that the partnership, that was, the Grand Junction Railways and the Thames Company, consented to the issue of the debentures, that was, the second 1,000 debentures, of which 500 formed part, and that the partnership took the benefit of and made use of the debentures. It was admitted, he took it, that the proper consent of the partnership was given to the issue of those debentures, and they were quite bona fide debentures. The present case, as he had said, ranged round 500 debentures of £100 each. He might briefly indicate the chief events leading up to this case. In July, 1898, the limited company was in existence, and was then constructing the four lines of railway under the Act of 1895. The limited company had entered into an agreement with John Walker and Sons, of date April, 1896, under which John Walker and Sons were the contractors, who actually constructed the lines, and under that agreement a cash subsidy of £1,500 per mile was paid to John Walker and Sons on certain conditions set forth in the agreement—that certain debentures were to be issued when certain formation works had proceeded, and certain shares had to be issued when certain other work had to be done. That arrangement had been going on from April, 1896, to July, 1898, and at that date 1,700 of these debentures had been issued, under contract, from time to time, as shown by the minutes of the company. They had upon certain certificates given by the secretary of the company that certain work had been done from time to time issued debentures. In July, 1898, a change was made. There was difficulty between the limited company and the Government, and after that date the Government stepped in and said another arrangement must be made, and an Act was passed in August, 1898, under which one of the lines became a Government line, and the other three lines were carried on as subsidy lines. Then the Thames Company came into the matter through Mr. Hills, who commenced to finance the undertaking, and entered into a partnership with John

Walker and Sons under an agreement dated the 18th August, which stated that this partnership should date as from the 1st January, 1898. As a result of that agreement, the limited company made over all its rights to the joint venture, and the members of the joint venture and the Thames Company all signed an undertaking that they would be responsible for all the liabilities of the company, provided that no further debentures were issued beyond the 1,700, except with their consent in writing. That was the position in July, 1898. There was also a cession from John Walker and Sons, as contractor, to the joint venture, of all their rights under the contract; consequently, the joint venture took over all the liabilities and the assets of the company as from that date. About that time an account was opened with the African Banking Corporation in London, and they commenced to advance money upon the debentures. These proceedings went on, the A.B.C. advancing money from time to time against debentures. In February, 1899, there was a meeting of the limited company, at which Hills and Walker, members of the joint venture, were represented, and also other parties, who were directors, and a certificate was then produced by the secretary of the limited company, showing that under the contract of 1896 work had been done which entitled the contractors to a certain amount in debentures, beyond the £170,000 already issued. This included work done from July up to January, 1899, whereupon it was decided to issue a certain number of debentures, 2,170 altogether, but to issue 1,000 immediately. It was to that particular 1,000 that exception was now taken. Those debentures were not issued until six months after the meeting. They were issued at the request, in writing, of the joint venture, and the joint venture then deposited them with the A.B.C., and, upon instructions given in London, and upon that information given in London to the A.B.C., they made advances then amounting to about £26,000 or £26,000 against those particular 500 debentures, which were deposited here in Cape Town at the time. There were also debentures of the old issue as well. In 1903, £59,000 odd had been advanced, and they held 785 debentures. The liquidator did not claim any preference now. He claimed to be entitled to prove concurrently on account of the undertaking of July 20, 1898.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I understand that the limited company received £70 in respect of each £100 debenture?]

Mr. Searle: The limited company did not receive anything; the partnership that had taken over the limited company was the one that was dealt with. The A.B.C. did not deal with the limited company at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But it is their liability. The partnership received only £70 in respect of each £100 debenture?]

That was the arrangement made, though it seems that the amount fluctuated, sometimes rather more than £70, and sometimes rather less. The proportion was more or less on that basis. A letter will be put in showing that that was what they were prepared to do. Proceeding, counsel said that the A.B.C.'s claim was £59,000, as against 785 debentures. The position the plaintiff took up was this: These claims had been filed upon the liquidator for these 1,700 and 500 debentures. He had admitted them, and he was satisfied that the A.B.C. was perfectly bona fide in the matter, and he said, "Well, then, let me claim concurrently upon the receivers for that amount, viz. £220,000." Supposing a dividend of 10s. in the £ were paid, then the liquidator would get half the amount proved, £110,000. Then he distributed up to the amount of the claims. It would be shown indisputably from the figures that under no circumstances could the bank get the full amount of its claim, but it would get more, of course, if it were allowed to prove in this way, than it would get if it merely got a dividend of 10s. in the £.

Because they agreed with the bank that the debentures would be paid

Defendants, in their plea, said that the 1,700 debentures issued by the Grand Junction Company between the 31st October, 1896, and the 20th July, 1898, were issued to the firm of John Walker and Sons, the company purporting thereby to pay the firm for work done. At the time of the cession from the company to the Thames Ironworks Co., and of Mr. Hills, and the undertaking to pay the debts of the company on the 20th July, 1898, the company, owing to financial difficulties, had ceased business, and was unable to proceed with its railway contracts or to pay the debenture holders or other creditors. As to the subsequent issue of 1,000 debentures, defendants denied that the debentures were issued duly or for value. They denied that the partnership became subject to the liabilities of the company in respect of the said debentures, save as to the 1,700 debentures. Defendants contended that by virtue of the various agreements entered into between the company and the partnership, the joint venture had never undertaken to discharge any liabilities of the company, save such as existed on the 20th July 1898. The partnership was not a party as such to the agreement of that date and the remaining signatory thereto, the Thames Co., was not a party to this action. The parties to the said agreement were jointly, not severally, liable. As to the 1,000 debentures, the company purported to issue these debentures as further payment, in addition to the 1,700 debentures, to the firm of John Walker and Sons, while defendants said that the first issue was an ample and complete discharge of all liability which the company had ever had to issue debentures to the said firm in the agreements between the company and the firm. The firm did no further work under the agreements for the company after the cessation of the 20th July, 1898. Should the Court find that for work done prior thereto the firm had any claim against the company not paid for or satisfied by debentures, then such claim had been extinguished in law by set-off, and in any case such claim, if any, was far below the value of the 1,000 debentures. Of the said 1,000 debentures 500 had been surrendered to defendants by the holders thereof, and in no case could plaintiff claim the amount of these as against the partnership. The concluding paragraphs of the plea were:

16. As to the remaining 500 debentures, the defendants say that these are held in pledge by the African Banking Corporation as part security (the corporation also holding other 285 debentures of the 1,700 issue) for advances to the partnership amounting in all with interest to £59,853 12s. 4d.

17. The said corporation when it made the said advances on the security inter alia of the said debentures had notice and was fully cognizant of the existence and terms of the agreements in annexures A and B hereto, and knew that the said debentures would not be paid by or be the debts of the company. The corporation believed that by the said pledge it was getting a preferent security as against the partnership assets including the company's former assets, which as it knew had been transferred and ceded to the partnership.

18. The defendants contend that the plaintiff cannot in any case in respect of the said 500 debentures prove and claim against the partnership more than so much of the amount of the joint venture's indebtedness to the said corporation as was advanced upon the security of the said 500 debentures and for which the 500 debentures are held as security as aforesaid.

19. The defendants tender to accept proof of and to rank as a concurrent debt of the partnership the 1,700 debentures with all due interest; and to pay plaintiff's costs to date.

Wherefore, subject to the above, defendants pray that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Close applied for leave to amend the plea by setting out that the defendants denied the right of the present plaintiff to claim, the position being that the proper procedure was for the A.B.C. to prove direct on the receivers.

Mr. Searle consented and the amendment was allowed.

Gerald D. Orpen (of the firm of Syfret and Co.), and Benjamin T. Tonkin, accountant and broker (formerly secretary of the Grand Junction Railways, Limited), gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff.

Mr. Searle also put in a considerable body of commission evidence taken in London.

Arthur M. Tippet, an engineer of the C.G.R., was the only witness called for the defendants. Mr. Tippet was one of the referees appointed by the Court in the case of Hills v. Colonial Government to go into the question of "actual cost" of the work done on the lines (13 C.T.R., 136).

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (October 15th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff, as the official liquidator of the company, known as Grand Junction Railways (Limited), seeks to have it declared that he is entitled to prove and claim concurrently from the receivers of a partnership known as the Grand Junction Railways, the sum of £270,000, being the face value of 2,700 debentures issued by the company. The claim is mainly based upon an undertaking given by the members of the partnership and by one Urquhart, as agent of the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company, on the 20th of July, 1898, to the company in the following terms: "In consideration of your having ceded your concessions from the Cape Government, dated 19th May, and 13th October, 1896, to the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company, we hereby agree to pay all debts, including the 1,700 debentures issued, and to undertake all the liabilities and engagements of the company on condition that no debentures or shares are issued after this date without our sanction in writing." After the date of this undertaking, the company issued 1,000 debentures in addition to those previously issued, and in regard to this new issue, the declaration alleges that "the Thames Company and the partnership consented to the issue, and the partnership thereafter took the benefit of and received value for the debentures, and made use of the same and pledged the same to bona fide holders in return for advances for the purpose of carrying on their business." This allegation was denied by the plea, but was subsequently admitted by the defendants in a consent paper signed by their attorneys. In making this admission the defendants did not withdraw their denial of the allegation in the declaration that the debentures had been duly issued and their plea that the debentures actually issued were in excess of the number that could be lawfully claimed by John Walker and Sons, and that the partnership in fact received far less than the face value of the debentures still stand on record. It was difficult to ascertain from the pleadings what the real defences were, and it was only as the case progressed that the Court was enlightened on the subject. The defendants by their plea tender to accept proof of the 1,700 debentures issued before the 20th of July, 1898, with interest, but they dispute the right of the plaintiffs to prove for the full amount of the remaining 1,000 debentures. The plaintiff, for reasons not necessary now to state, has foregone the claim to prove 500 out of the 1,000 debentures, and the question now to be decided is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to prove as against the receivers of the partnership for the full amount of the remaining 500 debentures.

One of the defences raised by the plea is that these 500 debentures are held in pledge by the African Banking Corporation as security for advances made to the partnership, that the Corporation, when it made the advances, had notice of the undertaking already mentioned, whereby the debts of the company had become the debts of the partnership, that, consequently, the plaintiffs are not entitled to prove in respect of these debentures, and that any claim the Corporation might have should not exceed the amount actually advanced by it to the partnership. If this action is to be regarded as an action brought on behalf of the Corporation, as pledgee of the debentures, the defence would appear to be a valid one. It is clear that the written undertaking of July 20 was in the possession of the Corporation in London shortly after it was executed, and that a copy of it was, on August 12, 1898, sent by the London office to the Cape Town office of the Corporation. If the Corporation knew, when it advanced moneys to the partnership on security of the 500 debentures, that these debentures were really payable by the partnership, it is difficult to understand on what principle it can prove against the partnership for more than the amount actually advanced. But quite independently of such knowledge, I am of opinion that the Corporation must be confined in its proof to the amount actually advanced in security of the 500 shares. The plaintiff's counsel has relied upon the 30th section of the insolvent ordinance as entitling the plaintiffs to prove for more, but that section only applies to cases of actual insolvency. In the present case the estate of the partnership has never been sequestrated, and this Court has in a previous case (London and Westminster Bank v. Receivers Grand Junction Railway, 21, S.C.C., 418), commented upon the anomaly of being asked to declare a preference against an estate which has never yet been sequestrated. The Court is not now asked in so many words to declare such a preference, but the effect of allowing the Corporation to prove for more than the amount actually advanced by it would be to give the Corporation a decided advantage over the creditors of the partnership. It is said, however, that as this action is brought not by the Corporation, but by the liquidators of the company, the Court should give full effect to the undertaking of July 20, 1898, and allow the liquidators to prove for the amount of the indebtedness of the partnership in respect of the 500 debentures. That undertaking, as I have said, was signed not only by the members of the partnership, but also by one Urquhart, on behalf of the Thames Company. The liability undertaken by the signatories was a joint one. At a subsequent date, namely, on August 18, 1898, a formal agreement was executed between Hills and John Walker and Sons for the constitution of the partnership. In that agreement the following clause appears: "The joint venture undertakes all liabilities as far as still subsisting under the said concessions and contracts, and also all liabilities under the said agreement of August 2, 1898, and will redeem or purchase all outstanding shares and debentures, and pay all the liabilities of the Grand Junction Railway, Ltd. The joint venture will also indemnify the Thames Company against any liability under the said agreement of August 2, 1898." It should be observed, however, that the company was no party to the agreement of August 18, 1898, and that if the members of the partnership agreed as between themselves to be solely responsible for the liabilities of the company, the liquidator of the company is not entitled to the benefit of such an agreement. He is, of course, entitled to the benefit of the undertaking of 20th July, 1898, which was given to the company itself, but that undertaking, under our law, binds each of the parties thereto only to the extent of his proportionate share of the liability incurred. If Hills and Walker and Sons are regarded as having then already entered into partnership, they would together constitute one of the parties, and would as partners be jointly and severally liable for one-half of the debts taken over. In respect therefore of the 2,700 debentures their joint indebtedness would be only £135,000. If Hills and John Walker and Sons were not yet in partnership, then each would undertake a third share of the liability, the remaining third being undertaken by the Thames Company, and the utmost they could prove for would be two-thirds of the face value of the 500 debentures. I take it, seeing that the defendants are ready to admit proof of the whole of the 1,700 first issued, that they do not wish to take advantage of this technical point. Their more substantial objection is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to prove. In the latter case the liquidators could not claim for more than two-thirds of the face value of the 2,700 debentures, viz., for £180,000. By the 11th paragraph of their plea the defendants raise the objection that the parties to the agreement are jointly and not severally liable, but they do not say whether they are liable for half or two-thirds of the debentures. They do claim, however, that under the agreement of partnership of 18th August, 1898, the plaintiffs' right to sue the partnership is subject to the limitations contained in that agreement. At that date there seems to have been no formal deed of partnership between Hills and John Walker and Sons, and I did not understand the defendants' counsel to press the point that the partnership was liable for only half of the debenture debt. The point mainly relied upon by the defendants' counsel was that, whatever proportion of the debenture debt the partnership was liable for, it could only be for so much, as the debentures had been lawfully issued for. It may well be that the company could not set up the illegality of the issue as a defence to an action on the debentures, but the liquidator can only claim that the partnership shall, under its undertaking, take over such liabilities of the company as have been legally incurred. I am satisfied from the report and evidence of Mr. Tippet, that the number of debentures issued to the firm of John Walker and Sons was far in excess of what that firm was entitled to receive under their contract with the company. The fact that John Walker and Sons were also members of the partnership cannot affect the question whether the receivers of that partnership should now be held liable for more than the liability actually incurred by it under its undertaking of July 20, 1898. The state of the accounts is such that as between the company and the partnership there is not legally claimable in respect of debentures lawfully issued more than the sum of £700 in addition to the 1,700 debentures, to the proof of which the defendants consent. After carefully considering the accounts, and giving the plaintiff the benefit of the doubt on all doubtful points, I am of opinion that he is not entitled to prove for more than £170,700. The Court will, therefore, declare that the plaintiff is entitled to prove and claim concurrently against the partnership as a debt owing by it the sum of £170,700, with interest as provided by the debentures. As this amount is in excess of the amount tendered by the defendants, the costs will be paid by the defendants.

HAZELL V. KAMP.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. MILLER.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant opposed the application, and handed in a statement in writing, in which he said that he had always paid the interest on the bond.

Mr. Buchanan said that the summons stated that no interest had been paid since the 1st January, and, furthermore, it appeared that he was hopelessly insolvent. The application, he added, was under the Act No. 38 of 1884.

Defendant said that he had paid the interest to Mr. Steytler, and he had been given receipts, but he had not brought them to the Court. He, however, offered to go and fetch the receipts.

The case was ordered to stand over to enable defendant to produce the receipts.

Defendant appeared later in and handed in a receipt.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he did not see what the plaintiff was going to gain by these proceedings.

Defendant (in answer to the Court) said that he was willing to pay Mr. Arderne his interest, but he could not do so at present.

De Villiers, C.J., advised defendant to go and see Mr. Arderne with a view of making a settlement. He directed the case in the meantime to stand over until Thursday next.

S.A. BREWERIES V. KUSSEL.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a lease for £127 5s., arrears of rent.

The matter was ordered to stand over pending production of the lease.

Mr. Payne, later on, informed his lordship that he found that a provisional order had been made against defendant's estate, and he had now to ask that the matter might be allowed to stand over until Thursday next. He, however, desired to mention the question of costs of the interim interdict obtained against respondent to enforce the landlord's hypothec.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he whole matter must stand over until Thursday next.

Postea (October 18th).

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that there had been short service of the summons.

Mr. Payne (on being asked for further information) said that his attorney was not in court.

De Villiers, C.J.: The attorney will not be allowed costs for attendance today. As far as I can see at present, there is short service of summons. There will be no order on the application, but, as the plaintiff has been called, the case may be mentioned again.

S.A. BREWERIES V. KUSSEL.

Mr. Payne said that this was an application for provisional sentence for rent and judgment, under Rule 329d, but, in view of what had happened in the previous case, he should have to apply for a postponement.

Postea (October 19th).

Mr. Payne mentioned this matter, which was an application for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. He said that it appeared yesterday that there had not been due service of summons. The explanation was that the provisional order was only obtained on the 11th, and it was made returnable for the 18th, which made it quite impossible to allow the full seven days for the service on defendant at Oudtshoorn. Among the assets was a bottle store in Cape Town.

Hopley, J., said that his attention ought to have been called to the fact that due service could not be effected at the time when he made the order. There was nothing in the petition, as far as he remembered, to show that defendant lived at Oudtshoorn. A final order would be granted, respondent to be allowed to move within 10 days of this date to have the order set aside.

Mr. Payne afterwards mentioned the question of costs of the interdict obtained by applicants on the 13th September last in connection with the bottle store in Cape Town, pending result of an action for rent to be brought forthwith.

Hopley, J., said that there would be no further order in this matter.

POOLE V. FOESYTH.

This was an application for a decree of civil imprisonment, but, inasmuch as defendant's estate had been provisionally sequestrated, Mr. Burton (for plaintiff) now asked that the matter should stand over.

Ordered to stand over until the final adjudication had been decided.

LINDENBERG AND DE VILLIERS V. PALMER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £61 16s., with interest and for judgment under Rule 329d for £3 1s. 9d., commission for collection.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £17 13s. 10d. and £9 4s. 1d. costs.

Order granted.

FOLEY V. JOHNSON.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court.

Defendant said that he could not pay the debt, and that the only offer he could make was one of 10s. a month. He had been an applicant in a matter against the R.M. of Woodstock for admission as a law agent, and he had been unable to pay the costs. He was a law agent practising at Wynberg and Simon's Town. The only fee he had paid in the recent application was a guinea.

Mr. Lewis (in answer to the Court) said that the total amount of the debt was £28 5s., plus £1 10s. 4d., costs of the application.

Defendant said that he was approached by another law agent to be applicant in the Woodstock case, and now he had been left to pay the costs.

Decree granted, to be suspended on payment of 10s. a month, first payment on the 1st November, with leave reserved to plaintiff to apply for increase of monthly payments on proof of means.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,540, with interest, and for judgment for £15 1s. 3d., premiums of insurance, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

VERSTER V. DE MARILLAC.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,500, and £21, premiums of insurance and stamps, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. D. Buchanan (for defendant) applied for a stay of execution for two months, on the ground that defendant was expecting to receive certain funds from the trustee of an estate in England to which he was heir.

The matter was ordered to stand over for production of an affidavit by defendant.

Postea

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by defendant in support of his application for stay of execution.

Mr. Swift, in opposing, said that the defendant had already been shown a great deal of indulgence by the plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J.: If there had been a statement that there was an expectation on the part of the defendant within a reasonable time of receiving a sufficient sum to pay this amount, I should certainly have stayed execution, but the whole of this affidavit is exceedingly vague—there is nothing that one can lay hold of as something definite; he is interested in the estate, but he does not say he is to receive any money out of that estate. I am not satisfied that in two months he will not be in the same position. Provisional sentence will, therefore, be given as prayed, and the property declared executable. At the same time, I would suggest to the plaintiff, in his own interests, to inquire into this matter, and if he sees there is a probability of the defendant getting funds within reasonable time, to allow a certain delay.

WESSELS V. LYONS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

CLOETE AND ANOTHER V. INSOLVENT ESTATE NAUDE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (with him Mr. Close) was for applicants; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that there was such a divergence on the affidavits that he thought the matter could not be disposed of on motion. He submitted that an action should be brought by the trustee of the insolvent estate.

Mr. Burton said that the applicants had got an order temporarily stopping the sale of certain leasehold erven in dispute at Lady Grey, Aliwal North. The trustees in the insolvency claimed that the property belonged to the estate. The applicants said that they had bought the erven from insolvent, although they clearly were leased by the Dutch Reformed Church, and, respondents said that they were purchased on certain conditions which made these transfers illegal. The respondents' position was that if the applicants desired to claim from the insolvent estate they must bring their action.

Mr. Buchanan said that but for the respondents' proposing to sell leases there would have been no necessity to come to the Court. It seemed to be a case of respondent challenging the applicants' right, and therefore the respondent should bring the action. Applicants were in possession, and they had got transfer.

Mr. Burton (in answer to the Court) said that he quite agreed that this was probably a matter which could not be decided on affidavit.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Buchanan): I see no reason for ordering the respondent to bring the action. If you wish to go on you are at liberty to do so. If you think the case will not ultimately be decided on motion, then it would be better to consent to an order that the applicant bring an action.]

Mr. Buchanan said that under all the circumstances he thought it would be better to go into the provisional case.

De Villiers, C.J.: There will be no order on the motion, except that the applicants proceed by action, notice of motion to stand in lieu of summons, and that the interdict against the respondent be continued, pending such action, with leave to include a claim for a declaration of rights in the action, and if so advised to make the Dutch Reformed Church of Lady Grey co-defendants in the suit, costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

E. K. GREEN AND CO. V. { 1906.
FROMING. { Oct. 15th.

Insolvent estate—Preferable security—Guarantee of third person—30th Section of Insolvent Ordinance.

In an action for the compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate, it appeared that the plaintiff held a guarantee from a third person for the payment of the defendant's debt to the plaintiff.

Held, that such guarantee did not constitute a preferable security or lien upon any part of the defendant's estate, and that consequently the plaintiff was not bound, under the 30th section of the Insolvent Ordinance, to put a value on the security in the affidavit accompanying his petition.

Dr. Greer moved for a certain provisional order of sequestration of defendant's estate to be made final.

Mr. Upington said that in this case affidavits had only been served after ten o'clock that morning, and it would be necessary to apply for a postponement. However, objection was taken by the defendant to the proceedings as being irregular, in that the petitioning creditors held security which they had not mentioned in the petition on which the provisional order had been granted.

Dr. Greer said that, in order to answer this objection, the whole of the facts should be before the Court, because it would be necessary to explain how certain security came to be omitted. Even, however, if that security were taken at its face value, there would still be a considerable deficiency in the estate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has not the Court decided that where a petitioning creditor fails to value a security, the provisional order must be set aside?]

The Court has always expressly reserved the power, and said that it would not lay down a hard-and-fast rule, and has pointed out that each case must be considered on its own merits. The cases which have been decided all differ from this, in that in those cases the security taken at its face value would be sufficient to satisfy the claims, whereas in the present case, if the security be taken at its face value, there would still be a deficiency. Counsel quoted Standard Bank v. Winterbach (4 Juta, 329), Roberts v. Cape of Good Hope Bank (5 Juta, 134), and Standard Bank v. Van Buuren (11 Juta, 316). Proceeding, counsel said that the respondent had been in plaintiff's employ, and there were deficiencies in his books amounting to £362. There was a security bond of £100 given by a third party. The surety was, as a matter of fact, joining with the plaintiffs in the application for compulsory sequestration. Dr. Greer also took the point that the security was not of such a nature as was contemplated by the 30th section of the Ordinance (No. 6 of 1843).

Mr. Upington said that in the case of Van Buuren the Court had held that the order must be discharged if the securities were of any appreciable value. It was admitted in the present case that there was a guarantee, at any rate, for £100, which was not mentioned in the petition or supporting affidavit. In addition to that, there was also the fact admitted on the affidavits that this man personally gave a power to transfer to the petitioning creditors certain land at Woodstock. However, he (counsel) relied mainly on the guarantee.

Dr. Greer (in answer to the Court) said that the security was a personal guarantee by a third party for any defalcations up to £100. If the present order were discharged, it would only lead to further proceedings and increased expense.

De Villiers, C.J.: An objection is raised in this case to the plaintiffs' title to claim compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate, on the ground that the plaintiff holds "a preferable security or lien upon any part of the insolvent estate," on which he has failed to put a value in the affidavit accompanying his petition. In my opinion, a security given by a third person as a guarantor for the payment of a debt owing by the defendant does not constitute a preferable security or lien on any part of the insolvent estate. It is a guarantee given by a third party practically to the plaintiff, and has no connection whatever with the estate of the defendant. In every one of the cases cited there was a preferable security upon a part of the insolvent estate. In the case of Standard Bank v. Van Buuren (11 Juta, 316) there was a promissory note in favour of Van Buuren (the defendant), which had been pledged by Van Buuren to the bank. This promissory note belonged to Van Buuren, it had been delivered to him, it had been endorsed to him, and, therefore, it formed part of his estate, and when Van Buuren handed over this promissory note to the bank to hold as a pledge against Van Buuren, such pledge constituted a preferable security as against his estate, and the Court decided that this security ought to be valued. In the present case the terms of the 30th section of the Ordinance do not, in my opinion, require that the plaintiff shall put a value upon this security, inasmuch as it is not "a preferable security or lien upon any part of the insolvent estate." The objection, therefore, in my opinion, falls to the ground.

At a later stage the case was gone into on the merits.

Dr. Greer read the petition upon which the provisional order was made. It was alleged that towards the end of August last it was found that there were discrepancies and deficiencies in connection with applicants' branch store at Woodstock, where respondent was employed as manager, to the amount of £362 4s. 8d., for which Froming was responsible. Respondent was suspended and called upon for an explanation, but he was unable to account satisfactorily for the deficiencies. Subsequently he applied to be reinstated on his furnishing security for the payment of the deficiencies. Petitioners added that the assets in respondent's estate fairly valued were wholly insufficient to meet his liabilities.

Mr. Upington read an answering affidavit by respondent, who said that since he took over the management of plaintiffs' branch store at Woodstock it had been the custom to take stock four times a year. A surplus had always been found in his stock up to about April last. This surplus was not paid to him, but debited to his stock account. After the April stocktaking he was given £10 10s. by plaintiffs as bonus. In August this year the stock was taken, and he was informed by Mr. E. K. Green that there was a deficiency of £362, but he had never been furnished with any statement showing how such deficiency was made up. He denied that he was indebted to applicants in this amount or any portion thereof. Deponent went into the position of certain property, of which he was the proprietor, and the guarantee given by Mr. Hamilton Hodgson. He also stated that he had received no salary from applicants since the 31st July last. No opportunity had been given to him to satisfactorily account for the alleged deficiency, as this would entail a thorough examination of the applicants' books at the head office, and a complete investigation of the whole of the transactions connected with the Woodstock store since April last. He denied that he had made any unconditional admission of liability, his offer to pay the sum of £362 being simply a premium for his reinstatement in applicants' service.

Dr. Greer read a replying affidavit by C. C. Liebrandt, secretary of the applicant company, who denied an allegation by respondent that the rough sheets of his transactions were ever brought to the head offices. He said that respondent had had every opportunity afforded to him of investigating the books. Deponent repeated that respondent's assets were insufficient to meet his liabilities. He annexed to his affidavit certain correspondence between the respondent and the applicants.

De Villiers, C.J., put it to Mr. Upington whether in view of the admissions in the correspondence he could resist the application?

Mr. Upington said he thought any statements that respondent had made for the purpose of securing his reinstatement should not be pressed too strongly against him.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the respondent had said that he did not possess "a blue bean in the world."

Mr. Upington said that that was not strictly correct. If there were any admission of liability on the part of respondent, it was made in his endeavour to meet them in an amicable way. Counsel submitted that the Court should not grant an order on the present motion, seeing that the amount of the deficiencies was in dispute and that it had been in dispute all along.

De Villiers, C.J.: If I had thought there was any possibility of the respondent being successful in any action that might be brought against him for the payment of the debt, I should certainly not grant an order of sequestration. But the correspondence satisfies me that if the plaintiffs were compelled to bring their action, the defendant could have no possible defence to an action for the amount. These letters are conclusive upon the point. There is no hesitation on the part of the defendant in admitting this amount. The only thing that could possibly be said in favour of the defendant is that Mr. Hodgson had stated at a particular interview that the only question was the amount. But that question was settled subsequently when the correspondence took place, and that in that correspondence there is a decided admission of the liability for the sum of £362. Then the only other question is whether the defendant is really insolvent. His admissions show that he is. Here are the valuations of his property and his debts. It is quite clear that his liabilities far exceed his assets, and, at all events, the plaintiffs, as one of the creditors, are entitled to have his estate sequestrated. The Court will, therefore, make the order as prayed.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY V. VAN DER POEL.

Attorney—Malpractice.

This was an application upon notice calling upon one Van der Poel, an attorney, of George, to show cause why he should not be removed from the roll of attorneys and notaries, or why such other order should not be granted as the Court may deem fit.

From the affidavits it appeared that the respondent had acted as attorney for one Wells, described as a bywoner. Wells had had in his lawful possession in July, 1904, certain two heifers, the property of his mother-in-law. These heifers were stolen by one Du Preez. Before Du Preez was arrested on a charge of theft an interview took place between him and Van der Poel and Wells. What took place at this interview was a matter of dispute. The upshot, however, was that Du Preez handed over to Wells a horse, saddle, and bridle, and an ox, and this property was afterwards sold by auction by the present respondent, realising, after deducting the auctioneer's charges and commission, £13 1s. 6d., Du Preez was prosecuted on the criminal charge and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. Then on his release in October, 1905, he instituted an action against Van der Poel and Wells for £13 1s. 6d., the net proceeds of the property he had handed over, and the Magistrate gave judgment against defendants jointly and severally, but allowed Wells £1 for his expenses in searching for the stolen cattle. Du Preez set up the case that he had handed over the property to stay and prevent the criminal prosecution, on condition that no charge should be brought against him. From the Magistrate's judgment, Van der Poel and Wells brought an appeal at the Circuit Court, before Mr. Justice Laurence, who delivered a considered judgment in the Supreme Court in April last, the result being that the Magistrate's decision was varied by limiting Van der Poel's liability to £3 10s., portion of the sum of £12 1s. 6d., for which the Court below had found for Du Preez, but that, with this exception, the appeal was dismissed with costs. In the course of his judgment, Mr. Justice Laurence called attention to certain comments made by the Magistrate as to Van der Poel's conduct, thus:

The Magistrate in his reasons used some very severe expressions as to his conduct. "There can be no doubt," he says, "that he co-operated in the deceit and fraud practised upon the plaintiff, and he cannot shelter himself under theegis of his profession. His conduct of this case as a practitioner of my Court was sordid, mercenary, and unbecoming, and is deserving of the highest censure." As to this aspect of the case, I do not think it would be advisable for me to say more than that, when the record is returned, it would be quite competent for the Magistrate, if he thinks fit, to send a copy to the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society for the consideration of that body.

The affidavit of R. B. Sanderson, secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, to whom the documents had been forwarded by the Resident Magistrate of George was read.

The affidavit of the respondent submitted that the Magistrate's remarks were not justified, and denied that he had derived any pecuniary benefit from the transaction. Deponent had been in practice as an attorney of this Court for 25 years, and this matter had done, and was doing, him a considerable amount of damage.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant society; Mr. Howes was for respondent.

Mr. Jones said that Du Preez stole two heifers in July, 1904, and sold them to one Truter. Wells appeared to have made a search from July 29 to August 2, and then, finding the cattle in the possession of Truter, who informed Wells that he had bought them from Du Preez, he (Wells) returned to George—where Du Preez was—and saw Van der Poel. According to Van der Poel's statement, not being dressed, he told Wells that he would see him later. Wells then proceeded to the Chief Constable, and was about to lay, or in the course of laying, information with the police, when Van der Poel came and left the matter standing at that stage. For some reason or other, Wells, acting apparently on the advice of his attorney, went and saw Du Preez, apparently to squeeze out of him, prior to the arrest, what they could in the way of property, which they subsequently sold. They put their damages to him as an amount of £30, but strangely enough, when Du Preez showed no signs of landing over any property, the damages dropped immediately to £13, which appeared to be the value of the only property that Du Preez had. This claim for damages seemed to have been a strange claim altogether. It was stated by the respondent and Wells that it was for compensation for searching for the cattle. That was, however, disposed of by the fact that the Magistrate put the compensation at £1, being 5s. per day for four days. This £1 represented compensation for what Wells originally claimed £30, and for what Van der Poel and he said they subsequently sold the horse and ox, which realised about £14 10s. The Law Society's case was that, before completing the affidavit, which was subsequently laid before the police, these two, Wells, acting on the advice of Van der Poel—proceeded to squeeze out of Du Preez whatever they could, the probability being that they wanted to avoid an execution against Du Preez by another party who had obtained judgment against him. Counsel submitted that all the circumstances showed that Du Preez had had a deceit practised upon him. He was led to believe that there would be no criminal prosecution if he handed over all the property that he had. It was curious that at the examination of Du Preez before the Assistant Magistrate no mention was made of this transaction. As a lawyer, the respondent must have known that under the Stock Thefts Act he could have obtained compensation for his client.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The extraordinary part is that immediately after the alleged agreement was made the criminal proceedings took place.]

That is so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Doesn't that tend to show that Du Preez may have misunderstood what took place?]

The affidavit was actually drawn prior to the interview, and it was not sworn, and, as the Magistrate finds—and, in his finding Mr. Justice Laurence concurs—the object seems to have been not to lay information, and have the man arrested before they could get some property out of him, knowing as they must have known that there was a judgment out against Du Preez.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What did Van der Poel get out of the business?]

Mr. Jones said that Van der Poel and his firm, for their services as attorneys and auctioneers, got £5 1s. 6d. out of a total sum of about £13 10s. The Law Society, he added, asked that respondent be struck off the rolls. That, however, was going too far, but he submitted that, under the circumstances, the respondent should be suspended from practice for at least a year.

Mr. Howes said that he wished to deal with a few points in his learned friend's statement. It was said that Van der Poel had sufficient information to arrest Du Preez before he saw him. He submitted that that was not borne out by the evidence, because there were many people of the name of Du Preez in the George district, and it was necessary to act with due caution before causing the man's arrest. Then, as to the drop from £30 to £13, as the amount of the claim, Wells claimed the sum of £30, and he was the one who reduced the amount. Then, it was said that nothing was mentioned to the Magistrate who tried the criminal case about this property having been given for compensation or damages. It was, as a matter of fact, in evidence that Du Preez endeavoured to bring the matter under the notice of the Magistrate at that time, and the Acting Magistrate refused to hear it on the ground that it was irrelevant. If Du Preez was not heard then why should Van der Poel have been heard on the subject? It was curious to note the action of the Law Society in this matter. The first complaint was made in April, 1905. The Law Society asked for a report from Van der Poel. That was sent, and the Law Society, in view of the conflict of evidence, decided to take no further proceedings. No further action was taken by the Law Society until the decision was given in the appeal by Mr. Justice Laurence. He would submit that the appeal had a very slight bearing on this case, as far as Van der Poel was concerned. Proceeding, counsel referred to the argument in the appeal, and said that he recollected at the hearing at the Circuit Court his lordship informed him (counsel) that Van der Poel had gone out of the matter altogether. Mr. Howes went on to put before the Court what he described as the alternative version of this transaction.

De Villiers, C.J.: The applicants were quite justified in bringing the matter to the notice of the Court. In ordinary parlance, the conduct of the respondent might be called somewhat shady, but it was not such conduct as would justify the Court in striking him off the rolls. He appears to have been acting more out of excess of zeal in his client's interests than from any mercenary motive. Furthermore, it is not clear that such an agreement has been made with Du Preez as was suggested, because, if it had been made, it would have been extraordinary that respondent and Wells should afterwards have prosecuted Du Preez. Although there does not appear to have been sufficient misconduct to strike the respondent off the rolls, there was certainly sufficient ground for the Law Society to bring the matter before the Court, and the costs of this application must, therefore, be paid by the respondent.

Ex parte HUGO AND { 1906.
ANOTHER. { Oct. 15th.

Lunatic—Foreign asylum.

In the absence of clear proof that it would be for the benefit of a domiciled lunatic to remove him to a foreign asylum, the Court will not authorize or direct his curator so to remove him.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of the curators of M. C. Olivier, of the Victoria West district, for leave to send their ward to a State lunatic asylum at Gheel, in Belgium. Applicants said that the institution was a very old one, and the charges were within the means of the estate. The petitioners could not find a suitable institution in this colony where they could place their ward. The charges of an institution in this Peninsula to which petitioner could be sent were more than the estate could afford.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am not satisfied that the Government of Belgium would allow lunatics from another country to enter. You might send this poor lunatic to Belgium, and once she arrives there she may be sent back as undesirable.]

Mr. Jones said that he was not aware that that would occur.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, if she were sent here from another country she would be sent back as undesirable.]

Mr. Jones pointed out that this particular institution was a State asylum, and that it appeared to be one to which lunatics were sent from other countries. The difficulty might be got over if the Court granted an order subject to the Government of Belgium raising no objection to the lunatic being landed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why shouldn't you apply again?]

Mr. Jones said that certain expenses had already been incurred by previous applicants in this matter, and those expenses were all going against the lunatic's estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see any sufficient ground for an order that this lunatic shall be taken away from this country—the country of her birth, the country of her domicile, and the country where her friends live—to a country like Belgium, many thousands of miles away, merely because it is thought very desirable. There are asylums in this country, and the difference in expense will not be so great as to justify the Court making the order. Any difference in the expense of maintenance would be counterbalanced by the expense of sending the lunatic to another country. If she should very soon regain her mental powers she would have to be sent back to this country. Nor do I like the idea of the relatives of this lunatic washing their hands of her completely by sending her as far as possible from her home and from her surroundings. I am not satisfied also that the Government of Belgium would allow her to land. Upon this point there ought to be information. In the absence of information on this and other points, clearly showing that it would be in the interest of the lunatic herself to remove her to a foreign asylum. There will be no order upon this application.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

DIXON V. DIXON. { 1906.
{ Oct. 16th.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and the defendant, who had been duly barred, was in default. The action was brought by Mary Kate Dixon, at present residing at Glencairn, for a decree of divorce against her husband, by reason of his adultery. The defendant's whereabouts were unknown, and the substituted service, as ordered by the Court, had been effected. The parties were married in community of property on the 24th December, 1884, at St. Stephen's Church, Lower Paarl. There was issue of the marriage one child, a boy of the age of 20 years. The boy had since the institution of the action become a major. The plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, the defendant to forfeit all the benefits under the marriage in community, and costs of suit.

The plaintiff, in the course of her evidence, said that on the 30th November last the defendant left his home at Glencairn, and told her he was going to the St. Andrew's Nacht dinner at the British Hotel, Simon's Town. Witness knew a Mrs. Turner, who had caused her a deal of annoyance.

[De Villiers. C.J.: When did you last see your husband?—On the 4th April last.

What did he say?—He said he was going to manage another business.

What was he?—An hotel proprietor.

Chas. J. Thompson, of Simon's Town, who had been in the police force, stated that on the 25th October, there was an advertisement in the "Cape Times" for a single furnished room in Muizenberg, Fishhoek, or Simon's Town. Witness replied to it, and a lady, not the last witness, gave the name of "Mrs. Dixon," and engaged the room. She stated her husband was employed in the dining-car on the railway, and seldom came home, and the single room would suit. Mr. Dixon called at the house daily. On November 30 last year witness went to bed about ten o'clock, and Dixon went in and out of the house about three times within an hour. Witness did not usually lock the door, because there was a big Irish terrier which he kept in the passage. After the door had been closed the third time, he got up and locked it, and about an hour afterwards he heard someone trying the handle. Witness asked who was there, and Dixon replied, adding that he had left his card for the dinner on the table. Shortly afterwards he heard someone going into "Mrs. Dixon's" room. Witness saw Dixon leave the same room the following morning about eight o'clock. His suspicions became aroused, and he tried to find out who this Mr. Dixon was. Witness went by train to Glencairn, and saw Mr. Dixon coming from the direction of Simon's Town towards the hotel. Witness then went in the direction of Fishhoek, in order to allay any suspicion, and subsequently called at the hotel, where Dixon supplied him with refreshment. He found out Dixon was the proprietor, and that he was a married man. Witness then gave the defendant notice to leave the house. He told Dixon that he wished to ask him a question, and then said: "Is that woman in the house your wife?" Dixon replied: "You have asked me a question I cannot answer." Witness then said: "You had better get out of the house: what do you mean bringing disgrace upon my house?"

Decree of divorce granted, with costs, the defendant to forfeit the benefits under the marriage in community.

BRINCK V. BRINCK.

This was an action brought by the wife against the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, on the ground of the defendants' malicious desertion. Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The parties were married on the 1st December, 1902, at St. Andrew's Church, Newlands. After the marriage they resided for five weeks at Plumstead, when the defendant deserted the plaintiff. He said he was going to town to pay a bill, and never returned. She had never seen him since.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant ordered to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before 30th November, failing which a rule to issue calling on the defendant to show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, the rule to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to the citation.

KUPKE V. KUPKE.

Dr. Groer was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was barred, and in default. The action was for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce by reason of the defendant's malicious desertion. The plaintiff, the declaration set out, was a German farmer on the Claremont Flats. The parties were married on or about the 31st December, 1904, in the German Lutheran Church, Wynberg Flats. About August, 1904, the defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff, and refused to return or cohabit with him.

Carl Wilhelm A. Kupke, plaintiff, stated that at the time of the marriage his wife was a widow. After marriage they lived together for about six or nine months. Their life was not very happy. The defendant said she would not work, and that the plaintiff was too poor. Witness owned a farm on the Claremont Flats, but the defendant had nothing. Witness asked his wife to return to him, and the reply was that the place was too lonely, and witness was too poor. He was still willing to receive his wife if she returned. At present the defendant was in Cradock.

[De Villiers, C.J.: She says you insulted her. Did you ever insult her?]-No, my lord.

[Did you treat her kindly?]-Yes.

[Had you not been married before?]-No.

What son does she speak of in this letter?—A son by Mrs. Kennedy with whom I had formerly lived.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant to return to the plaintiff by the 30th November, failing which to show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce will not be granted, and the defendant declared to have forfeited the benefits in community.

FLETCHER V. FLETCHER.

Divorce—Adultery—Evidence—Prima facie case.

The Court granted a divorce on prima facie evidence of adultery committed by the defendant, who was in default, notwithstanding that an important witness for the plaintiff had not been called.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for a decree of divorce by reason of his adultery. Mr. Swift was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. The parties were married in Oldham, England, on the 25th April, 1901, and there was issue of the marriage, one child, a girl of four years of age. In November, 1902, the plaintiff came to South Africa with the defendant, and resided here since then. About May, 1905, the defendant committed adultery with some person or persons unknown, while the plaintiff was lying ill in Woodstock Hospital.

Mrs. Fletcher, the plaintiff, stated that her husband was a motorman on the Tramway Company. In the month of May, 1905, witness was in Woodstock Hospital, and when she came out she noticed that the defendant was not pleased to see her. He would hardly speak to her, and subsequently she discovered that he had committed adultery. The defendant finally admitted in the presence of her aunt that he had committed adultery.

Mr. Swift: No, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is a pity the aunt was not called. This is very vague evidence. The only thing to be said is that the man does not appear after personal service. It would be more satisfactory if the aunt had been called to support the statement as to the admission made by the defendant, but, still, there is a prima facie case against the defendant to justify the Court in holding that he was guilty of adultery. There is also the fact that he does not appear to defend this case. Under the circumstances, the Court will grant the decree of divorce, with costs, the plaintiff to have custody of the child of the marriage.

DELPORT V. DELPORT.

Mr. Sutton, for the plaintiff, said apparently there had been some mistake in regard to the name of the parties in this case. The name was really Leport, and not Delport, and the defendant had been summoned as Delport.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then there has been no service.]

Mr. Sutton: The facts are set out in the summons.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How is Mr. Leport to know that he has been cited?]

Mr. Sutton: Would your lordship take the evidence of the plaintiff de bene esse. She has come all the way from Oudtshoorn.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes.]

Kathrina Sophia Leport, plaintiff, stated that she was married to the defendant on the 20th August 1888. Since the marriage her life had been an unhappy one, as the defendant was constantly quarrelling with her. Occasionally he jumped upon her, and dragged her by the neck. She left him for a time, and returned to see if there could not be an improvement, but she could only stand the treatment for a period of three days. It was ten years ago since she heard of him last. She thought he would return, and delayed taking proceedings with a view to obtaining a divorce, as she had not the money to proceed with the action.

De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think there will be any necessity for a fresh citation. The Court will order that the intendit be amended by inserting the correct name of the defendant, one publication in the Dutch language in the "Oudtshoorn Courant," with leave to serve the amended intendit, and notice of trial in a short form to be approved by the Registrar.

WILKE V. WILKE AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by Fritz Wilke, a butcher, of Wynberg, against his wife Paula Wilke (born Otto), for a decree of divorce, on the ground of her adultery with the second defendant (Herman Vienup), and for £250 damages against the second defendant, with costs. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeared in person.

The parties were married in London on the 11th February, 1898, and there was no issue of the marriage. The plaintiff had acquired a domicile in the Cape Colony, and carried on business as a butcher at Wynberg. In June, 1906, the first defendant committed adultery with the second defendant at Claremont.

The plaintiff said he was at present carrying on a butcher's business at Wynberg, and the second defendant had been working as an assistant in witness's shop for about nine months. On the 4th May his wife left him without any cause. He then missed a big chopper, some clothes, and the cash-box. The defendant went to live at Claremont, and started a shop under the name of Herman Vienup. Subsequently the defendants came to Wynberg, and started in opposition and in close proximity to witness, under the name of Mrs. Wilke. Through the fact of his being upset, he had lost in his business £250. His wife had previously assisted him in the shop.

The first defendant then proceeded to cross-examine the witness in German. She said she did not quite understand all he had said in English, but, in any case, the greater part of it she was satisfied was not correct. The plaintiff denied having treated his wife badly, or that he usually came home about two o'clock in the morning intoxicated.

[De Villiers, C.J.: She says you come home drunk, is that so?—I have never been drunk so long as I have been married. I drink my glass of beer just like a man.

Proceeding, the defendant stated that a girl named Anna Brinck was the plaintiff's sweetheart.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is Miss Brinck?]

Witness: A dressmaker.

[De Villiers, C.J.: She cannot do anything at the shop?]

She looks after my interests.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What does she do?]

She sells something and chops a bit. [Would she not be better at cutting her dresses than chopping meat?]

I do not know.

[Where is your shop?]

On the Main-road, Wynberg.

[The defendant has a shop, too?]

She opened a shop about 50 yards from me.

The defendant then stated that she was offered £50 by the plaintiff to go to Australia and get a divorce, in order that he could get married.

Dr. Greer pointed out that an instalment of £5 had been paid to the defendant's attorney in order to permit of her defending the action, but the money was returned to plaintiff's attorneys.

Mrs. Hanau, a friend of both the plaintiff and the defendant, stated that when the defendant left her husband, she told witness that he had been very kind to her, and she could not help herself. A ball was about to take place, and the defendant said: "If I am not at the ball, do not judge me harshly."

[De Villiers, C.J.: What did you gather from the conversation?]

That the defendant was going to run away with a man.

The husband of the last witness stated that Mrs. Wilke said she could not live with her husband, as she wanted to have a child, and she would not have a child to him.

At this stage the second defendant entered the Court.

William O'Connor gave evidence as to the defendants living together as man and wife at Claremont.

Thor Osberg, a private detective, gave further evidence on this point.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiff.

The first defendant called Otto Meyer, who stated that the second defendant had lived with him at Loop street, when he received a paper to come and take his things away from Wynberg. He could not swear that the second defendant slept every night in the house.

Charles Starck stated that the plaintiff, in an off-hand manner, had told witness that his wife had run away, and that he would probably marry Anna Brinck.

A coloured boy named Mike Williams was then called, and said he came to the house at seven o'clock in the morning, and left at six o'clock in the evening.

Decree of divorce granted, the defendant to forfeit all benefits under the marriage in community and the second defendant to pay the costs of the action. His Lordship added that he saw no good grounds for giving damages against the second defendant.

VAN ZYL V. PRITCHARD.

Mr. Van Zyl, for the plaintiff, moved for judgment in terms of a consent paper as follows: (1) The defendant to pay the plaintiff the sums £38 7s. 7d., £18 18s. (together with £67 5s. 7d.), with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the summons, to return to plaintiff the sum mentioned in the declaration in lieu of the sum of £16 10s. therein claimed, plus taxed costs to the date of settlement by the defendant of the judgment, plaintiff to stay execution for two months from date of judgment; (2) defendant's claim in reconvention is withdrawn; (3) on settlement of the capital, interest, and costs and return of the gun, plaintiff to hand over the 160 shares and promissory note tendered in his replication, the same to be retained by him until such settlement.

Order in terms of the consent paper

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MOFFAT, HUTCHINS AND CO. } 1906.
V. ADAMS. { Oct. 16th.

This was an argument on an exception taken by plaintiffs to the rejoinder filed by defendant on the ground that it was at variance with the plea, and embarrassing.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for exponents; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

Mr. Searle said that the plaintiffs sued the defendant on a declaration for £2,703 19s. 2d., arising out of a contract, whereunder the plaintiffs agreed to supply the defendant with certain woodwork, timber, and fittings, for a building in Cape Town for the South African Mutual, of which Adams was the builder. The original contract price was £3,323, and certain extras were afterwards supplied, amounting, plaintiffs said, to nearly £1,400, the whole amounting to £4,717. The defendant made payments amounting to £2,013, and the plaintiffs claimed the balance of £2,703 odd. The defendant, in his plea, admitted the contract, and admitted that certain extras were supplied, but he said that the extras amounted to £840, and that he had a counter-claim of £1,734 6s. 5d., because certain of the timber was not supplied in the particular shape and form in which it ought to have been supplied, and because he had to do certain work which the plaintiffs ought to have done. He tendered the sum of £422. The replication traversed most of the allegations in the plea, and did not admit the counter-claim, except with regard to certain insignificant items, in respect of which they tendered. Defendant had, however, filed a rejoinder in the following terms: "On or about the 4th September, 1906, after the plaintiffs' replication, and plea to the defendant's claim in reconvention herein had been filed, the defendant, in order to cover all possible differences between himself and the plaintiffs in the matter now in suit, duly tendered to the plaintiffs in full settlement of their claims against him the sum of £1,100, together with taxed costs to date of tender (in lieu of the tender contained in his plea), but the plaintiffs refused the said increased tender, which the defendant now hereby repeats. (2) Subject to the above tender, the defendant joins issue with the plaintiffs both upon their replication and also upon their plea to the claim in reconvention, and again prays for judgment, with costs."

To this plaintiffs excepted as follows:

1. Before pleading to defendant's rejoinder, and replication in reconvention, the plaintiffs except thereto on the ground that there is a material variance between the plea and the rejoinder, inasmuch as the plea tenders a sum of £422 11s. 5d., after making allowance for a claim in reconvention, and the rejoinder tenders a sum of £1,100, in lieu of the tender of £422 11s. 5d., and the said tender is inconsistent with the terms of the said plea and claim. Further, the said rejoinder is embarrassing to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as it is not stated how or on what basis the said sum of £1,100 is arrived at, and whether the claim in reconvention is withdrawn or is amended or is persisted in.

2. The plaintiffs are unable to prepare their case, or to plead to the claim in reconvention by reason of the above.

Wherefore they pray that the said rejoinder be set aside, with costs.

Mr. Searle went on to say that the difficulty arising on the pleadings was that the rejoinder was a complete variance from the plea. The defendant gave particulars in reference to his tender in the plea, but now in his rejoinder he had practically wiped out the plea, and had given no particulars which enabled the plaintiffs to know how the tender of £1,100 was made up. Counsel submitted that the rejoinder was not a fair answer, as contemplated by the Rules of Court. The plaintiffs might, it was true, have made an application for an order requiring defendant to give particulars of the tender in his rejoinder. The defendant had in paragraph 7 of the plea set down a specific reply to the claim of the plaintiff, but the rejoinder wiped out the plea, and nothing had been substituted but a bare tender. Counsel said that the point had not, as far as he could find, previously arisen. Van der Spuy v. Colonial Government (14 Supreme Court Cases, 410) had been mentioned by the other side, but he (Mr. Searle) submitted that that case did not touch the present point. Counsel urged that it was of the utmost importance to the plaintiffs to know upon what basis the tender of £1,100 was made, so that they would know how far evidence had to be led.

Mr. Burton said that the plaintiffs might have been embarrassed by the rejoinder, but it was not an embarrassment that they could come to the Court and complain of. The increased tender had been rejected absolutely, and immediately by the plaintiffs. From their point of view, he could not see that it made any difference in the world to their evidence. They must still bring their evidence and show how their claim was made up. Counsel proceeded to take several items, on which there were differences between the parties, and said that the plea, as a plea to the specific items of the declaration, still stood. Defendant said that he owed plaintiffs £422 11s. 5d. as a legal liability. Plaintiffs had actually set down the case but had afterwards withdrawn it, and decided that they were embarrassed. Although the defendant still stood by his statement that the legal liability was £422: but to settle the whole case, and avoid coming into court, he tendered to pay the plaintiffs, on the whole dispute between the parties, a sum of £1,100, with costs to date of tender. The plea had not been wiped out. The defendant had offered, as he had a perfect right to do, an increase! sum of money, unconditionally, and he said to plaintiffs, "Take that with your costs, or leave it; if you don't take it, we will fight every item, except those specific items which are admitted." Counsel contended that Van der Spuy v. Colonial Government was in point.

Mr. Searle having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J.: The plaintiffs did not come into court after the plea had been filed, and say that they had been embarrassed by the plea, but they joined issue and pleaded, and so the pleadings might almost have been considered closed at that stage. Now, after the replication had been filed, the defendant rejoined, and the rejoinder seems to me to introduce something which perhaps need not have been introduced at all. It might have been left to speak for itself at the trial of the case. It seems to be unnecessary to say that after the previous tender and subsequently to the plea a further and higher tender was made. But still this rejoinder did not strike me as leaving the pleadings in an embarrassing position. All the points have been traversed, the exact ground taken by the parties has been shown by the pleadings, and all that the defendant has done is to say, "I will increase my tender." Plaintiffs say that they are embarrassed by this treatment of the case. I can only say that the only reason I can see for embarrassment is that they do not quite know upon which items they will be attacked when it comes to the case. That may be so; but the plaintiffs come into court to make good all the items that make up their claim. That claim has been met by a lot of schedules for the defence, and they know exactly where they will be attacked, and on what items as disclosed in the schedules. The only point of embarrassment, it seems to me, is that when every item has been gone into they may not be able to establish a claim beyond the increased tender of ££1,100. I do not see that the plaintiffs have any right under our Rules of Court or under our rules of practice to see how the whole of the items making up the tender of £1,100 are arrived at. Plaintiffs know how they are going to be attacked, and it is for them to come here and make good their case. It appears to me that if the plaintiffs prove that they are entitled to more than £1,100 they will succeed, with costs, but, if they fail to prove more than £1,100, the defendant will succeed, and plaintiffs will probably have to pay costs after the date of tender. It is a matter of evidence. I am of opinion that the exception as taken is bad, and must be overruled, with costs.

COUNCIL OF THE INSTITUTE OF GOVERNMENT LAND SURVEYORS V. GREEFF.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted against him, under section 38 of Act 22 of 1904, suspending him from practice as a Government land surveyor for a period of twelve months, by reason of his contravention of sub-section (b) of section 36 of the said Act.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicants; there was no appearance for respondent.

The ground of the application was that respondent had signed a diagram of sub-division of the farm Uitspanberg, belonging to Mr. Maritz, of Prieska, without having visited the farm. The work was actually carried out by one Montagu Good, whose calculations, respondent said, were checked by him and found correct. Good, it was stated, was a civil and mining engineer.

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by the Surveyor-General, who said that the diagram was signed by respondent as having been framed by him from actual survey, and beacons according to regulations. The deductions had been made, whereas had it been known under what circumstances the diagram had been framed, it would not have been examined. It appeared that respondent was a Government land surveyor of about thirty years' standing. Respondent was a member of the Institute. He had given an explanation of his conduct to the effect that he was led to believe Mr. Good was a mining and civil engineer, but this was considered unsatisfactory by the Council. Mr. Buchanan called the Court's attention to the principal sections of the Act, and said that the sub-section under which the case was brought was as follows: "Signing diagrams purporting to represent any work performed by himself, which work shall not have been carried out under his personal supervision and direction." Respondent, apparently, tried to shelter himself under the first sub-section, which was as follows: "Agreeing to share fees or entering into partnership in any work requiring the special qualifications of a Government land surveyor with any person not admitted to practice as a Government land surveyor: provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent a Government land surveyor from entering into partnership with a civil, mining or hydraulic engineer holding a diploma, to the satisfaction of the Council." Counsel submitted that the respondent could not be heard to set up the defence that he would be allowed to sign work done by a civil or mining engineer. Respondent should be suspended, he submitted, for three months, and be ordered to pay the costs of this application.

Hopley, J.: There is no doubt that the respondent in this case has fallen short of the high standard of honour that is required of Government land surveyors. That profession is a most honourable body, and has been for many years one that is very much esteemed. Their work has been accurately done, and a great deal has depended upon, not only their accuracy, but their honour, because in very many instances they are put into positions of considerable difficulty, and have to be very honest men, having frequently to decide between rival claimants to ground, who might approach them to secure their partizanship. Therefore, it is not surprising that a couple of years ago the body should have caused legislation to be brought in for the purpose of seeing that the high standard which had been set up and persisted in for many years should also be enjoined by legislative enactment, and it is very clearly laid down in this Act that a land surveyor may not sign any diagrams purporting to represent any work performed by himself, which work had not been carried out under his personal supervision and direction. In this case Mr. Greeff seems to have been asked by a person called Good, who represented himself as a mining engineer, to sign the necessary documents for the purpose of passing diagrams drawn up by Good himself, representing the result of work done by Good and not by Greeff; and Mr. Greeff did it, I suppose, for some sort of consideration. The diagrams were signed as being the work of Greeff, and passed, being accurate enough to pass the Surveyor-General's office, and nothing more would have been heard of this if the owner of the farm, Mr. Maritz, had not noticed that Greeff's name stood upon the diagrams, whereas he knew perfectly well that Greeff had never been upon his farm, and he drew the attention of the Surveyor-General to this fact, and asked whether this was in accordance with what was right and proper. Thereupon inquiries were made, resulting in the present application. As I said, Mr. Greeff has fallen far short of the standard of honour that is required of land surveyors, and has directly contravened the terms of the Act under which the Institute of Land Surveyors has been incorporated. Under these circumstances, some punishment must be meted out to him, as laid down in the 36th section of the Act. The Surveyor-General himself and the Institute of Land Surveyors, through their secretary, ask that he should be suspended for twelve months from his practice. I think that in the circumstances, seeing that he has for 33 years been a surveyor against whom apparently there have been no complaints, it would be a very severe thing, indeed, at his time of life to be told that for twelve months he must not earn a single penny in the only profession, perhaps, that he has. I think, that under such circumstances, a sentence such as has been asked for would be rather severe, but at the same time, something must be done to show Mr. Greeff that such practices as this must be stopped, and also to set an example to other land surveyors. I must say I was not inclined to make the period of suspension so long as twelve months, but still something longer than the three months suggested by counsel for the Institute. As he himself suggests that period, I will take a very lenient view of the matter, and order, therefore, that respondent be suspended from practice for three months, and that he pay the costs of this application.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE BAUERMEISTER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of the applicant, Mr. Hofmeyr, of the Paarl African Trust Co., as sole trustee of the insolvent estate of J. N. Bauermeister, with power to liquidate.

Mr. Upington appeared for the respondent, Mr. De Villiers, of the Paarl Board of Executors, who submitted that he should be appointed with Mr. Hofmeyr as joint trustee, or, failing applicant joining him, that he (Mr. De Villiers) should be appointed sole trustee.

Hopley, J., observed that it was a pity the parties could not have settled the matter between them, instead of wasting the money of their companies or the estate in law expenses.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: "In this case the insolvent estate is a comparatively small one, and, as far as the affidavits disclose the facts, there are no circumstances of complication, nor any reason to suppose that there would be anything in the way of serious conflict between the secured and the unsecured creditors. All the assets seem to be in and about the Paarl, and, at all events, the applicant and respondent, the two candidates for the trusteeship, both live in the Paarl, so that there could be no argument, as there is sometimes in cases such as the present one, that the trustees would act together as the assets were distributed. I think myself that, though Courts do sometimes appoint provisional trustees in circumstances like this, where there is a deadlock, I cannot recall any instances in which in similar circumstances such appointments have been made. My own impression is that the Court, in such circumstances, selects one or other of the candidates, and gives that one power to liquidate the estate. At all events, if I am not right in saying that that has been the universal practice of the Court, it would be found in the large majority of cases that such a course has been pursued, and I think certainly that is the wisest course to pursue. These two gentlemen who are now applying are both good business men, and there seems nothing to choose between them from the point of view of ability to manage this estate or for general reasons. In such circumstances, it seems to me that it would be a pity to introduce almost a new practice, and say that there should be these two gentlemen, representatives, I should say, of rival institutions, in the same town, interesting themselves in the management and winding-up of this small estate. Well, then, following what, I think, is the usual practice of the Court, I must select one or other of the two. Mr. Hofmeyr put in five claims against the estate, two of them certainly being by one creditor, so that I suppose he represents four creditors. On the other hand, Mr. De Villiers put in the claims of five gentlemen for comparatively small sums. But the claims represented by Mr. Hofmeyr were largely in excess, as regards the value of those proved by Mr. De Villiers. But that is not the only thing. If I saw any reason whatsoever to suppose that there would be any conflict between the secured creditors represented by Mr. Hofmeyr and the unsecured creditors, represented by Mr. De Villiers, and if I thought Mr. De Villiers would not be likely to do his duty as an officer of the Court, because some of his clients happened to be interested, adversely to the concurrent creditors, I should have no hesitation in either not appointing him or in appointing someone to watch him on behalf of the others. But I see nothing of the sort alleged in this case, and I do not see any reason to suppose that anything of the sort would happen. I think, under the circumstances, Mr. Hofmeyr should be appointed as sole trustee provisionally, as he prays, with power to liquidate the estate. Costs are not asked against the respondent. Applicant's costs will be paid out of the estate, but no order will be made as to the respondent's costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ROOS V. INGLE. { 1906.
Oct. 16th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi restraining respondent from trespassing on the farm Steenbras, in the division of Caledon, to be made absolute. There was no appearance for respondent.

Rule absolute.

TRANTER AND CO. V. DIBB.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling on respondent to show cause why he should not return and deliver to applicants the balance of goods consigned to him by the applicants against payment of £5 14s. 6d., and furnish statement of account, supported by vouchers.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicants; respondent appeared in person.

Mr. Buchanan said that the applicants sent out to respondent certain goods for sale to the value of £177. Respondent had rendered an account, not supported by vouchers, in which he said that he had sold about £30 worth of goods. Against that he said that he had a claim of £13 odd. Counsel suggested that the respondent should give up the goods and bring an action to recover the amount of charges in dispute.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Thursday next, his Lordship expressing a hope that it would be settled out of court.

Postea (October 18th).

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Affidavits having been read, and counsel and respondent having been heard,

De Villiers, C.J.: The respondent was the agent of Tranter and Co., and as such agent, he owed to them the duty of rendering accounts, and when they appointed another agent to represent their interests here, it was his (respondent's) bounden duty to render those accounts to those agents, and to treat them as if they were the principals here. It appears to me from the affidavits that the respondent has not been perfectly ingenuous towards applicants or their agents. He has not given them all the information they were entitled to, and by that means he has forced applicants to come into court to obtain a rule nisi. The Court cannot now go beyond that rule nisi, which was applied for on condition that £5 14s. 6d. be paid to the respondent. That condition remains. The Court will, therefore, make the rule absolute, with costs, on condition that if the vouchers shall show that more than £5 14s. 6d. is due to respondent, the applicants shall pay such additional sum to the respondent.

Mr. Buchanan: And that he produce vouchers forthwith?

De Villiers, C.J.: A statement of accounts, supported by vouchers, must be furnished within one week from this date.

Ex parte QUIN.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain records relating to landed property at Fort Beaufort.

Order in terms of report of Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte ESTATE WIESE.

Mr. Payne moved, on the petition of the executor, who is son of the deceased, for an order authorising transfer of certain property at Victoria West to the petitioner.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte PRINGLE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for an order authorising transfer to petitioner of certain landed property at Adelaide in the district of Bedford, in the estate of William Scott Pringle, of which petitioner is one of the executors testamentary.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE PHILLIPS.

Mr. Sutton moved, on the petition of the executrix and executor testamentary in the estate of Phillips, for leave to raise a loan of £400 upon the security of certain landed property.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE MARAIS.

Mr. Toms moved, on the petition of the administering executor, for an order authorising the transfer of certain estate property in the Beaufort West division to petitioner, who had purchased same at public auction.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SNYMAN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the equal participation of Jan Abraham Snyman, the fifth son of the marriage, in the bequests under the joint will executed by the petitioner and his late wife. The said J. A. Snyman was born in April last, a little while before the death of the petitioner's wife, and it was desired by petitioner that he should receive equal benefits with the other four sons. The will was drawn about two years ago. Petitioner said that unless the youngest child were admitted to participation, he should repudiate his share in the will.

[Hopley, J.: Has the Court power to change a will in this way?]

Mr. Benjamin: The Court has power to convert the property of the minors from one investment to another investment. If the father repudiates his share in the mutual will, he may dispose of the whole of his property to the fifth son, and the other four children may only share in the mother's property. The petition seems very much in the interests of the four sons. Counsel submitted that, as the application was in the interests of the minors, the Court had power to make an order such as was now asked for, for the conversion of the minors' fourth share in the mother's property to a fifth share in the joint estate.

[Hopley, J.: Read it which ever way you like, it is an attempt to change the terms of the will.]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that it was simply a conversion from one investment to another of the minors' property.

[Hopley, J.: Wrap it up in whatever language you like, you want to change "four" into "five."]

Mr. Benjamin admitted that it practically came to that. What they asked the Court to do was not so much to change the terms of the will, but to sanction the conversion of the property of the minors into something more advantageous to them. Counsel added that the terms of the petition were, perhaps, unfortunate, and he would suggest that if the language were unacceptable to the Court, the matter should stand over to enable a fresh application to be made.

Hopley, J., said that he should make no order on the present application, and the petitioner might, perhaps, present a petition in somewhat different terms.

Ex parte SNEAD.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the amendment of the surname of petitioner's children from Muller to Sneed, the name to which he had reverted.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ABRAHAMS.

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising petitioner to sue her husband, Manuel Abrahams, by edictal citation for divorce, or, in the alternative, for restitution of conjugal rights. Respondent was believed to have gone to German South-west Africa.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation returnable on the 12th January, personal service if possible, failing which, publication in the "Government Gazette" and "Ons Land."

Ex parte ESTATE KORTE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of the executor dative, for an order authorising the transfer of certain estate property.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for an order authorising a certain agreement of sale of estate property for the sum of £4,000. Petitioner had had authority from the Court to enter into a previous agreement with other parties, but the sale appeared to have fallen through.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending a report by the Master as to a certain proviso which it was suggested should be inserted in the conditions of sale.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte LAWRENCE AND } 1906.
CO.. LTD. } Oct. 17th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to attach certain property ad fundandam jurisdictionem and to sue by edictal citation one Sam Misnum, of Johannesburg, on a mortgage bond for £350, due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Leave granted and property attached, citation returnable on the 8th November, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte ESTATE STEGMANN.

Mr. Rowson moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary, for an order authorising transfer of certain estate property, situate at Newlands, to the petitioner, Johannes A. Stegmann.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE IDAS.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising transfer of certain estate property, situate at Malmesbury, to an executor.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Government must not suffer by reason of the fact that the price was so low. An order would be granted as prayed, without prejudice to the right of the Government to full transfer fees.

FOULLARD V. ESTATE JOUSSARD.

Mr. Pohl moved for an order authorising a certain claim in an insolvent estate in the Swellendam division to be expunged. Respondent had, he said, filed a consent paper.

Order in terms of consent paper.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. Payne moved for an order authorising an amendment of certain transfer deed by the substitution of petitioner's correct name, "Andrew James Smith," in place of "James Alfred Smith."

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Payne moved on behalf of petitioner, a farmer, in the Robertson division, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent his daughter in lunacy proceedings. C. P. Klopper, of Vink River, Robertson, was proposed as curator. Leave was also sought to prove insanity on affidavit.

De Villiers, C. J., asked counsel who had proposed Mr. Klopper?

Mr. Payne explained that he was holding the brief for one of his learned friends, and that the attorney was not in court.

De Villiers, C.J.: An order will be granted appointing Mr. Klopper as curator, summons returnable on the 8th November next, and the Court will grant leave to prove the insanity on affidavit. No attendance fee will be allowed to the attorney in this case. I think in future the only course will be in every case where the attorneys do not attend to make an order that no fee shall be charged.

PICKARD V. KAROW.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to sue the respondent (John H. E. Karow) by edictal citation for the capital and interest due on a mortgage bond for £800. Petitioner also applied for attachment of the property ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Respondent was stated to have gone to Swakopmund, German South-west Africa.

Leave granted as prayed, and property attached, citation returnable on the 12th November, personal service, failing which, one publication in "Die Windhoek Nachrichten."

Ex parte BEUWER.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of the executor dative of Estate Kraus, for leave to mortgage certain estate property.

Order in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Mr. De Waal moved, on behalf of petitioner, a farmer, residing in the division of Humansdorp, for leave to mortgage certain property. The Master's report was favourable.

Order in terms of Master's report.

RANSBY AND COVELL V. WOUDBERG.

This was an application for a temporary interdict restraining respondent from making, using, vending, or exercising helms for eliminating fusel oil and other impurities from distilling brandy, the same as or similar to the one in respect of which letters patent were granted to the applicants on the 17th April, 1905.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the applicants carry on business at Montagu, and that the respondent is a coppersmith, of Wellington. Respondent had recently advertised a helm in "Ons Land" which applicants said was an infringement of their patent rights. Apparently there had been negotiations between the parties some time ago, not only in regard to the question of whether respondent should make the helms, of which applicants were patentees, but also as to whether he should be admitted as a partner. On the question of what actually took place, there was a divergence of testimony on the affidavits. But there was also a dispute as to whether the helms advertised by respondent were an infringement of applicants' patent. Applicants said that they were, and they produced affidavits sworn by others as to the value of the helm which they had put on the market. Respondent, who had several supporting affidavits, contended that the so-called invention of applicants was not an invention within the meaning of the letters patent of this colony. His helm was not identical in construction with that of applicants. Such helms as applicants were producing had been sold for many years before the applicants took out their patent. Respondent said that applicants simply desired to obtain a monopoly in the Colony. Applicants, in replying affidavits, denied these allegations.

De Villiers, C.J., however, said that he could not allow the replying affidavits to influence his decision, because the Court had not been furnished with them.

Mr. Upington for applicants; Mr. Benjamin for respondents.

Mr. Upington said that this had been entirely due to a misapprehension. He added that he felt, of course, that this matter could not be disposed of on motion.

Mr. Benjamin agreed.

De Villiers, C.J., said that again the applicants' attorney did not appear to be in court, and he should direct that no fee be allowed to him for attendance. On the whole, it appeared that the matter was one which ought to be tried by action. The Court would order that the applicants proceed by action, and direct that the respondent keep an account of all helms and distillery apparatus of the kind objected to herein, constructed and sold by him, and of the prices for which they are sold, the attorneys of the applicants not to have any fees for attendance in court to-day.

FORFAR V. HOUSTON AND CO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the appointment of a commission to take certain evidence in London. Counsel said that there was a consent paper, and he suggested Mr. David Thomas Oliver as commissioner. He might remind the Court that Mr. Oliver acted as commissioner in the Grand Junction Railways case, which was recently before the Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You mean the gentleman who admitted evidence in cross-examination and re-examination, and re-cross-examination and so on?]

Mr. Benjamin: It was rather a voluminous record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No, it was not voluminous; it was irregular.]

Mr. Benjamin: That was the name suggested to me.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think much of the manner in which the evidence was taken. Why not appoint Mr. Mackarness, who has done the work before?]

Mr. Benjamin said that he was not aware of any reason why Mr. Mackarness should not be appointed, except for the endorsement on his brief.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will appoint Mr. Mackarness as commissioner to take the evidence; in case he should not be available, Mr. Oliver will be appointed. Mr. Mackarness has generally been appointed, and he has done the work very well.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN RENSBURG.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on the petition of the executive, for leave to mortgage certain estate property in the sum of £800. The major heirs consented.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MOKOBOTUA AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising Rosenblat and De Beer, attorneys, to pay out to the petitioners a sum of £135 6s. 8d., paid to the said firm towards the purchase price of certain property in the district of Mafeking, the sale of which had never been completed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Rosenblat and De Beer have the money in their hands?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But do they refuse to pay?]

I understand their position is that they do not feel safe in paying out unless there is an order of Court. They appear to have been acting for both parties, some error apparently having been committed in the office.

Rule granted calling upon Rosenblat and De Beer to show cause on the 8th November why they should not be ordered to pay to the applicants the sum of £135 6s. 8d., alleged by the petitioners to be in their hands, the said Rosenblat and De Beer to be in the meantime interdicted from dealing with the said money pending final order of Court.

Ex parte DE KLERK.

Dr. Greer moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of petitioner in an action instituted by her against her husband for restitution of conjugal rights. Petitioner said that she was now residing at Melmoth, Natal, and that she could not afford to come to Cape Town to give her evidence.

Order granted appointing Mr. Maritz, R.M. of Melmoth, as commissioner to take the evidence of plaintiff.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order sanctioning certain transfers proposed by the petitioners. The Master reported that the arrangement would be in the interests of the minors.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte DE JAGER.

Mr. Howes moved for an order declaring petitioner of sound mind, and releasing him and his estate from curatorship. Affidavits were annexed to the petition showing that petitioner had recovered his sanity.

Order granted as prayed.

MCKINNON V. MCKINNON.

This was an application brought by John H. McKinnon, a shipwright, of Woodstock, calling upon his wife to show cause why he should not be granted leave to defend a certain action in forma pauperis. Applicant also applied for removal of bar to enable him to enter appearance.

Mr. M. Bisset was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

The parties, it appeared, were married in Aberdeen, Scotland. Mrs.

McKinnon had commenced an action for judicial separation on the grounds of alleged cruelty, personal violence, and threats and neglect. Recently she brought an application against her husband for alimony and means to proceed with the action. The matter came before Mr. Justice Maasdorp, who declined to make an order, holding that the then applicant had not made out a prima facie case.

Mr. Bisset read an affidavit by applicant, who said that he was without funds with which to defend the action, and that he had a good answer to the plaintiff's allegations.

Dr. Greer said that the respondent's position was that her husband was earning £14 a month, and that he had a certain sum of money in hand.

Mr. Bisset mentioned that there had also been proceedings in the Magistrate's Court at Woodstock, brought by Mrs. McKinnon for maintenance. The Magistrate declined to give her an order.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he did not see how he could treat the applicant as a pauper. McKinnon could appear in court and give his evidence.

Mr. Bisset said that, as to the other part of the application, the defendant had been unnecessarily barred, because it was known that he was going to make the application to defend in forma pauperis.

Dr. Greer read an affidavit by the respondent's attorneys, to the effect that the defendant had been duly barred, according to Rules of Court.

Applicant was refused leave to defend in forma pauperis, but the bar was directed to be removed, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte STADELMANN AND CO.

Mr. Bailey moved, as a matter of urgency, for leave to petitioners to sue John and Gilbert G. Pitkethly, of Pretoria, and formerly of Woodstock, by edictal citation, for £204 13s. 2d., on a certain bill of exchange.

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, returnable on the last day of term, personal service to be effected.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

LINSCOTT V. LINSCOTT. { 1906.
{ Oct. 17th.

This was an action brought by Bertha Lily Maud Linscott against her husband, Arthur B. Linscott, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, the plaintiff to have custody of the child, and the defendant ordered to pay £4 per month as maintenance of the plaintiff, and £3 per month as maintenance and education of the child, until it reached the age of sixteen years.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff resided at Cape Town, and the defendant at Woodstock. The parties were married out of community of property at Paris, October, 1898. There was a child, aged two years, issue of the marriage. About the 26th August, 1906, the defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff, and was still absent from her. The husband had previously instituted a suit for divorce against his wife, on the ground of adultery. The judgment was one of abolition from the instance, and the defendant then deserted the plaintiff.

Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was barred and in default.

Bertha Lily Maud Linscott (born Smith), plaintiff in the case, stated that after the marriage they lived at Paris, and then at London. Her husband got a position as a professor in the South African College, and both came out here. After the birth of the child she had a serious illness, and she went to live at Somerset West Strand, and for eighteen months her husband contributed nothing towards her support. In July last her husband instituted proceedings for divorce, and judgment was given in her favour. After the proceedings, witness said she was perfectly willing to come back to him, but his attorney said the defendant would do nothing. The child was in England with the defendant's people. Correspondence ensued between the attorneys on both sides as to a settlement between the parties. On the 1st September the defendant put an advertisement in the paper that he would not hold himself responsible for plaintiff's debts. Her husband came out here as a professor to the South African College at a salary of £350 a year, but at present he was doing nothing. He had a private income of £150 a year. Witness had private means of £75 a year, and could also take pupils at music.

An order was granted calling on the defendant to restore conjugal rights on or before the 30th October, failing which, to show cause on the 14th November why a decree of divorce should not be granted, why the plaintiff should not be declared entitled to the custody of the child of the marriage, why he should not be ordered to pay £3 a month towards the maintenance of the child from the time the child comes into the custody of the plaintiff, until it attains the age of sixteen years, and why the defendant should not pay the costs.

DUNCAN V. STEYN.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a law agent, of Wynberg, to recover from the defendant £226 14s. 1d., balance due for professional services rendered, and disbursements made at the special instance and request of the defendant.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff, Robert Duncan, was a law agent, of Wynberg, and the defendant, D. G. Steyn, was a farmer of Swellendam. The amount the plaintiff alleged was due in connection with the defence of Tobias Louw, a brother-in-law of the defendant.

The defendant in his plea stated that about March, 1906, the plaintiff requested him to assist by monetary contribution in the defence of Louw, who was charged with murder and acquitted. The defendant agreed with the plaintiff, in case Louw should be acquitted, to contribute to the defence in a moderate sum. In June, 1906, the defendant paid £26, £20 being paid by the defendant by cheque, and the remainder from one Dreyer, of Claremont. The plea stated, even if the Court found him to be indebted to the plaintiff in a greater charge than £26, the plaintiff's bill was excessive.

Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton was for the defendant.

Robert Duncan, plaintiff, enrolled agent, Wynberg, stated that on the 14th February he first saw Tobias Louw in connection with his defence. That was the morning after his arrest. An agreement was entered into as to the charges he should pay for his defence. At the end of February or beginning of March he met the defendant at Mr. Dreyer's house at Claremont. Witness went to see the defendant with regard to finding funds for Louw's defence. The defendant said before he could say whether he would find funds for the defence, he would have to see his wife. Witness asked about his fees in the meantime, and the defendant said they were all right, but until he saw his wife he could not do anything with regard to the Higher Court. Witness told him that his fee was five guineas a day. From start to finish the case took about four months. The criminal trial lasted six full days. On the 14th March witness sent a telegram to the defendant asking him was he prepared to assist in defence, and the reply was that if found not guilty the defendant would stand guarantee for money, but not too much.

[Hopley, J.: What was your account then?—Between £60 and £65.

What disbursements could have been at that stage?—Cab fares.

Surely, from the five guineas you pay your cab fares?—It was understood that the five guineas was over and above any expenses.

Continuing, the witness said he subsequently went to Swellendam to see the defendant, and pointed out that he could not guarantee that Toby Louw would not be found guilty, and the defendant then saw the unreasonable position he had taken up. Witness asked for a cheque for £100 for barristers' fees, and told the defendant the costs altogether would amount to about £200 or £250. The defendant promised to send a cheque for £100 the following week. The defendant then wrote that his wife (Louw's sister) objected to him sending the cheque, as it was too much. After the case witness wrote asking for the cheque, for his bill of costs. A reply was sent enclosing a cheque for £20, and authorising witness to collect £6 from Mr. Dreyer at Claremont. The defendant said the cheque was the amount promised witness at Swellendam.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: You would not say you erred on the side of modesty?—I do not consider it overcharged.

You put in £3 10s. for travelling expenses to see Mr. Steyn?—Yes.

You charge £5 5s. for the honour as well?—Yes.

Your own personal fees are £171?—Yes, for four months' work.

[Hopley, J.: Was that the only work you were doing?—Practically, I had to give up other work.

Mr. Burton?—You never charge less than £5 5s. for going to the Court?—There is one item of £3 3s.

Every day you walk into the court you charge £5 5s.?—Yes, every day.

Do you know what attorneys are allowed for attending the court in civil matters?—I cannot say.

You do not know it is half a guinea?—We always charge a special fee.

According as you arrange it with your client?—Yes.

I only point out these things to show you that your bill does not err on the side of modesty. Was the £5 5s. arranged in writing with Louw?—Yes.

Your consultations are arranged on counsel's basis, or even more?—I went by the amount of time.

You inspected the Arums for £3 3s.?—It is all according to time.

Having a look at Mrs. Louw, £2 2s.; attending Mrs. Louw at Salt River, £2 2s.; looking at Louw in the gaol, £3 3s.?—It is all according to time.

[Hopley, J.: Take, for instance, the consultation with Sir Henry Juta?—Yes.

[Hopley, J.: That could not have taken much time?—I have to come from Wynberg. I called at his chambers more than once.

[Hopley, J.: Why did you come in? Could you not have written him?—I was instructed by Mr. Dreyer to see Sir Henry Juta personally.

Continuing, under cross-examination, witness said he knew Louw had no money, although he got him to sign the agreement. Mr. Dreyer assured him that the family would see him paid.

Up to the time you saw Mr. Steyn, on the 28th February, on whose authority were you conducting the case?—Upon the authority of Louw.

In the hope Mr. Louw's relations would see him through—No, I had seen Mr. Dreyer in the meantime, and he assured me that the relations would see me paid. I considered the relations of a man charged with murder would not see him hanged for the want of defence.

[Hopley, J.: Sometimes relations might like to see a man hanged.]

Proceeding, witness, in reply to Mr. Burton, said while he looked to Steyn for the payment of the bill, he thought the other members of the family would assist.

Mr. Steyn asked you if in such a case the Government did not supply counsel for the defence, and you said they might supply a schoolboy?—I said people of that sort.

[Hopley, J.: I am sure the junior bar will be pleased at this opinion of them.]

Mr. B. Shaw, agent-at-law, who went through the bill of costs, said he would only have taken off an amount of £10 10s.

Cross-examined: The amount of £5 5s. for attendance was reasonable for a whole day. The plaintiff, until recently, was his son-in-law.

John K. Lancaster, agent-at-law, said he might have charged for such a case 100 guineas, in addition to the disbursements, and five guineas for the visit to Swellendam.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

D. G. Steyn, defendant, stated he had not met the plaintiff until he saw him at the house of Mr. Dreyer at Claremont. When he was asked if he would support the defence with money, he said Louw was his wife's brother, and he would see her about it. Nothing was said about the expenses in the Lower Court. At Swellendam the plaintiff said he did not think Louw would be found guilty. When the plaintiff stated that he wanted £100, witness said, "Do not depend on that." He never promised anything beyond that he would send a cheque, but the amount was not mentioned. Witness never undertook to pay the whole amount of the defence.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: The plaintiff was to get £6 from Dreyer, which the latter owed to witness. It seemed to him that the plaintiff was more interested in the case than witness. If his wife had told him not to support the case, he would not have done anything in the matter. He did not discuss the matter much with his wife, on account of the charge hanging over her brother. The position he took up on his telegram was that he would give the plaintiff what he thought was a fair amount. He might have offered him £5.

Henry Cornelius Dreyer, said if the plaintiff had asked him for the £6 it would have been paid. Steyn said he would promise nothing until he had seen his wife. He heard nothing about paying costs in the Magistrate's Court.

This concluded the evidence, and Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument on the facts, Hopley, J.: In this case I wish Mr. Steyn had exhibited more generosity, and I do not think, considering the careful way in which the work was done, that any relation, who did really care for a near relation, in jeopardy, ought to complain of £100, or even more, for the work in getting him acquitted. I am sorry this case came into the court, unless it came in a different shape as to the reasonableness of certain charges, and the Court, to give an opinion as to what the charge should be for the work and labour actually done. That I could understand. I am sorry that Mr. Steyn has not been a little more open-handed, in giving more towards his relative's defence. I think, as a law agent, Mr. Duncan exhibited great care and assiduity in working up this defence, and he deserves every credit, and possibly his efforts contributed largely to the eventual result. But I have to consider as to whether Mr. Duncan has made it clear if there was a contract between him and the defendant, that the latter should pay for the defence of Mr. Louw. His lordship, after reviewing the documents and the evidence, said, on the whole, his mind was not convinced that there was this absolute promise on the part of the defendant, and he thought the proper judgment would be one of absolution from the instance, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: E. J. Sydney. Defendant's Attorney: Herold and Gie.]

VAN DER MEULEN V. GREEFF AND GREEFF.

Mr. Roux moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining the respondents from removing a large number of sheep, the property of the applicant.

A rule nisi was granted calling upon the respondents to show cause why they should not be interdicted from parting with, or in any way dealing with the sheep, or the goats, or their progeny, removed by them from the possession of the applicant, and why they should not restore them to the applicant, and pay the costs of the proceedings. The rule to act as an interdict meanwhile, restraining the respondents or any other persons whatsoever from further dealing with the said stock, save for their custody and safe keeping, the rule returnable on the 1st November. Leave would be granted to telegraph the order.

Es parte CAPE MINERALS, LTD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute placing the company under winding-up order, and appointing A. J. MacCallum as official liquidator, with powers under the 149th section of the Companies' Act.

Rule absolute.

Es parte EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS CO., LTD.

This was the return day of a rule nisi placing the East London Daily News Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, under a winding-up order, and calling upon all concerned to show cause why J. E. P. Close, of Cape Town; Herbert J. R. Pope, secretary of the Board of Executors, East London; and Charles A. Odium, secretary of the petitioning company, should not be appointed official liquidators.

The affidavits of certain creditors of the company stated that they considered it was not in the interests of the creditors that an official of the company should be a co-liquidator, that he would be acting in a dual capacity, and that his interests in one capacity might clash with his interests in the other.

The replying affidavits of Mr. Pope and Mr. Bisseker (chairman of the company), strongly supported the proposed appointment, in view of probable litigation and the importance of having Mr. Odium's services at the disposal of the company, there being a danger that, unless he were appointed, he would take a position in Johannesburg.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for applicants; Dr. Greer appeared on behalf of the following creditors to show cause against the appointment of Mr. Odium as a liquidator, viz., John Dickinson and Co.'s African and Australasian Branch, Limited (as agents for Caslon and Co.), Haddon and Co. (Africa, Ltd.), of London, and Ernest Alfred Moody, representing Parsons Bros., of New York and Cape Town.

Dr. Greer said that the creditors for whom he appeared represented debts amounting to over £600, while the total debts of the company were about £4,800, of which amount over £1,000 was due to Wiener and Co., who had nominated one of the liquidators.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But they do not object to Odium?]

Dr. Greer: No, but they have their own nominee, and I submit that for the purposes of this application he may be left out of consideration. Proceeding, counsel said that the ground on which it was asked that Mr. Odium should be appointed one of the liquidators was that he had exceptional knowledge of the affairs of the company, and, in view of possible litigation, it would be well if his services were retained. He (counsel) was instructed that, so far as the creditors whom he represented were concerned, they were willing that Mr. Odium's services should be retained, only not as a liquidator, but as manager. Their reason for opposing his appointment as a co-liquidator was that when the affairs of the company were gone into, it might well be that the interests of creditors might conflict with those of officials.

De Villiers, C.J.: As I understand the case, the great majority of the creditors are in favour of three liquidators being appointed, including Mr. Odium. An objection is now raised by a minority of the creditors to Mr. Odium on the ground of his being secretary of the company. I quite agree that as a general principle the secretary of a company should not be appointed a liquidator, but in the present case there certainly are circumstances which would justify his appointment. He is intimate with all the concerns of this company, and, if he is not so appointed, he will leave for the Transvaal, when his services will not be obtainable. It is suggested, however, that he should be appointed manager of the company at a salary, which would pay him better than being a liquidator. No doubt it would pay him better, but the question is, would it be better for the shareholders and the liquidators? If he is appointed liquidator, he would share with the other liquidators in the full amount of the fees that would be payable, and there would not be the additional expense of a manager's salary, whereas if he is appointed manager, the two liquidators would receive the full amount of the commission, and, moreover, he would be entitled to receive his salary as manager. Upon the whole, I consider that it would be in the interests of all parties concerned that Mr. Odium should be appointed as liquidator instead of manager, and the rule will, therefore, be made absolute. I do not think that the objecting creditors should be ordered to pay their own costs. I think it was a fair objection to take, and it is only on weighing the convenience and advantages on both sides that I have decided that Mr. Odum should be appointed a liquidator, so that the costs of this application, including the costs of the opposition, will come out of the assets of the company.

Ex parte FOURIE.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon the curator dativo of the estate of petitioner's late husband to show cause why she should not obtain leave to sue him in forma pauperis.

It appeared that the late Ockert J. Fourie died without having made a will after his first marriage, having only left a mutual will that he had entered into with his first wife. Petitioner considered that she was entitled to something out of her late husband's estate. No account had, however, been lodged with the Master of any separate estate of the deceased, though Mrs. Fourie had been offered £50 in settlement of any claim that she might have, which offer she had refused.

Mr. Swift was for applicant; Mr. Gardiner appeared on behalf of respondent to show cause.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the petitioner's proper remedy was to write to the Master and ask him to call upon the executor to furnish an account.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does the tender of £50 still hold good?]

Mr. Gardiner said that it did.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would you object to the tender being paid to her, without prejudice to her right to claim more, because, if you are willing to do that, I could not grant her leave to sue in forma pauperis?]

Mr. Gardiner said they were willing to do that.

De Villiers, C.J.: There will be no order upon the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, on condition that within a fortnight the sum of £50 be paid to the plaintiff without prejudice to any claim she might have to more than £50, costs to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Swift said he took it that applicant would not have to pay costs out of the £50?

De Villiers, C.J.: If she loses, she will have to pay costs out of the £50.

Ex parte ANDERSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Roux moved on behalf of petitioners for leave to execute a certain lease of property at Dordrecht, upon which it is proposed to commence coal mining, and for authority to lay out a township and dispose of plots by lease. The Master's report was favourable.

Order in terms of Master's report.

GOOSEN V. INSOLVENT ESTATE JOYNER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order barring the respondent estate from prosecuting an appeal from a judgment of the Magistrate's Court at Maclear. Respondent did not appear.

It was stated that the respondent estate had failed to take steps to prosecute the appeal, and that six weeks had elapsed since notice was given to the trustee without any further intimation being received from him.

Order granted as prayed.

In re B.S.A. ASPHALTE AND MANUFACTURING CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Molteno was for applicant; Mr. Burton appeared for Andrew Allen, the late managing director of the company.

Mr. Burton applied for a postponement, stating that he had only just been briefed, and that he could not argue the matter at present.

Mr. Molteno opposed a postponement. The matter, he said, was down in the list for Monday last, and was then postponed for the convenience of the respondent.

Mr. Burton (in answer to the Court) said that he was unable to supply certain information, because his attorney was not in Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I must order, at any rate, at this stage, that the attorney shall not be allowed the costs of attendance to-day.]

Mr. Burton: I am told that he has been in court, but he is not here just now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Still, I cannot help that; he must be in court when the case is called.]

Mr. Burton said that if the hearing were proceeded with now, he should be compelled to return his brief.

Mr. Molteno submitted that respondent had had ample notice of the application.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think the case should be postponed, because it is impossible to do justice without hearing the respondent has to say. The case will be postponed until Thursday next, the respondent to pay costs of to-day, and respondent's attorney not to be entitled to costs of attendance to-day.

ESTATE BOTHA V. LOUBSER.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why applicants should not forthwith issue out of this court a writ of execution against respondent for the amount of taxed costs of applicants, incurred in connection with a certain action brought by respondent against applicants, and decided in favour of the latter on the 22nd August.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. De Villiers) was for applicant; there was no appearance for respondent.

It appeared that, after the judgment given by Mr. Justice Maasdorp in the trial, an appeal was noted by respondent (plaintiff in the action), and that the executors were desirous of closing the estate. They said that they were prepared to give the necessary security.

Order granted as prayed, security to be given to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court.

Ex parte ESTATE LLOYD.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of the South African Association as executors testamentary in the Estate Lloyd, for leave to sue one Minnie Jacobs (born Evitt) by edictal citation in connection with a life policy of £1,000 in favour of the deceased. The deceased was insured with the Mutual Company of New York. During his lifetime he ceded the policy of the respondent, who was then his wife, and from whom he subsequently obtained a divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage. The cession was still registered against the policy, hence the company declined to pay the money to the petitioner. Since the divorce, respondent had contracted a further marriage, and was now believed to be residing in England. Petitioners also applied for leave to attach the policy ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

The Court ordered an attachment of the insurance policy mentioned in the petition ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and interdicted the Insurance Company from paying out the money, pending further order of Court, and granted leave to sue Minnie Jacobs, alias Minnie Grey, by edictal citation, citation returnable on the 1st February, 1907, personal service to be effected, and the Insurance Company to be joined with Mrs. Jacobs as co-defendants, with leave to petitioners to serve interdict and notice of trial with the citation.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

WILLIAMS V. LIQUIDATOR, { 1906.
WOOD AND WILLIAMS. { Oct. 19th.

Inquiry under Sections 173 and 177 of Companies' Act, 1892 —Presence of legal adviser of parties interested.

A person interested in an enquiry held under Sections 173 and 177 of Act 25 of 1892 is not entitled, as of right, to claim that his legal adviser shall be present throughout the enquiry.

This was an application for an order calling on respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted, authorising the applicant to be represented by his legal adviser at and during the whole of the proceedings of the Commission presently inquiring into the affairs of the company of Wood and Williams, Ltd., in liquidation, and to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay costs.

The affidavit of James Edwin Williams, the applicant, set out that on the 28th September, application was made to the Supreme Court by the liquidator of Wood and Williams, Ltd., for the appointment of a commission to examine in reference to certain transactions of the company certain witnesses among whom was deponent. Deponent was the first witness. He attended before the commissioner, and was accompanied by his attorney. On the conclusion of the examination (it lasted for five days) the attorney to the liquidator raised an objection to deponent's legal adviser being present during the examination of the succeeding witnesses, with the result that the commissioner stated that he considered himself bound to uphold the objection. A reference to the petition under which the commission was appointed, would show that the main object of the commission was to examine deponent: as a matter of fact, certain charges would be found in the petition. Deponent desired to be represented during the examination of the remaining witnesses by his legal adviser, in view of the fact that several witnesses had expressed themselves in a manner hostile to deponent's interests. The commissioner gave no reason save that he had been instructed to object.

The answering affidavit of Wm. Shaw Brown, a chartered accountant, employed by the liquidator to make investigations into the affairs of the company, stated that on the first day of the examination, the following witnesses were summoned: J. E. Williams, W. F. Wood, William Seals Wood, and Gustav H. Rubenstein. The commissioner decided to take the evidence of J. E. Williams first, thereupon the attorney of Williams requested all the other witnesses should be ordered out of the room, and should not be allowed to be present during the examination of Williams. The commissioner said he was willing to comply with the request, but that the same rule should apply all round. The liquidator was desirous for reasons which he did not wish at present to make public, that the evidence of each witness should be taken separately and privately, and deponent was of opinion that this was in the interests of the creditors and shareholders, and would tend to the elucidation of the truth of a very complicated position of the company's affairs that this mode of procedure should be adopted.

The applicant's replying affidavit set out that the reason for requesting the exclusion of the witnesses was the previously expressed hostility of several witnesses. No objection was raised to the attorney, who represented these witnesses, being present during his examination. The liquidator appointed by the company was John Cargill Fraser, who, immediately upon his appointment, delegated his power to Rubenstein, and Rubenstein had appointed Wm. Shaw Brown to investigate the accounts. Rubenstein, who was practically the liquidator, was also apparently to be called as a witness.

Dr. Greer was for the applicant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Dr. Greer submitted that the application was a perfectly reasonable one, and the Court had power to grant it. It was quite clear from the original petition that Mr. Williams was being attacked. There was a specific charge that he was in possession of a certain stock-book that had mysteriously disappeared. The real object of having the commission appointed was to attack the present applicant. Mr. Rubenstein, who practically occupied the position of liquidator, through a power of attorney, had yet apparently to be called as a witness to give information to the liquidator. Counsel referred to sub-section 4 of the 154th section of the Companies' Act of 1892, which provided that after the report of the official liquidator any creditor or contributor of the company may take part in the examination, either personally or through his counsel or attorney. Counsel submitted that these provisions really applied to a case of this kind. There was a real necessity for the applicant being present at the proceedings, because the proceedings were in the hands of those who were hostile to him.

Mr. Benjamin said he did not think that the 154th section of the Act applied to this case. There was authority for saying that no one interested was entitled to be present. The Court had relaxed it to the extent where a weak witness was being examined they allowed his counsel or attorney to be present. These proceedings were really in the nature of a Star Chamber inquiry. It was not the sole object of the commission to take evidence of Williams as it would be seen from the original petition, there were several gentlemen whose evidence was required.

De Villiers, C.J., drew counsel's attention to the fact that there was no record to show under what section the commission was granted.

Mr. Benjamin said he might be allowed to state from the Bar that it was granted under the 186th section of the Act 25 of 1892. It would only be a public examination under the 154th section after the report of the liquidator, and there had been no report yet, so it could not be under that section.

Dr. Greer having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the appointment of a commissioner had been made under the 154th section of our Act, I should have thought that the Commissioner would have been quite justified in allowing the legal adviser of the applicant to be present throughout the proceedings. But the Commission was not appointed under the 154th section at all. If it was appointed under any section it must have been under the 173rd and 177th sections of the Act. These sections empower the Court to make certain inquiries or to direct the making of certain inquiries concerning the dealings of the company. The inquiries thus made are for the information of the Court, and there is nothing in the Act which entitles persons interested in the Company to be present at the inquiries. It is said, however, in the present case the whole object of the inquiry is to inquire into the conduct of the present applicant. I do not find such to be the purpose of the original application. No doubt there is one statement in the original petition that there is also missing from the offices of the company a certain stock-book, which there is reason to believe is in the possession of Williams. A statement of this kind does not make it necessary that Williams should have his legal adviser present throughout the whole of the proceedings. The application must be refused, but under all the circumstances the costs will be costs in the liquidation.

HODGSON V. HODGSON.

Incompetency—Marriage—Annulment.

In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for annulment of their marriage on the ground of the defendant's incompetency, it was proved, that although the parties had been married for more than three years and although the plaintiff had always been ready and willing to cohabit with him, he had never succeeded in performing his matrimonial function, so that she continued to be a virgin.

Held, that she was entitled to succeed in the action.

This was an action brought by a Cape Town lady for a declaration that the marriage she had entered into with the defendant was null and void.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The plaintiff, in the course of her evidence, stated she had known the defendant in England previous to the marriage, which took place in Cape Town in June, 1903. Before the marriage the defendant said to her they were only going to be "pals."

Dr. Bennie Hewat gave evidence in support of plaintiff's case.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, quoted the cases of F. v. P. (75 "Law Times Reports, 192), and B. (otherwise H.) v. B. (Law Reports, Probate Division, 1901, 39).

Plaintiff (recalled) said that she had asked her husband to be examined by a medical man and he had refused.

By the Court: Witness lived with her husband until the 1st August. She did not tell him the reason why she had left him. He had told her that the intellectual life was the best.

Mr. Benjamin cited Voet (24, 2, 15).

De Villiers, C.J.: There has been no proof that the defendant is suffering from a physical defect, visible on inspection, which would render him unfit to perform his matrimonial function. If proof of the existence of such a defect now, and at the time of his marriage, had been given, the lapse of time without the performance of such function would have been of no importance. The only proof of incompetency, however, in this case is the fact that, although more than three years have passed since the marriage, and although the plaintiff has been ready and willing to cohabit with him, he has never succeeded in performing his part. Upon this point the plaintiff's evidence is supported by that of the doctor who, on inspection, found her to be a virgin. She suggested to the defendant that he should also submit to an inspection, which he refused to do, and he has not appeared to defend this action. Under these circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to have the marriage annulled. See Groeneweg (ad Cod 6-17-10), and Voet (24-2-15). The marriage must be declared null and void with costs.

GILDEMEISTER V. MACLAHLAN.

Partnership—Inchoate agreement.

This was an action to have a certain partnership between the plaintiff and the defendant dissolved, and the appointment of a Receiver to liquidate the partnership and frame a proper account, with costs.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff, Gottfried Gildemeister, and the defendant, Harry MacLachlan, were both of Vryburg. On the 12th June and the 7th February the plaintiff advanced certain sums of money to the defendant, who agreed to pay interest. On the 19th April it was agreed that the plaintiff should before the 30th June deposit a further sum of £750, and the total sum of £1,000 should be used by the defendant in the purchase of live-stock in the Vryburg district. In the partnership the plaintiff was to get one-third of the profits, and the defendant was to bring into the partnership all the live-stock owned by him. A document was drawn up, and signed by the plaintiff as follows:

"Hayslope, April 19, 1905.

"I, the undersigned, hereby agree to deposit the sum of seven hundred and fifty pounds (£750) to the credit of Harry Campbell MacLachlan, at the Standard Bank, Vryburg, on or before the 30th day of June, 1905, on the following terms and conditions: (1) That the said Harry Campbell MacLachlan allows me one-third share of the profits derived from the breeding and selling of all farm stock and agricultural produce during the time I am the partner of the said Harry Campbell MacLachlan; (2) the said profits to be derived, as stated, after all expenses, such as rents, taxes, and interest and working expenses, have been paid."

(Signed)

"GOTTFRIED GILDEMEISTER.

The document, however, did not purport to record the full arrangement. The defendant purchased a farm near Vryburg, where he moved his stock, and the plaintiff joined him. On the 30th June the plaintiff handed the defendant a cheque for £700. The defendant failed to purchase the additional stock for which the amount was subscribed, except in the sum of £126. The defendant had also failed to keep proper books and accounts. Certain moneys of the plaintiff had been misapplied in the purchase of land in breach of the agreement, and the land was purchased in defendant's own name.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that he had failed to purchase the additional stock. The £300 was not advanced, but was deposited in the bank in defendant's name, as the plaintiff had no banking account. The parties entered into an oral agreement, which was to last three years. It was first agreed that the defendant should contribute £213 18s., together with a further sum of £750. Subsequently, in April, it was agreed that the defendant should be allowed to appropriate the sum of £300 towards the purchase price of the farm, and at the same time it was agreed that the defendant should be allowed to appropriate £600 for the same purpose out of the amount which he (the defendant) had undertaken to contribute. It was further agreed that the farm should remain the property of the defendant solely, the sum of £300 to be repaid to the plaintiff, together with one-third share of the improvements made on the farm. The £300 was applied towards the purchase of the farm in accordance with the agreement. The defendant had never at any time undertaken to pay interest. The plaintiff's right to claim a dissolution of the partnership was denied.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Toma), for plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for defendant.

Godfrey Gildermeister (plaintiff) stated that in April, 1904, he came from Germany, and went to a farm at Stutterheim belonging to Mr. Malcomess. He received a sum of £500 from his mother, and was anxious to start farming. The defendant suggested that witness should come and live with him, and witness did this in November, 1905. Witness handed over to the defendant £250, on which interest was to be paid at the rate of 3 per cent. Witness understood that he was credited with the money, but afterwards he found out that this was not so. Witness's mother died in January, 1905, and he told the defendant he would get £750 from Germany, and the defendant then said he would put his live-stock into the partnership if witness put in the additional money into the partnership. The defendant brought about 348 sheep and 40 head of cattle. Witness was to get a third of the profits. None of witness's money was to be put into the land. Witness would have objected to this. In June he received from Germany £750, and handed the defendant £700 for the partnership. Witness became suspicious that the money was not being invested according to the partnership agreement when the defendant asked him to write home for more money to stock the land. When witness asked for a copy of the document of the 19th April, the defendant said he would give one at his convenience. The account furnished showed a loss of over £500, with which plaintiff was not satisfied. The defendant admitted to him that part of the money had been used in land purchase. It was not possible to continue the partnership, as he was not satisfied with the way in which the money had been employed or the accounts kept.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: An accountant had gone into all the books of the defendant. When witness asked to look at the books, the defendant said it would be time enough to go into the accounts at the end of the year. It was not the case that the defendant was only to pay interest on the £250 if he used it. At the time when he went into partnership with the defendant, he did not know how much money the latter had.

Alfred T. Hennessy, accountant, of Cape Town, said he had gone into the accounts and books of the defendant. The amounts of £200 and £50 were put into the defendant's account, and he used the money. Witness was taken over the entries in the bank pass-book. He stated that the total outlay on the farm was £1,605. Towards this, a bond of £700 was raised. Out of plaintiff's money, £700 was paid; £54 was paid in connection with the costs, and the balance of £157 odd was paid on the 17th August. There was only one account, first at Stutterheim and afterwards at Vryburg, and it was in Mr. H. MacLachlan's name.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to witness: Would it be possible from these books to prepare an account of what is owing?)]

Not without an agreement being come to between Gildermeister and MacLachlan as to what is partnership and what is private.

Mr. Searle submitted that it was impossible to go into the matter further, and that someone should be appointed to go into the accounts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Seeing that the partnership is to be dissolved, would it not be best to appoint a receiver?]

Yes; that is what I am going to suggest.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Of course, the defendant may object to a dissolution after all, and that this is a three years' partnership.]

I submit that, under all the circumstances, one partner is entitled to have the partnership dissolved. They cannot go on like this.

Cross-examined: The whole of the transactions passed through the bank. His idea was that it was erroneous to keep only one account, and mix the partnership and private accounts. He had seen the notes made by Mr. MacLachlan in his pocket-books, but it was impossible to follow the entries properly.

Jonathan C. Bermington, farmer, Bechuanaland, spoke to certain stock having been brought across his farm by MacLachlan.

Reginald E. de Beer, attorney, of the firm of Rosenblatt and De Beer, and that he had an interview with MacLachlan at his office in reference to what had become of plaintiff's money. Defendant produced a book, and said that the entries were there. Witness asked defendant to point out the entries, but he did not do so, and witness could not understand the entries.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Henry Campbell MacLachlan stated that the commencement of the partnership was the document of April 19. Prior to the document he had been in negotiations for the purchase of the farm. In order to meet the first instalment in the purchase of the farm the plaintiff agreed to put the money into the partnership on June 30. The arrangement was that the £700 was to be paid as the first instalment. The understanding was that witness was to put back the £400 into the partnership. Witness's contribution to the partnership was £2,200, being the value of certain stock, implements, etc. The plaintiff started with a sum of £1,025. The £300 belonging to the plaintiff was to be returned after three years, and there was no interest to be paid. The plaintiff had a consideration allowed for the loan by way of a reduction of rent, interest, etc. When witness went to the farm with the plaintiff in June he brought with him 368 sheep and 43 head of cattle, his own property, and six head of cattle, the property of the plaintiff. There were 210 lamels, and some big cattle belonging to defendant, left behind. Witness spent about £100 recovering the stock. There was no agreement between the plaintiff and himself that only stock should be purchased. He distinctly stated to the plaintiff that he had no intention of buying stock in Bechuanaland until he had been in the country at least 12 months. When witness suggested a deed of partnership at the beginning of the year things were not working smoothly. The plaintiff objected to the valuation of the oxen, but he was satisfied with the valuation of the other cattle. Witness was annoyed, and then suggested a re-valuation of everything which the plaintiff objected to. The farming operations were now improving, and later on he hoped to show a profit.

Cross-examined: Witness made the entries in May, 1905, in his diary (produced) at the time the arrangements were entered into in the presence of the plaintiff. He read over his entries to the plaintiff, and told him that those were the final arrangements. The memos. in May did not state how much stock witness was to put in, but there was an entry on June 1, 1905, setting out how many stock were to go to Bechuanaland. Witness did not treat plaintiff as a part owner of the land. Plaintiff advanced £300. Witness considered that he had a right to bond the land as he thought fit.

By the Court: The witness contributed in the way of capital £2,244, and plaintiff was to contribute one-third. They decided to reduce the capital, witness's share by £600 and plaintiff's by £300.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But he did not get his £300 back? He left this £300 with you!]

Witness: I have to pay that back at the end of three years. The total sum of £900 went towards the purchase price of the farm.

In further answer to the Court, witness said that he regarded this sum of £300 as a personal loan to himself.

Further cross-examined: Witness had proved and improved the farm.

Mr. Searle: Yes, and you have taught Mr. Gildermeister a little about farming in Bechuanaland.

By the Court: Witness looked upon the losses up to May 15, 1906, as £566. The wells that were sunk were failures. When the account was drawn up, one of them was now giving water, and was a success.

Mr. Searle (to defendant): I put it to you that the result of the whole thing is that you have got the whole of the improvements on your farm, and Mr. Gildermeister has got the experience?

Witness: No, sir.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that a compromise should be arrived at, and that the defendant should pay to plaintiff the amount of capital that he had put in, less one-third portion of the expenditure wasted on well sinking. This would leave an amount of £918 in favour of plaintiff.

Defendant said that he would be prepared to do that, but there was one point that he should like to mention, and that was in this action he had been accused of dishonesty, because that was what the declaration alleged.

Counsel on both sides, after consultation with their clients, intimated that they were prepared to adopt the suggestion thrown out by the Court.

Mr. Burton said that his client felt sore about the alleged misapplication of the funds, and he desired that that allegation should be withdrawn.

De Villiers, C.J., said that defendant had exposed himself to it by the manner in which he had kept his accounts, because it certainly was not the proper thing to mix up the two accounts.

Mr. Searle said that the plaintiff was quite willing to say that he had intended no imputation against defendant's honesty in this matter, and that, if any such imputation were made, he desired to withdraw it.

Counsel having been heard on the question of costs,

De Villiers, C.J.: The only written evidence of a partnership is contained in a document dated April 19, 1906, and in that document nothing is said as to the period over which the partnership was to extend. No doubt, there were subsequent negotiations, and the defendant produces a diary in which the alleged terms of the partnership are entered, and, according to that, the partnership had to last for three years. But it is quite clear that it was merely an inchoate agreement. If the parties wished to have a definite agreement of partnership they could have had it drawn up either by themselves or by proper legal advisers. The whole thing was unsettled, and I am satisfied that the condition of things was such that when the present dispute arose the relationship between the partners was such that it would be impossible for them to carry on the partnership, and that the period had arrived for a dissolution of partnership. That is really all that the plaintiff claims—a dissolution of partnership. That, in my opinion, on the evidence so far as it has gone, the plaintiff would have been entitled to. It would have been wholly impossible for them, when the relationship had become so strained, to carry on the partnership, with any benefit to either of them. Then the plaintiff would be entitled to get back the money he has paid. He has advanced £1,025, but then it is said there had been losses to the extent of £566. These losses represent £144 for wells which had been sunk and the defendant now admits that one of these wells is not a dead loss, and I think the £144 might fairly be deducted from the £566. There would remain, therefore, £422 as losses. If the plaintiff has to bear one-third of them it would be £107. Deducting £107 from £1,025 leaves £918. That gives the plaintiff no interest whatever on his money. It does not give the plaintiff interest on the £300, but still, the plaintiff is prepared to accept £918. Now, upon the question of costs, it seems to me to be fair that the costs should be apportioned in proportion to the interest which each had in the partnership and, therefore, the judgment of the Court will be for the plaintiff for £918, but the defendant is to pay two-thirds of the total costs of this action and the plaintiff to pay one-third of the total costs of this action. I think it may be to the satisfaction of the defendant to know that, in the opinion of the Court, there is no evidence of any intention to misappropriate. There is no evidence of that kind, but, at the same time, the Court cannot lose sight of the fact that the accounts were not kept in a proper manner. Where a person goes into a partnership of this kind it is his bounden duty to keep the partnership account entirely separate from his own private account. The plaintiff left it to the defendant to keep the books and accounts, and it was clearly the duty of the defendant to have kept the books and accounts in a wholly different manner. He has mixed up in the account he renders domestic items with the items connected with the partnership.

Mr. Burton applied for a stay of execution on behalf of the defendant.

His Lordship directed that £400 be paid within one month, and that the balance be paid within three months of this date, defendant undertaking, meanwhile, not to mortgage the farm without the consent of the plaintiff.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLBY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SALIE. { 1906.
Oct. 19th.

Mr. Lewis moved as a matter of urgency on the petition of Nomenati Salie (born Berdien) for the attachment of certain funds in the Standard Bank, Cape Town, pending an action to be brought by petitioner against her son (Amanie Salie), in whose name the money is standing. Petitioner, a Malay, it appeared, had been twice married, and the respondent was her son by her first marriage. She had inherited a sum of £497 18s. 4d. from the estate of her grandfather. She bought certain movables and decided to place the balance in the bank on floating deposit, but, as she was unable to write, the money was deposited in the name of her son. He had given her a worthless credit slip and had gone to Port Elizabeth without saying "Good-bye." Although written to, he had refused to send her a cheque for the amount of £250 which, she believed, was standing in the bank in his name. She was informed that respondent intended to leave Port Elizabeth.

Hopley, J., said he thought the matter might very well be disposed of on motion, and he granted an order interdicting the Standard Bank from parting with any of the money standing in their books in the name of Amanie Salie, pending further order of Court, and also granted a rule nisi calling upon the said Amanie Salie to show cause why the sum of money standing in his name at the Standard Bank should not be paid over to petitioner or her duly-authorised attorney, and why he should not pay costs of this application, rule returnable on the last day of term, personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and "Eastern Province Herald."

In re THE PURE MILK SUPPLY CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux presented the first report of the official liquidator of the Pure Milk Supply Company, Ltd. (Mr. Alex. R. Watson).

Mr. Roux said that he had to apply for the usual order as to the report lying for inspection, and for costs to be costs in liquidation. Counsel proceeded to read the report, and then discovered that the company belonged to East London. The report stated that the company was formed with a capital of £2,000 in 200 £10 shares, of which 147 were subscribed. The object of the company was to supply milk in East London pasteurised, and although the directors worked hard in the interests of the company without remuneration in several capacities, the company never paid its way from the start, owing to several reasons, the chief being the milk not giving satisfaction to the customers. On a good portion of the capital becoming expended, the directors thought it best to apply for the liquidation of the company. Owing to several engagements and leases having been entered into by the company which were now terminated by the liquidation, it was not probable that the creditors would be paid in full, as the directors had hoped. At the date of the order of liquidation, the assets were estimated at about £670, and the liabilities the same.

He suggested that there should be publication in an East London paper. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that he could not say whether the creditors were in East London. His attorney was not in court.

Hopley, J., said that the attorneys or their clerks should be in court when any matters they were concerned in were coming on. At all events, one of the clerks should be there, because (added his lordship) "it would be wholesome for the clerk and useful to the Court."

The Court ordered the report to lie at the Master's Office for a fortnight, one publication in the "East London Dispatch," no order as to costs at the present stage.

Ex parte VAN ECK.

Mr. Pohl moved, on the petition of Petrus Johannes van Eck, of Aberdeen, for the appointment of curators ad litem to represent certain minors and a lunatic in a special case which it is proposed to submit to the Court as to the interpretation of a will. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that he thought it would be desirable to have separate curators for the minors of the first and second marriages respectively and for the lunatic. The clause in dispute was very vague, and there might be some conflict of interest.

Order granted as prayed, Messrs. Watermeyer, Sutton, and Bailey being appointed curators ad litem to the minors and lunatic.

MACDONNELL V. MACDONNELL.

Mr. Alexander moved, on the petition of Gladys Macdonnell, for leave to sue her husband, Charles Robert Macdonnell, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The parties were married at Cape Town. Petitioner said that her husband deserted her in November 1904, and that she had since had no tidings of his whereabouts.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation returnable on the 1st February, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette," "Cape Times," and "S.A. News."

Ex parte ESTATE CARY.

Mr. Watermeyer moved on the petition of Rayner Garlake, of Tarkastad, one of the joint trustees in the insolvent estate of Thomas Bovey Cary, for leave to pass transfer to petitioner of a certain erf at Tarkastad belonging to the estate, which he had bought at public auction for £400.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TORIEN V. HORWITZ (1). { 1906.
TORIEN V. HORWITZ (2). { Oct. 22nd.

Partners—Non-joinder—Amendment of summons.

The plaintiff sold certain produce to the defendant, who signed a document in his own name, acknowledging the purchase and promising to pay on delivery of the purchase. It was held in the Court below that as the plaintiff had the means of knowing that the defendant had a partner in the purchase of the produce; such partner should have been joined as co-defendant.

Held on appeal, that as credit was given to the defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to sue him alone.

These matters came on appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court at Tulbagh.

In the first case, appellant sued respondent on a cheque for £35, drawn in his favour by S. Horwitz. The second case related to an account for onions sold and delivered to defendant upon which a sum of £27 11s. was alleged to be owing. Defendant took exception in the Court below that his partner Dembo ought to have been joined in the actions. This exception was upheld.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that these actions were both brought in his court on the same day. Exception was taken to both summonses that the transaction was one connected with a business run by defendant in partnership with another active partner, who had not been joined in the action with him. The exception appeared to be a fatal one. After plaintiff had denied the partnership and called for proof of such, it was proved to his (the Magistrate's) satisfaction that the defendant had been openly trading in partnership for several months before the demand was issued, which could easily have been ascertained by casual inquiries on the spot. The exception was sustained in both cases, and absolution given, with costs.

Mr. Molteno was for appellant, Pieter Jacobus Torien; Mr. Alexander was for respondent, Saul Horwitz.

Mr. Molteno submitted that the Magistrate's ruling was wrong. Defendant went to the plaintiff's farm, and bought certain onions in his own name, and gave a cheque for £35 in his own name, and also signed a contract of sale in his own name. He also left with plaintiff a card bearing only his own name. The Magistrate seemed to have been guided by the decision of Auret's Trustee v. Pienaar (3 Juta. 40), but he (counsel) contended that that case did not touch the point in the present case.

Mr. Alexander, in support of the Magistrate's ruling, said that it had been found as a fact, in the Court below, that it had been clearly proved that there was a partnership between these two parties, and he submitted that, as he was satisfied in regard to the evidence of partnership, the Supreme Court would not overrule the Magistrate's decision on a question of fact.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the question in this case is, to whom was credit given? Defendant went to the plaintiff's farm alone.]

Mr. Alexander: Even so, the Magistrate goes on to say that the defendant had been openly trading there in partnership for several months before.

Mr. Molteno (in answer to the Court) said that he did not ask for judgment, but that the cases should be sent back to be tried on the merits.

Mr. Alexander said that the defendant and his partner had been openly trading at the station, and the plaintiff admitted that, by asking at the close that the defendant's partner should be joined. He submitted that, if the cases were remitted, costs should abide the result.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that the Magistrate has erred in his judgment. In his reasons he says that "at the hearing it was proved to my entire satisfaction that the defendant had been trading openly in partnership for several months before the demand was issued, which fact could easily have been ascertained by the plaintiff or his agent by the most casual inquiries on the spot." He does not say that the plaintiff knew that the defendant had a partner, but that he might have known if he had made inquiries. But there is no obligation upon a person to make inquiries of this nature. If a man comes to my place to purchase produce from me, and does not name his partner, I am justified in assuming that, although he may have partners, he comes there to buy on his own behalf, unless he in some way indicate that he came on behalf of the partnership. Now, it is true that in the defendant's own evidence something of the kind is said—that he had said that he had a partner—but the Magistrate does not seem to rely upon that point, and in the plaintiff's own evidence, he says that defendant gave him the note marked "f," promising payment on delivery. That note was signed only by Horwitz (the defendant). He also gave him the card marked "c." That is also the card of the defendant alone. The plaintiff had not the slightest knowledge that the defendant had a partner. Defendant promised to send a man with the bags to pick out the onions. In cross-examination plaintiff said that he did not know Dembo until he came out to his farm, which was about two hours by cart from Porterville-road. Moreover, the document of the purchase of the onions is also signed by S. Horwitz alone, and there is no mention of the partner. "The undersigned has bought from P. J. Torien"—"the undersigned" is Horwitz, not q.q., nor is the partnership mentioned. Therefore, it is clear that in this case credit was given by the plaintiff to the defendant alone, and that is the test in this case—to whom was credit given? To my mind, it is perfectly clear that, whatever means of knowledge the plaintiff possessed, he intended to give credit to Horwitz, and Horwitz alone, and, therefore, he is entitled to sue him alone. But, then, it is said that the plaintiff afterwards offered to join Dembo, the partner, in the action. There is nothing inconsistent in that if Dembo comes forward and says: "I am the partner. I have no objection to being joined and sued with defendant." Plaintiff applied to join Dembo, whereupon objection is made, and the Magistrate allows that objection also. I think it is a very unreasonable course on the part of Horwitz's attorney to take the objection, and on the part of the Magistrate to disallow this reasonable request. When Dembo comes forward and says he is a partner, the plaintiff should be allowed to join him as defendant. As to the question of costs, it is an altogether unreasonable defence from beginning to end, and, therefore, the plaintiff was quite justified in appealing. I think, against this judgment. The appeal must be allowed, with costs in this court, and the case remitted back to the Magistrate to be tried on the merits, costs in the court below to be left to the discretion of the Court.

Mr. Molteno said he took it that the decision of his lordship applied to both cases.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, yes; it applies to both.]

DE KOCK V. FICK.

Giving time to debtor—Payment in instalments.

The defendant offered the plaintiff, to whom he owed the sum of £43, to liquidate the debt in instalments of £2 a month, and the plaintiff accepted the offer.

Held, that on failure of the defendant to pay one of the monthly instalments, the plaintiff was entitled to claim payment of the whole debt then still due to him.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Bredasdorp in an action brought against appellant by respondent for £39 10s., for goods sold and delivered. The Magistrate had given judgment for plaintiff.

It appeared that attached to the summons was an endorsement in these terms: "On the 1st February, 1906, defendant signed an acknowledgment of debt in favour of plaintiff, which acknowledgment has subsequently been mislaid." The debt was contracted in respect of certain carts supplied at defendant's special instance and request. The original amount was £73 10s., reduced by payments to £39 10s. Exception was taken by defendant in the Court below that he should have been sued on a copy of the lost document and not on the open account. This was, however, overruled. Defendant said that the acknowledgment of debt stipulated that he should have the balance of £43 10s. then owing at the rate of £2 per month.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that, as to the exception, he was not aware at that stage of the existence of the acknowledgment of debt. The only document before him, and attached to the summons, was an open account on which he was being sued, the genuineness of which he did not dispute. He (the Magistrate) saw no reason, therefore, why he should entertain the exception. The defendant seemed to contend that the account was not yet due, and that an agreement had been entered into, whereby he was to liquidate the debt by monthly instalments of £2. He did not hesitate to believe Mr. Hofmeyr when he swore that the copy he produced was a true copy of the original which he had drawn up, and in which no mention was made of the payments. He (the Magistrate) did not believe that the original bore any such arrangement as the defendant claimed.

Mr. Louwrens was for appellant. Pieter E. de Kock, of Bredasdorp; Mr. M.

1927 O.P.D. 34
1929 W.H.D. 106
1927 C.P.D. 129

Bisset was for respondent, Willem L. Fick, of Caledon.

Mr. Louwrens submitted that the exception should have been sustained. The acknowledgment of debt stipulated that £2 per month should be paid and the whole amount had not become due. The lost document set forth the rights of the parties and the agreement, and the plaintiff should have sued on a copy of the lost document. Counsel relied on sections 67 and 68 of the Bills of Exchange Act.

Without calling upon Mr. Bisset,

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that the Magistrate was perfectly correct in his judgment. Even if the document were entered into in terms of the letter of the 3rd February, 1906, defendant had failed to perform his part of the agreement. It is clear that on the 3rd February, 1906, there must have been owing to the plaintiff the sum of £43 10s. That sum was payable at once. The plaintiff might have insisted upon £43 10s. being paid to him at once. He, however, authorised his attorney to write as follows: "I have instructions to inform you that Mr. Fick is agreeable to accept your offer to pay instalments of £2 per month in liquidation of your debt. Your other offer to pay the balance of liability by the end of March, therefore, falls to the ground. I shall be pleased if you would kindly pay in to me the sum of £4, being instalments due for the months of January and February, 1906." These two instalments were already due, and, therefore, they were put together, and £4 was demanded, and the £4 was paid. Upon failure by the defendant to pay any of the subsequent monthly instalments, the plaintiff was quite justified in claiming payment of the whole debt. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the further question as to this note. The Magistrate is satisfied that this document (a) is a true copy of the document which was signed, and that it is an unconditional acknowledgment—not a promise to pay, but an acknowledgment. The Magistrate finds that that was the nature of the document. The Magistrate has seen Mr. Hofmeyr and heard his evidence, and the Court could not well now, upon the suggestion of counsel, hold that is not the document. If that were the document, it was not a promissory note, whatever the parties may have called it. Quite independent of that, the plaintiff is entitled to be paid the whole amount, seeing that the defendant failed to pay one of the instalments as it fell due. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

MEYER V. KATZENELLENBOGEN

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Ceres in an action brought by appellant against respondent for £15, being £8 in respect of purchase price of a horse and £5 damages. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance, with costs.

The matter arose out of a horse transaction. Plaintiff said he bought a mare from defendant for £8 on a guarantee that the animal was sound, and in good health. Plaintiff caused to be delivered to defendant a bicycle valued at £5, and a promissory note for £3, as the purchase price of the mare. He now complained that the mare was unsound and unhealthy, and said that he had tendered the return of the animal to defendant, who, however, declined to receive the same or to return the bicycle and promissory note. The defence was that no guarantee had been given. There was a wound on the animal's throat, stated to have been caused by a nail, and in other ways it was admittedly in a poor condition.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the evidence was most contradictory. He looked upon the defect as a patent one, and he gave absolution from the instance.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant, Fritz Meyer; Mr. De Villiers was for respondent, Charles Katzenellenbogen.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the balance of the evidence was with the plaintiff, who was a watchmaker, and against the defendant, who was a horse dealer. It was only to be expected that plaintiff would ask for a warranty. The evidence of defendant and his witnesses was very inconsistent.

Without calling upon Mr. De Villiers,

De Villiers, C.J.: At the time of the sale this horse was suffering from an ailment which would be apparent to anybody. The plaintiff, before he bought the horse, saw the animal, had an opportunity of inspecting it, and could have known whether this horse was suffering from an ailment or not. The plaintiff does not rely upon any latent defect in the horse, so as to entitle him to either of the remedies mentioned, but he relies upon an express warranty, that at the time before he purchased the horse and afterwards, there was an express warranty on the part of the defendant that the horse was sound. It is a question of fact. The plaintiff swears that there was this warranty, and he is supported by the old man Wiese, who is supposed to have been in an adjoining room at the time when the warranty was given. On the other hand, the defendant and his witnesses deny that the warranty was given and the Magistrate was satisfied that the evidence given on the part of the defendant was more trustworthy than the evidence given on the part of the plaintiff. It seems to me entirely a question of credibility in this case, and I see no reason why the Court should now disturb the decision of the Magistrate, who is satisfied from the manner in which the defendant and his witnesses gave their evidence that no express warranty as to soundness was given by the defendant. The Magistrate was therefore, right in his judgment, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed, with costs.

REX V. DU PLESSIS. { 1906.
 { Oct. 22nd.

Criminal summons—Amendment
—Autrefois acquit.

The appellant was charged in a Magistrate's Court with having stolen a horse from some person unknown, but upon the case being called, the police informed the Court that the owner had been discovered, and applied for an amendment of the summons by substituting the name of the owner. The Magistrate refused to allow the amendment, but allowed the first summons to be withdrawn and an amended summons to be proceeded with. The appellant having been convicted.

Held on appeal, that the Magistrate would have been justified in allowing an amendment of the original summons, and that the fact of the original summons having been withdrawn and an amended summons proceeded upon did not entitle the appellant to raise the defence of previous acquittal.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Upington, who had convicted appellant (Nicolas Jacobus du Plessis, a sheep farmer, of Prieska district) of the crime of theft, under Act No. 35 of 1893, and had sentenced him to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

The grounds of appeal were (1) that appellant had previously been tried and discharged for the same offence; (2) that legal and competent evidence tendered on his behalf was rejected and (3) that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and was contrary to law.

The charge on which appellant had been convicted was that he had stolen a horse, the property of one Uriah Weissohn. Defendant's version was that he had bought the horse from a Kafir while he (defendant) was returning from German territory, whence he had been taking sheep. He was first charged with the theft of a horse, the property of some person or persons unknown, but that charge was withdrawn because the police were not allowed to amend the indictment by inserting the name of the owner. Accused was immediately afterwards re-arrested and charged with the theft of Weissohn's horse.

The Magistrate, in his report to the Court, said that he refused to allow the record of the first trial to be produced merely for the purpose of proving that the accused had been before the Court, because it was irrelevant in view of the fact that the circumstances sought to be proved were fully detailed in the record after accused's plea. The defence raised was so fraught with improbabilities and so impossible that accused's attorney had not raised this matter in the grounds of appeal.

Mr. Upington was for appellant; Mr. Howell Jones was for the Crown.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If accused had pleaded, and he were in jeopardy at the time, he cannot be tried again.]

Mr. Upington said he felt that the correct position for him to take up was that his case was sufficiently strong, it being admitted that there had been a previous trial with reference to this horse, when he (counsel) showed that the Magistrate improperly excluded evidence which was legally admissible to prove the plea of autrefois acquit.

No record of the first case was eventually produced, with the consent of Mr. Upington.

De Villiers, C.J., said he found that at the first trial accused pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Upington said that the Magistrate ought to have entered a verdict of either guilty or not guilty.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose there is no doubt that it is the same horse that is mentioned in the further indictment?]

Mr. Upington said he did not think there was any question upon that point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the Magistrate might have amended the summons.]

That is quite true, but as a matter of fact he did not. Counsel submitted that the accused having been arraigned and pleaded, he was in jeopardy at the first trial, and the Magistrate had acted irregularly in not finding him either guilty or not guilty. Accused was entitled to call the Clerk of the Court to produce the records of the first trial. Counsel submitted that the plea of autrefois acquit was good. In the case of Rex v. Tsalatunga (20 Supreme Court Reports, 425), the accused was not in jeopardy. Counsel added that he did not propose to go into the question of fact, in view of the finding of the Magistrate. He submitted, however, that the proceedings were irregular, that admissible evidence was excluded, and that the appeal should be allowed.

Mr. Jones submitted that the point raised in this case should have been taken by way of review, rather than appeal. His learned friend's objection to the conviction was practically a technicality. In answer to that, he contended that he was also entitled to take the technical objection that there had been no acquittal. Furthermore, he submitted that a plea of autrefois acquit could not be sustained, because the prisoner was never in peril at the first trial, inasmuch as, even if the Magistrate had convicted, it would have been set aside on review. The Magistrate had not convicted or acquitted the accused on the first charge, and it would have been the duty of the prisoner to take the objection at the second hearing that the first charge had not been dealt with. The second indictment was, legally speaking, distinct from the first. If a prisoner pleaded autrefois acquit, he must show, not merely that he was in jeopardy at the first trial, but that the second indictment on which he was convicted charged a like offence to the first. Counsel quoted Archbold (p. 155), Stephen (p. 174), R. v. Green (D. and B. Crown Cases, Vol. 1, p. 113, R. v. Kork (3 Searle, 44), and submitted that the plea of autrefois acquit could not hold good in this case. There was a distinct variance between the two indictments, and the accused could not have been convicted on the first indictment on the evidence which was taken to be sufficient to convict on the second indictment.

Mr. Upington, in reply, submitted that if the accused could not have pleaded autrefois acquit, his client, if he had been convicted on the first indictment, might also have been convicted on the second, and thus have been punished twice over.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it appears that the accused was charged before the Resident Magistrate with the theft of a horse, the property of some person or persons unknown. Evidence was given in support of this charge, and there was then a remand for the purpose of further evidence until the 13th August. On the 13th August the case was again called on, and it then appeared that the person from whom the horse had been stolen was well known, that the police had got the information of the name of the person, and it was accordingly pointed out to the prosecution that the charge of stealing from a person unknown could not be proceeded with, because the person was, in point of fact, known. Thereupon the police withdrew from the prosecution, and there and then—whether the accused was arrested again is not perfectly clear—the second charge was made against accused, viz., that of stealing this horse from Weissohn. Before this was done, an application was made to the Magistrate for leave to amend the original summons by substituting the name of the prosecutor Weissohn for the words "from some person or persons unknown." The Magistrate would have been perfectly justified there and then in directing that such an amendment should be made. The Act 20 of 1856 (section 50) says that "it shall and may be lawful for such Court, before or at the hearing, to amend any plaint or summons or other record, in regard to the misdescription therein of . . . any particular or particulars." There is this important proviso: "That no such amendment be made, except in some particular which, in the judgment of such Court, is not material to the merits of the case, and by which the opposite party cannot be prejudiced in the conduct of his action, prosecution, or defence." There is nothing here to show that it would have in any way prejudiced the accused if the amendment had been made, because he came to be charged with the theft of a particular horse, and the fact that he is charged with stealing it from Weissohn, instead of from a person unknown, could not have affected his defence, and, therefore, the Magistrate would have been quite justified, seeing that there would have been no prejudice in the conduct of the defence, in allowing this amendment to be made. The Magistrate, however, instead of allowing the amendment, allowed the previous case to be withdrawn, and the further summons to be proceeded with, and the evidence was then taken on the second summons. Substantially, that is what took place. It was the same as if the amendment had been ordered. It may be that there was this difference, that a different piece of paper was used for the purpose of the fresh summons, but if the original summons had been used and had been amended, it would have made no possible difference to the accused. To my mind, that is really the answer to this appeal, that, practically and substantially, what the Magistrate did was to allow the amendment to the summons. In substance, that is what was done. The amendment was allowed and the suit proceeded upon what must be considered an amended summons, and, if that view of the case be correct, there is really no question of res judicata or previous conviction or acquittal, but the proceedings were fairly in order. The defence is not raised that there is a lis pendens, but the defence raised is that there is an actual acquittal. That is the sole defence that the Court can deal with now. Certainly, there is no proof that there was a previous acquittal. The original case was not proceeded with, and, therefore, it is impossible to say that there was such a res judicata between the parties as to prevent the prosecution from proceeding with the case against the accused of stealing from a person who was well known, viz., Weissohn. For these reasons, I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed, and it is unnecessary, therefore, to go into the further questions which have been raised in this case. I only wish to make this remark, that in regard to the case of Rez v. Twalatunga (20, Sup. Ct. Reports, 425), if there is any difference between the two cases, the difference is certainly in favour of the prosecution in the present case, because, in the case of Twalatunga, there had been an actual conviction, and that conviction had been set aside by the Chief Magistrate on the ground of irregularity, and, notwithstanding that there had been this conviction and discharge by the Chief Magistrate, this Court held that the plea of autrefois acquit was not a good one. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed. In regard to the merits of the case, I need not say much about it, because it seems to me perfectly clear that the theft was committed in the present case. The defence was wholly inadequate to meet the strong case which was made against accused of having stolen that horse. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

MADUNA V. GOETECH.

Prescription Act, 1861 — Acknowledgment of debt.

An oral acknowledgement of a debt for goods sold and delivered does not take a cause of action out of the operation of the 3rd section of Act 6 of 1861.

Bell and Moore v. Swart (16, S.C.R., 404) followed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Idutywa in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover £5 15s. 6d. balance of account for goods sold and delivered. The Magistrate had given judgment for the full amount.

Mr. De Villiers was for appellant, Klaas Maduna, a blacksmith; Mr.

Gutsche was for respondent, John Goetsch, a general dealer.

Mr. De Villiers said that the transactions in question went as far back as May, 1891, and that after 1892, there was a gap of about eleven years, during which there was no trading between the parties. There was a defence on the merits that no money was owing by defendant to plaintiff. The other defence taken in the Court below was that the old part of the account should have been prescribed.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the defendant was sued upon an open account, which commenced on the 11th May, 1891, and ended on the 6th October, 1904. The account was not a continuous one, because from 1893 to 1903, a period of ten years, there seemed to have been no dealings on credit between the defendant and the plaintiff. In March, 1903, fresh dealings began, and the total dealings from that date up to the 6th October, 1904, were to the extent of £3 14s. 9d. During this interval, however, the defendant paid £1 15s. on account, and the first question to be decided is, whether this £1 15s. is to be deducted from the old account, or whether it is to be specially appropriated to the new account. Well, upon this point the Magistrate has definitely found that the defendant agreed to let the old account be brought forward to the new account, and that the moneys paid in 1903 and 1904 were to be placed to the credit of the old account. There is not a distinct statement by the plaintiff himself to that effect, but if the defendant did agree, as stated by the plaintiff, that he would pay the old account, then it is a fair inference that in paying the £1 15s. he intended it to be placed to that old account, and also on the general principle that the older account would be paid before the newer account I am therefore not inclined to overrule the decision of the Magistrate in regard to this £1 15s., and I think it might fairly be deducted from the old account. But then arises the further question, whether, after so appropriating the £1 15s. to the old account, the plaintiff is entitled to sue for the balance of the old account. Now, that old account was certainly upwards of eight years old at the time when the alleged promise by the defendant was made to pay the old account. In the case of Bell and Moore v. Swart (16 Supreme Court Reports, 404) it was decided that an acknowledgment of a debt does not take the case out of the operation of the Prescription Act, 1861, unless made in writing by the party chargeable thereby. That was a decision of the full Court, and I see no reason whatever for questioning its correctness. The third section of the Act provides that the period of prescription for suits and actions for money due for goods sold and delivered shall be eight years. Then comes the eighth section, which provides that "in any suit or action in this colony in which any question shall arise concerning the effect, if any, of any acknowledgment of debt or any promise to pay any debt, or any payment of interest on any debt, or any part payment of the principal of any debt made by any person whosoever, whether the person sought to be charged in such suit or action or not, in taking any cause of action out of the operation of this Act, the question shall be judged of and determined in this colony in like manner and by the same rules and principles as at it would be judged of and determined in any of Her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster, in case the effect of the same acknowledgment, promise, or payment were in question at the same time in any of such last-mentioned Courts." But for the 8th section, therefore, the suit now in question would have been barred. If an acknowledgment of the debt during the interval is relied upon as taking the cause of action out of the operation of the Act, the effect of such acknowledgment must be decided upon as if the question had arisen under the law of England as it stood at the time of the passing of the Act. If by that law no effect would be given to the acknowledgment unless it were in writing, the same result would follow in this Colony. Well, that being so, it is clear that, although £1 15s. may be appropriated to the old debt, the balance of the old debt could no longer be sued upon, because it is prescribed, and the only account, therefore, which remains payable is the new one. That would be £3 14s. 9d. Therefore, the appeal must be allowed to this extent, that judgment must be entered for the sum of £3 14s. 9d. in the Magistrate's Court, with costs in the Court below, but as there has been a substantial alteration of the judgment on appeal, the respondent (that is the plaintiff) will have to pay the costs of appeal. The Magistrate's judgment is accordingly altered to judgment for plaintiff for £3 14s. 9d., with costs in the Court below, plaintiff to pay costs of appeal.

SWINTON V. BOARD OF EXECUTORS.

1906.

Agency—Negligence.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Swinton, of Plumstead, against Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos, in his capacity as secretary of the Board of Executors, to recover damages for alleged negligence in dealing with certain property during plaintiff's absence.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Plumstead, in the Cape Division, and is married out of community of property to Frederick William Swinton, by whom she is herein assisted as far as need be. The defendant is sued in his capacity as secretary of the Board of Executors, Cape Town.

2. In or about the month of April, 1901, the plaintiff, having in contemplation a visit to Europe, signed a general power of attorney in customary form, in favour of defendant to act as her agent and otherwise represent her during her absence from this colony, and defendant accepted and acted on the said mandate and thereby undertook to and did manage her affairs during her said absence.

3. Plaintiff furthermore, inter alia, arranged with defendant for commission and reward to let, on her behalf and as her agent, certain furnished house, premises, and grounds at Plumstead, known as Talana, and a certain cottage on the said grounds, all belonging to plaintiff, and defendant thereupon and thereby undertook and arranged with plaintiff to use due care and diligence about securing fit and proper persons to be tenants of the said Talana house and premises and the said cottage before letting the same to such persons as tenants, and about fixing, receiving, and recovering the rents respectively payable by such tenants.

4. (a) In Talana house was a large quantity of furniture of considerable value, and there was, further, packed in boxes and packing cases a large quantity of valuables, consisting of silver, silver-plate, etc., and of household and other linen, stored in one of the bedrooms of Talana, save that one large packing case was left deposited in the passage upstairs; (b) plaintiff duly gave defendant notice that the contents of the said boxes and cases were valuable and of the nature of the said contents and gave instructions that the same were to be locked up in one room or removed from the premises for greater security; (c) defendant, notwithstanding the above notice and instructions, failed and neglected, when giving occupation of Talana as hereafter mentioned, to lock up, remove or otherwise secure or care for the said valuables and failed to carry out the instructions received from plaintiff.

5. Notwithstanding the premises the defendant, without using due care and diligence let the said Talana house and premises to one Captain Corbalis in or about July, 1902, without ascertaining that the said person was a fit and proper person to become such tenant; nor was he such fit and proper person. Corbalis thereupon was given, and entered into, occupation of the said house and premises.

6. Thereafter defendant negligently and carelessly allowed Corbalis to fall into arrears with his rent and he paid no rent after April, 1903, and defendant subsequently negligently and unlawfully failed to take prompt steps for the ejectment of Corbalis or for the recovery of the arrear rent, and unduly and negligently delayed, and gave him time for payment, till January, 1904, when he instituted legal proceedings for the recovery of the arrear rent in plaintiff's name.

7. After certain postponements defendant obtained judgment in May, 1904, for £144; the cost of the proceedings amounting to £34 18s. 8d.

8. Notwithstanding the premises defendant wrongfully and unlawfully left the said Corbalis in occupation by his family after he himself had left the Colony till June, 1904, without taking sufficient or any steps or exercising due diligence to ascertain the condition of the house, and the goods, furniture, and valuables therein, before or at the termination of the occupancy. Corbalis is no longer resident in this colony since his said departure.

9. Corbalis was not a fit and proper person as aforesaid, and while in occupation he, by himself, his family, agents, or servants, negligently, wrongfully, and unlawfully (1) damaged, removed, lost or destroyed a considerable part of the said furniture, the loss sustained herein being £218 11s. 6d., and further (2) broke open the aforesaid boxes and packing cases and extracted the contents therefrom, and the greater part thereof is now destroyed, removed, or missing, and in any event is lost to the plaintiff to the value of £1,138 13s. 10d.; the said sums together amounting to £1,357 5s. 4d. Particulars of these amounts have been supplied to defendant.

10. Alternatively to paragraph 9 plaintiff says that defendant negligently and wrongfully failed, and still fails, to return to her the furniture and the said contents of boxes and packing-cases, or the value thereof, or any part of the aforesaid goods or value.

11. Defendant has credited plaintiff with the amount of the rent for the said Talana house and premises up to June, 1904, but has wrongfully and unlawfully debited her account with the aforesaid sum of £34 18s. 8d. for costs, and plaintiff is entitled to recover the same by reason of defendant's negligence as herein set forth, especially in paragraphs 3, 5, 6, and 8.

12. By reason of the premises plaintiff is unable to obtain compensation from the said Corbalis for the loss, removal, damage, and destruction hereinbefore complained of, or the payment of the aforesaid costs, and is entitled to claim payment thereof from the defendant as and for damages.

13. Alternatively to the above, and claiming leave to refer thereto so far as necessary, plaintiff says: (a) That defendant, as holding her general power of attorney, undertook and agreed, in consideration of so being appointed her agent, and of receiving the aforesaid commission and reward, to act in plaintiff's interest, and as her agent and on her behalf, to take such measures and exercise such care and diligence as might be necessary to protect the property and interests of the plaintiff. (b) The defendant failed to exercise due care and diligence, or duly to protect her aforesaid property and goods entrusted to him as aforesaid, or duly to carry out the terms of the said agency, or to hand over to her, as principal, the property, goods, and valuables received by him in his said capacity or entrusted to his care as aforesaid, and by reason of such neglect and failure, plaintiff has suffered the loss set out in the preceding paragraphs, to wit, of £218 11s. 6d., of £1,138 13s. 10d., and of £34 18s. 8d., and is entitled to be paid the same by defendant as and for damages.

14. (a) Plaintiff also says, for a further count, that in or about the month of October, 1904, defendant, acting as agent as aforesaid for plaintiff for reward, negligently and carelessly gave occupation of the aforesaid cottage to one Melt Stephanus van der Spuy, without carefully and diligently, and as it was his duty to do, stipulating or contracting for the payment of any rent, or fixing the amount thereof, or binding the said Van der Spuy to the payment thereof; and he negligently failed and omitted after the commencement and during the continuance of such occupation to require, or make claim for any amount as and for rent or use and occupation, and left the said Van der Spuy nine months in such occupation as aforesaid. Plaintiff being still absent in Europe during substantially the whole period referred to in this paragraph. (b) The rental value or fair payment for use and occupation of the said cottage was £3 a month, being £27 for nine months, and the defendant received, or paid over to plaintiff no part of such sum, and by his said negligence the said sum of £27, less £1 7s. for commission to him at 5 per cent., has been lost to plaintiff, who has not recovered and is unable to recover any part thereof from the said Van der Spuy, the latter denying any liability therefor; and plaintiff is entitled, owing to defendant's negligence and default, to recover the sum of £25 13s. from him as and for damages.

15. Alternatively to the above, in paragraph 14, plaintiff says that if defendant did contract for the payment of any rent for the said cottage, he carelessly and negligently failed to recover any part of the same or to pay it over to plaintiff, who has lost the said sum of £25 13s. accordingly, and is entitled to recover the same from defendant as and for damages.

16. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled, to entitle plaintiff to be paid the sums amounting in all to £1,417 17s., but defendant refuses to pay any part of the same.

Wherefore plaintiff claims from defendant in his said capacity: (a) Payment of £1,417 17s. as and for damages; (b) interest a tempore morae; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 2 of the declaration, the defendant says that the power of attorney referred to was signed on the 13th November, 1899, and was still in force in April, 1901, when the plaintiff proceeded to Europe on a visit, which she then contemplated would be for a period of only about five months. Save as aforesaid, the defendant admits the allegations in that paragraph.

3. As to paragraph 3 of the declaration, the defendant says that it was not until the year 1902 that the plaintiff, after failing to find through a broker appointed by herself a tenant for the house, premises, and grounds mentioned in the said paragraph, specially requested him to let the house, premises, and grounds. He admits that he became bound in law to exercise due care and diligence as the plaintiff's agent for reward in and about such letting, and in and about the fixing, receiving, and recovering of rent from tenants, but he denies that any special agreement was made in regard thereto, and, save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations in that paragraph.

4. Save as to the large packing-case deposited in the passage upstairs, and box of plate, the defendant had and has no knowledge of the existence in Talana House of the valuables alleged to consist of silver, silver plate, etc., and of household and other linen. He was aware that there was a large quantity of furniture of considerable value, and he caused a proper inventory of the same to be made. The silver or silver plate in the large packing case and the box of plate aforesaid he caused to be brought and kept for safe custody in the strong room of the Board of Executors; save as aforesaid, he denies all the allegations in paragraph 4 of the declaration, specially denying that the plaintiff gave him the notice and instructions mentioned in sub-paragraph (b), and that he failed and neglected in any way to perform his duty or carry out any instructions received from the plaintiff as alleged in sub-paragraph (c) of that paragraph.

5. He admits that Talana House and premises were let by him in or about July, 1902, to Captain Corballis, who was given, and entered into, occupation thereof, but he denies all other allegations in paragraph 5 of the declaration, and says that he used due care in so letting the said house.

6. As to paragraphs 6 and 7 of the declaration, he admits that Corballis fell into arrears with his rent, and made no payments after April, 1903; he admits that he did not take steps to eject Corballis, that he instituted proceedings, after many demands for payment, in January, 1904, and obtained judgment as alleged, and that the costs were £34 18s. 8d., but he denies the other allegations in paragraph 6, and says specially that he acted throughout both in not ejecting Corballis and in giving time for the payment of rent with a view to the plaintiff's interests in the matter of retaining for her, at a time when tenants for such a property were scarce, a tenant who was reasonably believed to be possessed of ample means to pay all rent, though for the time being he was not able to make prompt payments.

7. He says specially that Corballis, before he left the Colony, convened a meeting of his creditors and laid before them representations previously made to and believed by the defendant as to his having large sums of money due to him by way of inheritance, and that the creditors accepted the said representations and permitted the said Corballis to leave the Colony for the purpose of obtaining the means to pay all his debts, and he (the defendant) acting with such prudence on behalf of the plaintiff as he would have exhibited in his own affairs, agreed with the other creditors to permit Corballis to leave for such purpose; and also permitted him, by his family, to continue to occupy "Talana" after Corballis left this Colony. He admits that Corballis did not return to this Colony and is not now resident here, and that he has failed to pay the rent due under the said judgment or after the period to which such judgment refers; but, save as aforesaid, he denies all the allegations in paragraph 8 of the Declaration, specially denying that he failed before the termination of the occupancy to ascertain the condition of the said house.

8. With reference to paragraph 8 and also to paragraph 9 of the Declaration, he says that the wife, family, and servants of the said Corballis left the house in June, 1904, without notice to him, and thereafter he ascertained that certain of the furniture, according to the inventory kept by him, was no longer in the house, and other part was damaged, but he does not know how or by whom such furniture was removed or damaged, and he specially denies that he acted in the matter wrongfully, unlawfully, or negligently as alleged. He admits that the plaintiff has supplied particulars of her alleged losses referred to in paragraph 9, but wholly denies the correctness of the said particulars; and, save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations in paragraph 9 of the declaration.

9. As to paragraph 10 of the declaration, he has returned to the plaintiff the silver or silver plate and box of plate stored as aforesaid in the Board's strong room, and he denies all allegations in that paragraph.

10. He admits the allegations in paragraph 11, save that he denies that he acted wrongfully or unlawfully in debiting her account as therein alleged.

11. He denies the allegations in paragraph 12 of the declaration, and as to paragraph 13, he begs to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea, and denies the allegations in paragraph 13, specially denying that he failed to exercise due care or diligence, and that he is responsible to the plaintiff in respect of the losses which she alleges that she has sustained.

12. As to paragraph 14 of the declaration, he says that the said Van der Spuy continued for nine months from October, 1904, in occupation of the cottage therein referred to; the cottage is part of the property known as "Talana House" and premises, and he admits that during the said period Van der Spuy did not pay rent, but he permitted the said Van der Spuy to remain in occupation and did not press him for rent, in order that he might look after the plaintiff's property. He denies that he acted negligently in regard to the occupation of Van der Spuy, who had previously paid a rental of £2 per month, and he denies that he is liable to the plaintiff in the sum of £25 13s. or any part thereof. Save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the declaration.

13. He admits that he refuses to pay to the plaintiff the sums claimed or any part thereof; but otherwise he denies the allegations in paragraph 16 of the Declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

N 2

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for defendant.

Douglas Hoets, architect, of Cape Town, gave evidence on a plan of the house which he had made for the purposes of the case.

Edith Swinton, plaintiff in the case, stated that there were eighteen rooms in Talana House. Before she left for Europe in May, 1901, there were some thirty boarders staying at the house. In April, 1901, she saw Mr. Roos, and gave him her general power of attorney to raise a loan by mortgage to enable her to go to Europe, and also to act for witness during her absence. In November, 1899, she signed a power of attorney to the defendant. Defendant was to let the house and all the valuables were to be packed and deposited in the nurse's room. If that room was required the valuables were to be removed to a place of safety. Witness wanted £50 a month for the house and the defendant laughed and thought £25 to £30 was sufficient. The defendant accepted witness's instructions. Mr. Coulton, who had been boarding with her, said that he might get a tenant for £50 a month, and witness said if he should hear of anyone it would be necessary to see her agent, Mr. Roos. The defendant was aware that witness was packing the plate in packing cases. While she was in Europe in November, 1902, she heard from the defendant that the house had been let. She never heard anything about the arrears of rent. She received a letter dated 13th July, 1904, in which the defendant informed her that the directors were not prepared to make further advances on Talana House, that the tenant had left the house, without paying rent, in a disgraceful state, the furniture being damaged and portion of the goods removed. In May, 1905, she returned to Cape Town and the defendant informed her that the house and cottage were let. Mr. Roos said she would find the house in a disgraceful state and some goods missing. The defendant gave witness an inventory of the house, as Captain Corballis entered it and asked witness to make a note of what was missing, and they would make good the loss.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: She signed a power in November, 1899, in favour of the Board. She was certainly not mistaken in stating that she signed another power to Mr. Roos in April, 1901. The inventory she made of the things was locked up in the box. It was not after the Board of Executors failed to advance her more money she decided to take action against them for the loss. She had not written to a certain lady asking for an explanation as to how some of the furniture of witness was sold at an auction of that of the former. The German linen she valued at £200, although she had it in her possession for ten years. She claimed £250 for a stamp album which her daughter subsequently claimed from witness. The defendant was told upon several occasions if he let the house to remove the cases and store them for safe keeping. The defendant never asked for an inventory of the articles. In 1900 the personal property of witness was insured for £548 by the defendant. Captain Corballis should have been sued sooner; the defendant would have secured him in gaol. Witness's grievance was that Corballis should have been allowed to go away, while his wife remained in the house.

J. E. van der Byl, of Wynberg, who had frequently visited patients at Talana House, gave evidence as to the superior quality of the furniture and plate.

Mr. F. W. Swinton, husband of the plaintiff, stated that he was present at the interview with the defendant when the general power of attorney was signed. Mr. Roos was distinctly informed of the valuables having been packed in boxes, and he was asked to see that the room was locked or the boxes removed to a place of safety according to circumstances.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: A general power of attorney was signed in April, 1901, and witnessed by two of the clerks of the Board of Executors. The defendant was not given any information in writing of the contents of the boxes, but as receiver he knew well what the plaintiff was in possession of. Mr. Coulton merely spoke in a friendly manner as to a tenant, and witness told him if he did find one to go to Mr. Roos. The defendant could not have taken the slightest interest in the place Corballis might have been a captain, but he was not a captain "proper." Mr. Roos must certainly have been charmed with the presence of Captain Corballis.

Wm. le Sueur, law agent, living at Mowbray, stated that he checked the inventory with the goods in September last, and took a note of what was missing.

I. E. Coulton, broker, of Cape Town, who had been a boarder at Talana House before the plaintiff left for Europe, stated that Mrs. Swinton told him that she had seen Mr. Roos about the letting of the house, and that he did not think she would get more than £25 a month for it. Witness incidentally remarked that he thought he could get more than that for it. The matter was never put into his hands, but the plaintiff said if he could find a tenant he must see Mr. Roos. Witness gave evidence as to the high class of the furniture and plate, and to the state of the house on Mrs. Swinton's return.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: It was not so difficult to let a house at that time.

James Joseph Donner, tailor, of Wynberg, stated that he was living in the cottage on the property when Mrs. Swinton left for Europe. After the plaintiff and the maid, Miss Henley, left, witness told Mr. Roos that the house was locked up, and the servant had gone. One of the clerks in the office then said that the keys of the house had been sent to him. Mr. Roos and the clerk who had the key looked over the house before it was let. Captain Corballis asked witness to carry the boxes from the room above the kitchen to one near the stable. Captain Corballis told witness that he had opened the boxes, and there was nothing in them but rubbish, and he wanted them out of the house. Witness then went into the office of the Board of Executors and told Mr. Blake about the boxes being removed. Mr. Blake said that Captain Corballis was the boss of the house, and he could move the boxes if he liked. Witness did not tell Blake that the boxes had been opened.

Caroline Donner, wife of the last witness, stated she had been a servant to Mrs. Swinton for seven years. She saw her husband carry the boxes down to the coachman's room at the instructions of Captain Corballis. She saw Captain Corballis's housekeeper take the linen.

Hermanus, a coloured labourer, gave evidence as to rendering assistance in the removal of the boxes at the request of Captain Corballis.

Annie Fredericks, a coloured washer-woman, stated that there was a good deal of linen sent out from Captain Corballis's house. The initials on the linen was "E. M." Captain Corballis paid her £5 a month for the washing. Witness was paid extra for the curtains. When witness called for the washing she saw the boxes in the nurse's room, and the case was on the landing. Later on she saw the case lying empty at the back of the house.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The first week she washed for Mrs. Corballis a lot of good linen was handed to witness. Mrs. Corballis always told her to be careful with the linen, as it belonged to the house.

Dora Matz, of Plumstead, stated that Mrs. Corballis, called on her, and offered for sale a sofa and two chairs. Witness called at Talana House by appointment, and after viewing the furniture Mrs. Corballis said it had been sold.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: When witness heard the original price she believed that Mrs. Corballis was not disposing of her own property.

John Chas. Mitchell, of Messrs. Garlicks, stated that to re-upholster the three arm-chairs would cost £26 5s. The class of the furniture was decidedly good. The Chesterfield could not be purchased under £30. The witness gave evidence as to the price of other articles of furniture.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He was not allowing for wear and tear, and was quoting merchants' prices along with profits.

Mr. Nicholls, manager of the crockery department of Messrs. Cartwright and Co., stated that champagne glasses, produced, would cost £1 5s. per dozen.

Annie van der Spuy, who hired the cottage from Mrs. Corballis, stated that when she was a fortnight in occupation, Mrs. Corballis asked as a favour for a month's rent in advance, which witness gave her. Immediately after that Mrs. Corballis went away. Witness continued to live in the cottage, and took care of Talana House. When Mr. Jackson came to live in the house witness called at the Board of Executors to know what her position was, and one of the clerks said she was to stay in the cottage, as Jackson would only be in the house four months, and she need not pay rent. The clerk was to inform Mr. Roos, but Mr. Roos never wrote to witness. Subsequently the Board of Executors demanded from witness nine months' rent, and when witness drew the clerk's attention to what he had previously said, he said he did not remember anything about it.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Johannes N. Roos, secretary of the Board of Executors, stated the Board was largely connected in collecting rents and letting property. The first time he met the plaintiff was in 1899, when he was appointed as receiver in the division of the estate. He visited the house in September, 1899, and took an inventory of the furniture in the place. The tenor of the plaintiff's correspondence to the Board then was one of thankfulness. There was a division of the property, and the plaintiff got Talana House, and about three morgen of ground. In November, 1899, a general power of attorney was handed in to the Board through Mr. C. H. van Zyl. That was the only power he ever received. There was not the slightest truth in the statement that a general power of attorney was signed in witness's favour in April, 1901. If he had received a general power he would have submitted it to his Board. Witness had no knowledge whatever of the cases referred to by the plaintiff. As far as he was aware the matter had been withdrawn from him, and another party was to let the house. When plaintiff went away she failed to leave an inventory or keys with defendant. Before the plaintiff left she gave no special instructions as to the letting of the house.

Upon receipt of a letter from Miss Henley, witness sent Blake out to Talana House and instructed him to secure any valuables. Blake brought back certain parcels of valuables, which were locked up in the Board's strong room. In the several letters he received from the plaintiff there was no mention of the locked-up cases. Captain Corballis was apparently a gentleman in all respects, although he was temporarily embarrassed for ready money. A large number of business men gave Corballis considerable credit. On the 5th January, 1904, Corballis was summoned in the Supreme Court for £144 for rent. Captain Corballis put in a counter claim for £160 4s. 8d., for improvements to the house and cottage. The Board repudiated the accounts, as Corballis had done the work without any authority. Corballis produced documentary evidence that he had a valuable estate in Ireland, and the creditors, whom Corballis mentioned, signed permission to his going to England to get his affairs settled. Subsequently Corballis went insolvent, and other creditors than those he mentioned in the first instance proved in the estate. The only assets discovered were a pony and trap. When Corballis left he gave witness to understand that he was coming back to take his sons to England to complete their studies. Corballis wrote from the boat asking witness to look out for a farm for him upon his return. In the course of one of his letters Corballis stated "that after the way he had been done in South Africa he would be very careful about investing any more money." Witness called upon Mrs. Corballis, and she gave him the impression she was waiting for her husband's return to South Africa. When witness was at the house what he saw of it was in good condition. Letters were received from both Captain Corballis and Mrs. Corballis repudiating any responsibility for the state of the house, which they said was in excellent condition when they vacated it. He did the best he could to protect the plaintiff's interest. Witness did not say to the plaintiff that he would bear the loss of what was missing. Witness had great sympathy for Mrs. Swinton's loss, and engaged, at the expense of the Board, Mr. Osberg to assist her in the inquiry. Never for a moment did he think that the plaintiff was going to sue the Board for heavy damages. Donner did not tell witness that Corballis had removed the boxes.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Under the general power, the Board could have let the house, and the reason it was not let to Taylor was that he wanted a lease for eighteen months, and Mrs. Swinton was expected back from Europe before the expiration of that time. The first inventory ought to have been signed by the incoming tenant, and it was an omission not to have had this done. A copy of it should also have been given to Captain Corballis. There was no difference in the case taken of a furnished house and an unfurnished house. The original power of attorney showed that the power of attorney to pass the bond was signed by Edith Swinton and F. W. Swinton. The power might have been signed in his presence, but he did not remember if it was. He could not recollect the plaintiff telling him that certain goods were locked up. It was not necessary to inspect the house before Captain Corballis left the house. The plaintiff was credited with the rent due by Corballis by a special resolution of the Board. He did not know of his own knowledge that Captain Corballis had ceded his estate in Ireland to his sister.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Corballis did complain that Donner had cut down the trees. All the time witness was the general agent of the plaintiff.

Chas. A. W. Blake, clerk in the office of the Board of Executors, stated that before the plaintiff went to England, he had no knowledge of any specific instructions about the locking up of certain cases. The maid, Miss Henley, wrote after the plaintiff left and requested the Board to pay some small accounts she had incurred. Witness went out to the house, and had instructions from Mr. Roos to remove anything of value. Miss Henley showed him some valuables in the lower portion of the house, and a case on the landing, which she said contained valuables. The lid of the case was unfastened. Witness cleared the case, which contained no German linen. There were silver or plated articles wrapped up in paper in the case, and witness took anything he thought of value. Miss Henley said there were other boxes in a room, of which the plaintiff had the key, containing personal effects of the plaintiff. The inventory was made at the time Captain Corballis got possession. When the witness took the inventory, there were no cases in No. 10 room. The inventory was a correct one of what was in the house. A fruit-stand, similar to the one produced, witness saw in the house, although the plaintiff had said it was packed away. Other articles similar to those produced were inventoried by witness, although the plaintiff said she had them packed away. Corballis, to witness's knowledge, was put to considerable expense in connection with the house. Donner never told witness that cases had been removed from the room over the kitchen. He found no packing-cases where they were alleged to be. In his opinion, £100 would amply cover the whole of the articles, as stated by the plaintiff to be actually missing.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Unfortunately for the creditors, Captain Corballis entertained on a lavish scale. It was reported to him that the maid Miss Henley, after she vacated the house in June or July, 1901, left the keys at the office of the Board. When witness went out to the house in June, it was on general instructions to see the maid with reference to the accounts, to see whether the things on the place were in order, and to remove anything of value.

P. de Wet, a clerk at the Board of Executors, said he saw no cases packed away in a room, or they would have been placed in the inventory. Upon information from the police that the house was vacant, he went down again and found the place in a very disordered state. Subsequently he visited the house on another occasion, on receiving information from the police that the place had been broken into, but did not notice that anything had been taken away.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He did not remember telling Mrs. Van der Spuy to remain at the cottage, as Jackson would only be staying on at the house for a short time. On the second occasion upon which he went down, he found a pane of glass broken, with bloodmarks around the breakage. The aperture was big enough for a man to get through.

George Wm. Dillman, chief clerk of the Board of Executors, recollected a general power passed by the plaintiff in favour of the Board in 1899. There was also a special power to pass a bond passed by the plaintiff before her departure. He knew of no other general power. About a couple of months before the occupancy of Captain Corballis, Mr. Roos and witness, having business in the vicinity, looked through the house. Neither witness nor Mr. Roos said anything to Donner about the silver. On a second occasion, when Captain Corballis was in the house, Mr. Roos and witness called at the house, and noticed some of the trees cut down. Near Donner's place, there was a quantity of cut wood.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Mr. Roos and witness simply went out to see if the place was all right.

Mr. Zoutendyk, who conducted the sale at Mrs. Bourne's, said the auction was well attended. Good prices were realised, and £8 10s. was fair price for the sofa.

Reginald Simpson, an attorney, in the firm of Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Low, stated he was there when Captain Corballis made certain arrangements with his creditors in 1904. Business men as creditors attended the meeting. Corballis said that he had a considerable estate in Ireland, and he was allowed to proceed to Ireland to get his affairs settled. Witness was given a general power of attorney by Corballis.

A. N. Foote, of the firm of E. R. Syfret and Co., sole trustee in the estate of James Corballis, stated that at the second meeting the Board did not prove any claim.

G. B. van Zyl, of Van Zyl and Buissinne, stated that he knew Captain Corballis personally. Witness had no hesitation in recommending him to the Board. Corballis was introduced to him by reliable people.

Constable Petersen, of the Wyuberg Police, gave evidence as to the condition in which he found the house after Captain Corballis left.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

The plaintiff, recalled by his lordship, stated that the linen was taken into account in the £600 valuation in the division of the estate. It had all been lost except the couple of pieces produced.

Mr. McGregor said the fundamental and crucial question was whether loss had been sustained. If there had been a conspiracy and the claim was a bogus one, then away went the plaintiff's case, and she would deserve not one penny nor a particle of sympathy. But the inventories clearly showed that there had been a loss. Where had the valuable German linen, glass ware and plate vanished to? They could not believe it had disappeared at the wave of a magician's wand. Counsel laid stress on the fact that the evidence of the plaintiff as to the packing of the valuables in boxes, which were placed in an upstairs room, was fully corroborated by the witness Donner. The plaintiff had left this valuable property in the hands of the Board of Executors, who were her agents under a general power of attorney and whose duty it was to protect her interests in her absence. His submission was that the defendant Board had a special duty towards his client who was away in Europe, and that there was a failure of diligence. Instead of a full payment of rent as arranged by Capt. Corballis, they only found a succession of arrears. Mr. Roos's memory must have been at fault when he said Mrs. Swinton had never mentioned to him that there were valuables packed away in boxes. Which was the more likely that Mrs. Swinton had forgotten to mention this to Mr. Roos or that Mr. Roos, a busy man, had forgotten that the matter was mentioned? There was no imputation of corrupt motives or improper conduct on the part of the defendant, but there had been a failure to protect the plaintiff's interests.

Mr. Schreiner, for the defendant, said no one was disposed to say that Mrs. Swinton had not sustained a substantial loss. No one had denied it; but that was not the first question; it was whether the defendant was responsible, and if so, what was the amount of the substantial loss. The real issues were: first of all, did the plaintiff, before leaving, give notice to the Board that she had packed up valuables, and notify to the Board what they contained, and give further instructions that if the house was let the valuables should be removed and placed in a locked-up room; then, secondly, did the defendant let the house to a fit and proper person? These were the two main issues. With regard to the latter, it was admitted that this should have been done, but the point was had the defendant used every reasonable precaution. In regard to the rent, the plaintiff had lost nothing. As to the first issue, all the probabilities were, as shown by the evidence, that there had been no communication by Mrs. Swinton to Mr. Roos that she had packed the cases, and what their contents were. If, as Mrs. Swinton said, she had seen Mr. Roos some fifteen or twenty times on the subject of the house and the valuables, he could not possibly have forgotten it. No doubt, the instructions were given to Mr. Coulton, but never to the Board of Executors. No doubt the cases were packed, but the question was whether through negligence the Board was responsible. The Board was sorry for the loss, but the point was had these valuables ever been placed in their custody. As to letting the house to Captain Corballis, there was every reason to believe that he was a fit and proper person, and he was introduced to the Board by Mr. Van Zyl. He submitted that initio there was no negligence on the part of the Board. Counsel proceeded to deal with the questions of the costs incurred by the Board in connection with his rent and the non-recovery of rent from Van der Spuy for occupancy of the cottage. He urged that on the four points judgment should be given for the defendant, and that the jury should find that no instructions with regard to the valuables had been given to the Board; that Captain Corballis was a fit and proper person; that the costs were incurred in plaintiff's interest, and that there was no proof of damage having been sustained in consequence of proceedings not having been taken against Van der Spuy.

Mr. McGregor having replied,

Hopley, J., said the case rested upon an allegation of negligence in the discharge of certain duties by a general agent, whom the plaintiff left here upon her departure for Europe. The whole case was based upon negligence and that, after all, was the crucial point in the whole thing. The plaintiff alleged that in April, 1901, she signed a general power of attorney and upon that point the first difference in the evidence arose. There was nothing very important in that save as a matter of accuracy in recollection as between the plaintiff and defendant. No such power was produced, but it had not been suggested by the plaintiff that it had been made away with by the defendant for any sinister purpose. The only suggestion was that it had been mislaid. It would be for the jury to say whether the plaintiff was wrong in saying that a general power of attorney had been signed in 1901. Since 1899 they had it that this property had been her own upon the division of the estate. They had it that she said she then put the whole of her affairs into the hands of Mr. Roos as secretary to the defendant Board. The departure of the plaintiff for Europe seemed to have been a little bit hurried and that was confirmed by the fact that at that time the affairs at the boarding house had not entirely been wound up. Her absence at that time was contemplated to be something like six months, and she states a man named Donner was to be caretaker of the place at a reduced rent, a nominal rent, or no rent at all. The plaintiff and the husband swore positively that they were very explicit about the instructions given to the defendant about the boxes. The instructions were denied, and that seemed to his Lordship to be the one point upon which they would have to decide the case. If explicit instructions were given to the agent to do a certain thing and he failed to carry out these instructions, and a loss occurred, then they might fairly say that the agent was negligent and the agent would have to bear the brunt of the loss. Therefore they must carefully consider this portion of the evidence and see who, in their opinion, was the most likely to be right. They would have to say whether the plaintiff, who was making out a case of negligence against the defendant, had proved her case. They must remember at the time these conversations were going on probably there was no idea that there would be any loss. Now they were considering it when the loss had occurred and a serious loss in all probability. It was suggested that in all probability the instructions were given to another person in Mr Coulton, the broker and house agent, and that the plaintiff was confusing him with Mr. Roos. The first point was that she undoubtedly talked to Mr. Roos at one period about the letting of the house, and that there was a difference of opinion between them as to what the house might fetch, and when the plaintiff mentioned £50 a month Mr. Roos laughed and said £25 or £30 would be much more likely. Then the plaintiff suggested that Mr. Coulton would be able to get £50, and it would be for the jury to say whether at that time she was looking more to Mr Coulton or more to Mr. Roos for the purpose of getting the rent that she hoped to obtain. It was almost impossible to think that a business man like Mr. Roos would have forgotten the injunctions alleged to have been given him in the course of the many interviews. Then it would be for the jury, on the question of a suitable tenant, to say whether or not Captain Corballis, who had formerly held a commission in the army and was subsequently agent for several large firms, was a fit and proper person at that time. It would be remembered that he was introduced to the Board by Mr. Van Zyl, and with the house vacant for such a long time it would be for the jury to say whether the defendant had been negligent in letting him the house. All the inquiries that could have been made with regard to Captain Corballis would have been with regard to his ability to pay the rent. The Board could hardly be expected to inquire into the man's honesty or whether he was a person likely to steal furniture. As a matter of fact no claim was made for the rent, as it had been paid, and how that was done need not trouble the jury. If the plaintiff did not tell the Board about the boxes, how could the defendant tell that Captain Corballis was unwarrantably using the goods. It was a maxim of law that everyone was supposed to be innocent until proved guilty. The other points were the costs incurred by the Board in trying to recover rent from Corballis and the question of the rent of the cottage, which was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Van der Spuy. It would be for the jury to find as a matter of common-sense whether there had been negligence on the part of the defendant, and if so what damage had the plaintiff suffered.

After an absence of fully an hour the jury, by a majority of 7 to 2, found for the plaintiff for £300 damages.

Mr. McGregor moved for judgment in that amount with costs, including costs of the plan of the house.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiff in the sum of £300 with costs and costs of the plan.

In reply to his lordship, the Foreman of the jury said the matter of the stamp album had not been considered in the sum mentioned, and his lordship remarked that the album remained free and unadjudicated upon.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PINTO V. PINTO.

{ Oct. 23rd.

This was an action brought by Joseph William Jacobus Pinto, of the Mowbray district, against his wife, Letitia Elizabeth Frances Pinto, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the two children, and a declaration that defendant had forfeited any benefits of the marriage in community.

Mr. Watermeyer was for plaintiff; there was no appearance for defendant.

Mr. Watermeyer said that defendant was sued by edictal citation. Efforts had been made to serve the citation upon her at Delagoa Bay, but these had failed, and publication had been given in "O Futuro" as directed.

The declaration set out that the parties were married on the 14th April, 1895, at St. Alban's, De Beers district of Kimberley. Defendant deserted plaintiff in June, 1899, and had not returned to him.

Wm Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Office, produced formal proof of the marriage.

The plaintiff gave evidence. He stated that one day in June, 1899, he had a little quarrel with his wife about his food, and on the following day she left him. He did not know of any good reason why she should not have continued to live with him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th November, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the 12th January, 1907, why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, same order as to service as directed in regard to the citation.

BROMAN V. BILLINGHAM.

This was an action brought by Carl Broman, a farmer, Burghersdorp division, against Walter Burns Billingham, trading as Billingham and Co., at East London, to recover £325, with interest on a certain promissory note.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that defendant was indebted to him in the sum of £325, upon a promissory note for that amount, bearing interest at 6 per cent. from the 13th April, 1904, and payable on the 13th April, 1906, at the African Banking Corporation, East London. The note was made, and signed by defendant q.q., as agent of one Albert Parker, in favour of plaintiff, and defendant delivered the said note to Dreyfus and Co., of East London. Plaintiff became and was the owner in due course. Alternatively, plaintiff referred to an agreement of the 21st March, 1904, confirmed by a subsequent agreement of the 30th March, for the sale to Albert Parker of a certain hotel and other property at Odendaalstroom, the purchase price being paid by £1,000 in cash, and four promissory notes for the balance. The notes were endorsed by defendant. The last note for the balance of £325 was not yet paid. Parker was outside the jurisdiction of the Court. Plaintiff had given transfer of the hotel and erven, and he was ready and willing to give transfer to defendant of the remaining erven when he got transfer from the vendor.

Defendant pleaded that he was justified in refusing to pay the balance of £325 on the last note, inasmuch as plaintiff's delay in not giving transfer of the erven was wholly unreasonable, plaintiff having had nearly 2½ years in which to give transfer. Defendant further set up an agreement, which he said was entered into shortly before the note of the 13th October, 1905, became due, that he would not be called upon to pay the last note unless transfer of the remaining erven had been given. Defendant, relying on this promise, paid the note of October 13, 1905.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that there had been any delay for which he was responsible, and he also repudiated the alleged agreement of October, 1905.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Dr. Greer) was for plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Russell) was for defendant.

Plaintiff said that in 1904 he was an hotelkeeper at Odendaalstroom. In March of that year he met Billingham and Parker, and he had certain negotiations which resulted in the agreement of the 21st March being signed. Arrangements had to be made with his creditors in regard to taking over the stock. Witness, Billingham, and Parker saw his principal creditors, Dreyfus and Co., in East London, and the agreement of the 30th March was entered into. Witness handed over his hotel and erven and stock-in-trade. He denied that on or about the 13th October, 1905, he agreed that should the note then due be paid he would not press for payment of the note now sued upon until transfer had been given. Witness was not in East London on that date, and he did not see defendant at Burghersdorp. He produced an hotel bill, certain cheques, and his cash-book, to show that he was not in East London until the latter part of 1905. He had not been able to give transfer of certain of the erven owing to surveying difficulties. He had not received transfer of these erven from Odendaal, from whom he had bought the ground in 1903 for £106. That amount was more than the erven were worth to-day.

Cross-examined: The erven in question were next to the hotel erven. Witness had done all that he could to get transfer of the remaining erven passed. Witness owed Odendaal £52 10s. in respect of the purchase price of the ground, but he had a contra account for £10 against Odendaal. Witness was sure that he did not go down to East London before the 26th or 27th October, 1905.

Edward R. Briggs, accountant, employed by Dreyfus and Co., said that plaintiff called at their office in East London towards the end of October, 1905. He did not call early in October. A few days before the last promissory note fell due defendant said that it did not matter to him who held the note, he was going to pay it.

George Welsh, of Schweitzer and Co., attorneys, Burghersdorp, said his firm were acting for Odendaal in the matter of the transfers of erven in Odendaalstroom township, which was situated on the farm Groot Vley. Witness described the difficulties which had been raised by the Registry Surveyor and the steps which had been taken to obtain amended title, which they hoped would now go through. There were nine erven in question in this case. The average price at which such erven sold was about £10. There was nothing more that plaintiff could have done to facilitate transfer.

Charles Matthews, clerk, Surveyor-General's Office, said that a protest had been lodged by one of the erfholders, and it might be some time yet before amended title was issued.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Defendant said that when he took over the liability on the notes he understood there would be no difficulty in the way of transfers. Shortly before the note of the 13th October, 1905, became due, Broman called at his office in East London, and it was then agreed, after some discussion, that witness should not pay the last note until the transfer of the other erven had gone through. Witness remembered that plaintiff had been down to the wharf and then he said the river Buffalo was still coming down. A freshet occurred on the 10th October. A deed of sale from Parker to another man had been entered into, and witness had undertaken to let him have transfer within six months, and he had been threatened with an action for failing to do so.

Cross-examined: Witness was confident that plaintiff called at his office about three days before the note of October 13, 1905, fell due.

Mr. Gardiner: Why didn't you say anything about the alleged agreement in your affidavit on the provisional case?

Witness: I gave my attorneys a full statement of my case. Mr. Giddy told me that they were only suing me provisionally, and they would not go into the merits of the case.

By the Court: It was possible that the conversation with Broman may have taken place after the 13th October, 1905. Witness had been thinking the matter over, and he naturally concluded that the agreement was made before the note fell due. Mr. Briggs was mistaken when he said that he (witness) said he would pay the bill. He said distinctly that he would not pay the bill. He valued the erven in question at about £450. He had lost about £800 on the transaction.

Richard D. Gately, attorney, East London, and Algernon Geo. Parker, clerk, East London (defendant's stepson) also gave evidence as to the alleged promise of plaintiff not to press for payment of the last note until transfer had gone through.

Mr. Gardiner having argued on the facts,

Mr. Burton said that transfer in this case was unreasonably delayed and so the defendant was entitled to refuse payment of the promissory note. He cited Dig. (18, 1, 78 and Eagle v. Bos-hof (C.L.J., vol. ix., p. 56). The second defence was a pactum de non petendo, which was clearly proved. Consideration was not necessary to support a pactum de non petendo. He quoted Malan v. Secretan, Booth and Co. (Foord, 94).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the plaintiff sues for the amount of a promissory note, which is dated April 13, 1904, and is as follows: "On April 13, 1906, I promise to pay to Carl Broman (the plaintiff) the sum of £325, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum." The promissory note was given as one of several promissory notes under a contract of sale entered into between the plaintiff and defendant. There are two documents which constitute the contract of sale, and they are substantially the same. It comes to this, that certain erven at Odendaalstroom, in addition to certain other property there, were sold for the total sum of £2,300. As to these erven at Odendaalstroom, the condition is as follows: "The seller agrees to transfer the hotel erven to the purchaser on payment of the sum of £1,000. The seller further undertakes to transfer the remaining erven to the purchaser as soon as he (the seller) obtains transfer thereof." Here, therefore, there was a clear distinction drawn between the hotel erven, of which the plaintiff already had the transfer, and the remaining erven, of which he had not yet had transfer. This contract was not quite completed, but subsequently it was completed under a further arrangement, which was as follows: "I, Carl Broman, hereby confirm the arrangement come to in connection with agreement for purchase of my business at Odendaalstroom by Mr. A. B. Parker, as follows: £1,000 cash and promissory notes for the balance of the purchase price and the value of the furniture and stock-in-trade at 6, 12, 18, and 24 months, said promissory notes to be endorsed by Billingham and Co., and, further, we, Billingham and Co., do hereby undertake to hand to Messrs. Dreyfus and Co., East London, our cheque for £1,000 and the promissory notes aforesaid, upon receipt of title deeds of the two hotel erven, power to transfer, and power to cancel bond." Here, again, there is a special reference to the two hotel erven as to which there is to be the transfer upon payment of the £1,000, but as to the remaining erven, they are left in the original arrangement that transfer is to be given as soon as he (the seller) obtains transfer thereof. I quite agree with the learned counsel for the defendant that this would not give an unlimited time to the plaintiff to obtain transfer. He must use all reasonable despatch for the purpose of obtaining transfer, and if in the present case the plaintiff had not satisfied me that he had done everything that he could to obtain transfer, I should have said that an unreasonable time had already elapsed. But the circumstances of this case are very peculiar. The Surveyor-General, whether rightly or wrongly, has intervened; he has refused to allow Odendaal's transfers to pass; he has required amended titles to be issued; and the plaintiff himself, although he has not actually gone to law against Odendaal, which would, perhaps, have been throwing good money after bad, has urged upon his attorney (Schweitzer) whom he employed, to do all he could for the purpose of obtaining transfer. The evidence of Mr. Welsh is very clear upon the point that he was continually bothered by the plaintiff asking him to obtain the transfer. He says he did everything in his power, but, owing to the complication of circumstances in this case, it was wholly impossible in the time to obtain transfer. If the plaintiff has done everything which, under the circumstances, any reasonable man could be expected to do, then I think he is entitled to have the benefit of this contract, which says that he undertakes to transfer the remaining erven as soon as he (the seller) obtains the transfer thereof. Seeing that he has not succeeded in obtaining transfer, he cannot be blamed if he himself is not in a position to give transfer. In the meanwhile, these promissory notes were falling due, and they were all paid until the last note, which was not paid. The defendant now says, first of all, that more than a reasonable time has elapsed, and his second ground of defence is that there was a special agreement between the parties that the plaintiff should not sue upon the last promissory note, unless he had first given transfer of the remaining erven. I quite agree also with Mr. Burton that if this agreement had been clearly and distinctly proved, it would have been a good defence to the action. But it is a condition in a case of this kind that such an agreement should be distinctly proved, because, on the one hand, we have a promissory note definitely undertaking to pay a certain amount at a certain date. It continually happens in this court, upon application for provisional sentence, that the defendant comes forward and says there has been a kind of understanding that time is to be given. The Court has always said that a mere understanding which does not amount to a definite contract between the parties cannot be allowed to set aside a definite agreement to pay a fixed sum on a certain day. It is essential, therefore, in a case of this kind, that there should be clear proof, not a vague understanding between the parties, as seems to me to be proved in this case, but a clear and definite agreement, having the same force and effect as the original agreement, which it is sought to annul or vary. According to the evidence of the defendant, this agreement was made before the note of October, 1905, fell due. He said it was somewhere about the 10th October. This new agreement is said to have been made at East London. I am satisfied, however, that at that date the plaintiff was in Burghersdorp. His books clearly show that, unless we are to disbelieve his statement that these books were kept in the regular course, and that the entries were made on those dates on which they purport to have been made by him. As far as I can judge of the handwriting, the handwriting is the same. The entries were made at the time when the plaintiff was alleged to have been in East London. So far as they go, the cheques which have been produced seem also to support the evidence of the plaintiff. But, more than everything else, it seems to me that the receipt given by the manager of the Grand Hotel, East London, fully supports the plaintiff's statement that he was not in East London early in October. This receipt was given to him on the 28th October, 1905. The amount is only £2 8s., so that, unless the hotels at East London are cheaper than any other hotels known in South Africa, plaintiff could not have been staying at East London for fully two weeks for the sum of £2 8s., and I am, therefore, quite prepared to accept the statement of the plaintiff that this is the account for a stay of two or three days at the utmost. It seems to me extremely unlikely that this man, who had his business at Burghersdorp, would have been at East London only a fortnight before the 28th October, and I quite accept his statement that he had not been in East London in October until the 26th of that month. Well, if that statement be correct, I do not say it casts discredit upon the evidence of the defendant—I dare say he fully believes his own statement—but he must be mistaken, and I am satisfied that he is mistaken when he says that the plaintiff called at his office somewhere between the 10th and 13th October and, if he were mistaken upon one point, he might easily have been mistaken on another point. The utmost that I think any conversation between the parties could have amounted to would have been this, that he (plaintiff) would endeavour or would see that transfer was given before any further instalments were due. But that does not amount, as is urged, to a pactum de non petendo. It does not justify the Court in saying that it will order a postponement of the payment, which had been definitely fixed for a definite day. I quite believe that Mr. Gately and Mr. Parker are satisfied that some conversation took place at some time in the office of Mr. Billingham, but they are very vague. Under those circumstances, I am of opinion that no such definite agreement has been made between the parties as would justify the Court now in postponing judgment upon the amount. Of course, I would intimate that the plaintiff is bound to use further efforts for the purpose of expediting transfer to the defendant, and, if he should not do so, the defendant will still have his remedy to compel the plaintiff to pass transfer, but, on the facts disclosed in the present case, I am satisfied that the plaintiff has done everything that could reasonably be expected of him under the peculiar circumstances in this case, and, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment as prayed with costs.

On the application of Mr. Gardiner, plaintiff was certified as a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

WILSON AND SPURGIN V. } 1906.
BURT. { Oct. 21th.

Partnership—Agency—Giving of credit.

Before the marriage of the defendant to B., she carried on a hotel business, and after her marriage out of community she continued, ostensibly, to carry on the business in her own name; the licence was in her name and the premises belonged to her, but there was an oral understanding between B. and his wife that the business should belong to B. The plaintiff regarded B. as his wife's manager, but in the books debiting the hotel business the name of B. only appeared.

Held, that as the Court found on the facts that credit had been given to the defendant, she was liable.

Held further, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the plaintiff's claim the amount of certain "good-fors" given to the defendant by the plaintiff's partner S. for liquors supplied in the premises to such partner.

This was an action brought by Katherine Georgina Wilson, trading as a forwarding agent at Prieska, under the style of Wilson and Spurgin, against Jane Elizabeth Burt (married out of community to Francis E. S. Burt), proprietor of the Prieska Hotel, to recover balance of an account.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that between the 31st May, 1904, and 19th March, 1906, plaintiff sold and delivered certain goods to the defendant, advanced moneys to and performed work, labour, and services for the defendant at her special instance and request, on account of which £136 13s. 9d. was owing. This amount defendant refused to pay. Plaintiff claimed payment of the said sum, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Defendant, in an amended plea which she now filed, said that on the 6th April, 1906, she tendered £45 7s. 9d., with taxed costs, to date of tender, and subject to that tender she prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs. Alternatively she pleaded that since the 1st August, 1904, she had leased the Prieska Hotel to her husband, and that she had no indebtedness for goods supplied or work done for the hotel subsequent to the 31st July, 1904, and she denied liability under the claim, which she said was for goods supplied, moneys advanced, and work and services performed for her husband. In case the Court should hold that she was liable, defendant pleaded that she was only indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £109 15s. 9d. She further said that plaintiff was indebted to her in the sum of £64 7s. 9d. for accommodation and food supplied, and a further sum of £10 for cash lent, which, she said, she was entitled to set off against the plaintiff's claim, thus showing a balance of £35 8s., which was less than the tender made herein. In reconvention the defendant claimed £64 7s. 9d. and £10, as aforesaid, and said that the tender was more than the balance due to plaintiff.

Plaintiff pleaded in reconvention that she was not indebted to defendant in the sum of £64 7s. 9d., or any part thereof. She admitted the loan of £10 and the tender, but said the tender was wholly insufficient, and also said that the defendant was now estopped from denying liability for the claim.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Pohl) was for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin was for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said that his client was willing to take £109 15s. 9d., less £10 as the amount owing on the account, and the question was whether the defendant was entitled to bring up the account of £64. He submitted that the defendant, having tendered £45, could not now set up the defence that the account was for services rendered to her husband. He submitted that the onus was upon his learned friend to prove the counter-claim.

De Villiers, C.J., however, directed that the case must proceed in the ordinary way.

Plaintiff was called, and said that she had carried on business as a forwarding agent since May, 1903. She originally traded in partnership with Mr. Tannock as Wilson and Tannock. She had latterly traded as Wilson and Spurgin, but Mr. Spurgin was simply her salaried manager, and he had no interest in the business. On the 29th July, 1904, witness went to England, and she returned on the 19th May, 1905, Spurgin in the meantime carrying on the business under general power of attorney, which witness cancelled on the 26th June, 1905. Spurgin continued as her manager until February, 1906. Prior to defendant's marriage with Mr. F. S. Burt, witness had known her as Mrs. Black. Defendant's account was entered in the books against F. S. Burt, who was the manager of the hotel, acting on behalf of the Mrs. Burt whose name appeared over the door as licensee. Witness's books had been kept by Spurgin. At the Circuit Court Spurgin was convicted of stealing her moneys. The present claim was in respect of goods and work done in connection with the hotel. Witness admitted liability for an item of £3 3s. in the account furnished by defendant in respect of accommodation for an employee named Taylor. Other items, such as supper, tobacco, goodforn, beer, brandy, dop, and so on included in the defendant's claim, witness had not ordered, and she was not aware that they were required for the business. She had not authorised Spurgin to incur those debts on her behalf, nor had she authorised him to settle defendant's bill of £64 7s. 9d. per contra. Spurgin left her service on the 14th February. Witness was not aware of any account by defendant against her of £64 odd until she received the claim on the 19th April.

Mr. Gardiner (in answer to the Court) said that the amount of £64 7s. did not appear in the plaintiff's books. It was entered in the defendant's books first against Spurgin and afterwards against Wilson and Spurgin.

Cross-examined: Spurgin had never been in partnership with her, and it was also only decided to trade as Wilson and Spurgin in order to give weight or stability to the firm. This was done upon Spurgin's suggestion. Spurgin had had sole management of the business. He had repeatedly promised to give her a document showing that he had no interest in the business, but had failed to do so. A notice appeared in the "Gazette" on the 28th February last, stating that Spurgin would retire from the business, and that it would be carried on under the direction of R. H. Wilson. She was not aware that there was a settlement by Mr. Burt in July, 1905, when he gave a cheque for £3 15s. 2d., balance of account. She had known for some time that defendant's account had stood in her firm's books as F. S. Burt, since the defendant's marriage. She knew that cheques had been paid by F. S. Burt, and the receipts had been made out to him since his name had appeared in the books.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he did not see how the defendant could consistently adopt the attitude now that Mr. Burt and not Mrs. Burt should be sued.

Mr. Benjamin said that the tender was made in order to make a settlement of all disputes. Mrs. Burt was married out of community.

Thomas B. Davy, law agent, Prieska, spoke to the fact that when a search was made of Spurgin's box after his arrest, an account for £59 10s. 6d. from F. S. Burt to Spurgin personally was found. The account was to the end of December, 1905, and was identical with the account of £64, except for the omission of one item. An account for £64 odd settled per contra was also discovered in Spurgin's box. On the 8th February witness sent out notices to the plaintiff's clients, including the defendant, that all moneys were to be paid to Mr. Wilson (son of the plaintiff).

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Defendant said that she was married to Mr. Burt on the 14th July, 1904. About the 1st August, 1904, witness agreed with her husband that he should take over the hotel business, and notice was given to the various creditors that the business had been transferred to her husband. Notice of this was given verbally to Mr. Spurgin at De Aar by Witness, while she was returning from her honeymoon.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to counsel): I cannot understand how this defence can be raised in face of the tender.]

Mr. Benjamin: Except this, that the Court has laid down that one can plead a general denial, notwithstanding an unconditional tender in the plea. Counsel cited Van der Spuy v. Colonial Government (14, Supreme Court Cases, 410).

Witness (continuing) said that the only account that she had paid to the plaintiff firm since her marriage was for an amount of £57 for carriage of furniture that she had imported from England. Clerks from Wilson and Spurgin's used to come and stay at the hotel.

Cross-examined: Witness's husband carried on the hotel business, and drew any profits, and he paid witness a rental of £50 per month for the first year. She was not aware that under the liquor laws she was liable to forfeit her licence if she continued as licensee, and allowed someone else to hold the licence, carry on the business, and draw the profits.

Francis E. S. Burt (defendant's husband) said that the plaintiff's account was for forage supplied, commission charges and so on in connection with the hotel business which witness had carried on. Witness had a contra account for £64 7s. 9d., for suppers, tobacco, meals, good-fors for beer, brandy, etc., supplied to Spurgin and employees connected with Wilson and Spurgin. In July, 1905, witness made a settlement with Spurgin to the end of June, and paid a cheque for £3 odd. On the 9th February last witness effected a settlement per contra with Spurgin to the end of January. A good deal of the goods in the account were supplied for the purposes of Wilson and Spurgin's business. The plaintiff's account was continued in the hotel books in Spurgin's name, simply because it was in his name when he (witness) took over the business. Later, witness entered the account in the name of Wilson and Spurgin. A lot of the goods-for-referred to hospitality dispensed by Spurgin on behalf of the firm.

Cross-examined: Witness was formerly a lieutenant in the Cape Police.

Mr. Gardiner: You were not a man of property?

Witness: Property, sir, is a relative term.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had been lessee of the hotel, and had been acting as owner of the licence. Mrs. Burt was now carrying on the business, and had been doing so since the 1st August this year.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The one undisputed fact in this case is that the plaintiff has supplied value to the extent of £99 15s. 9d. to the business of the Prieska Hotel. The first question is, to whom was credit given? Was the credit given to Mrs. Burt, who is sued in this case, or to her husband, Mr. Burt? It is clear from the evidence that the business had been the business of Mrs. Burt before her marriage, and that, after her marriage, the licence for the business was hers, and the name upon the premises was that of Mrs. Burt, the defendant. The only circumstance which might lead one to suppose that credit was given to Mr. Burt is that in the books of the plaintiff's business the name of F. S. Burt appears, but it was assumed that Burt was the manager of the business, and as Mr. Burt was married then to Mrs. Burt, I do not think that the fact that the books set forth the name of F. S. Burt should be held conclusive in the matter, and considering that there has been a tender of the sum of £45 by the defendant, I think that the Court may fairly come to the conclusion that the business really was carried on, on behalf of the defendant, by her husband, as the manager. No written agreement has been put in as between the partners showing that the intention was to alter the course of dealing which had existed before. All we have is that there was an oral understanding between husband and wife that in future the business should be otherwise conducted, but there is no such clear proof as would justify the Court now in coming to the conclusion that Mrs. Wilson, the plaintiff, is wrong in stating that she intended to give credit to Mrs. Burt, who was the owner of the licensed premises, and in whose name the business was being carried on, and who up to that time had been the reputed owner of the premises. I consider, therefore, that the credit must be held to have been given to the owner of the premises, to the licensee of the premises, viz., Mrs. Burt, the person who, according to the board upon the premises, appeared to be the owner and the person on whose behalf it was conducted. That being so, the next question is, is there any sum to be deducted from the £9 15s. 9d.; in other words, whether the defendant has proved that there is indebted to her business by the plaintiff the sum claimed, viz., £64 7s. 9d.? An account has been put in, and it shows items for suppers, for tobacco, for accommodation for meals, for beer in considerable quantities, and for bottles of brandy in considerable quantities. Credit had been given to Spurgin by the hotel business, but I think the Court should treat this case now as between the parties in the present case, as if Spurgin were really a partner of Mrs. Wilson. She had given notice in somewhat equivocal terms, from which persons might fairly gather that they were partners, and there is nothing to show that the defendant knew of a private understanding between Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Spurgin that they were not to be partners, and, therefore, I am quite prepared to treat this case as if they were partners. But it does not follow, merely because they were partners, that the defendant would be justified in charging the partnership with every debt which was incurred by Spurgin. If Spurgin comes to the hotel and treats a lot of friends there, it cannot be held that that is a debt incurred on behalf of the partnership, and really, in regard to most of these items, there appears to be considerable doubt as to whether they should be allowed at all. The plaintiff has agreed to admit "accommodation of Mr. Taylor, £3 3s.," and the husband of the defendant has stated that several of the liquors supplied had really been supplied for the purpose of enabling Spurgin to give brandy and liquor to some of the employees under him. Now, giving him credit for that statement and allowing him to charge for meals, seeing that previously such allowances had been made, there still remains the item of good-fors. There were good-fors given to the extent of £41 18s. 9d., and I asked the defendant's husband, who managed the business, whether he could explain what they were for, and he was wholly unable to explain what they were for. The good-fors themselves were not put in and, in the absence of any explanation as to what these good-fors are given for, I do not think the Court would be justified, even treating Spurgin as a partner, in saying that the partnership shall be held liable for good-fors given at an hotel bar or at an hotel. It seems to me extremely likely that these good-fors were given in respect of liquors consumed upon the premises. I cannot understand why they should appear only as good-fors, and not in any other form if that were not the case. If it had been for meals supplied, then it would have appeared, as items of meals supplied do appear, in this account. If it had been for liquor taken away from the premises, I think that would also appear, because liquor taken away from the premises appears in this account. There is nothing to explain what these good-fors are for, and I consider that it might fairly be presumed that they were given for liquors supplied on the premises to Spurgin. That clearly was not an amount for which the partnership could be held liable, and in any case it is not an amount which, by law, can be sued for at all. But even if those good-fors were not for liquors supplied on the premises, I think that if the charge is made against the partnership, it lies upon the defendant to explain in what respect credit notes to that amount, good-fors, were given on behalf of the partnership, and, if no satisfactory explanation is given by the defendant, then clearly the defendant is not entitled to set up the amount of these good-fors as against the admitted debt of £99 15s. 9d. Deducting £41 18s. 9d. from £64 7s. 9d. there remains £22 9s., which is the sole amount which ought, in my opinion, to be deducted from the £99 15s. 9d. Making that deduction there would remain £77 6s. 9d., and for that amount there must be judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

On the application of Mr. Gardiner, his lordship certified the plaintiff as a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

VIRET AND OTHERS V. { 1906.
HAZELL. { Oct. 25th.

Mr. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. MILLER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. The matter had previously been before the Court, and had been ordered to stand over. Counsel now read affidavits to the effect that defendant had not paid interest on the bond since the 1st January, 1904, and that it was in the interests of the creditors (according to Mr. Steytler, of the Colonial Orphan Chamber) that the estate should be sequestrated.

Defendant said that the statements in the affidavits were untrue. He complained that expenses were being piled up against him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you pay your debts?]

Defendant: Not at present.

De Villiers, C.J.: The final order will be granted, but at the same time, I think Mr. Arderne might have taken the hint of the Court given on the last occasion, and seen if some settlement could not be arrived at. If he insists upon it, he must have his order.

JONES V. HEROLD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Order granted.

VALUE SUPPLY CO. V. STEWART.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Glen Grey, for £12 13s. 10d., and for costs.
Order granted.

TURPIN V. PIZER.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Middelburg, defendant having removed out of the jurisdiction of Steynsburg. Counsel said that defendant had offered to pay 10s. a month. The Magistrate had ordered him to pay 15s. a month. Failing payment, the plaintiff applied for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant.

Judgment as prayed, failing payment of which within one month, decree of civil imprisonment granted with costs, to be suspended on payment of 15s. per month until debt and costs are paid.

OOSTHUISEN V. MICHELSON.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence for £250 on an agreement of sale and purchase, being instalment due of purchase price and for £42 19s. 8d., interest due on purchase price.

Order granted.

GRAAFF-REINET BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. RAYMOND.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest from the 1st October, 1902, the bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE MILLS V. BEYER.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,800, with interest, less £693 paid on account; and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SELLAR BROS. V. FORSYTH.

Compulsory sequestration—Benefit of creditors.

On an opposed application to have a provisional order of sequestration made final, the Court would not grant the order in case of collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant for the purpose of obtaining a sequestration which would not be obtainable on the petition of the defendant himself; but it would lie on the party opposing to prove that there was such collusion, or that the sequestration could not benefit the creditors.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Mr. Burton opposed the application on behalf of Wm. Hy. Louw, holding power of attorney from J. E. Poole, who is a judgment creditor against defendant for £6,000. The reason of the opposition was that, apart from the Fountain Hotel, which he had no interest in, the defendant had no assets of any kind, and it was not for the benefit of his creditors generally that the estate should be sequestrated, inasmuch as it would only mean expense that would have to be borne by the creditors.

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by petitioners' manager, who urged that there was need for an investigation of the defendant's connection with the Fountain Hotel, and that the most satisfactory method of dealing with the matter would be to sequester his estate. Counsel also read an affidavit by another creditor in support of the application. Petitioners were creditors to the amount of £244 13s., and the supporting creditor had a claim for £650.

Mr. Burton (in answer to the Court) said that they did not suggest collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant. He submitted that there were circumstances in connection with this case which the Court should take into consideration as affecting creditors.

De Villiers, C.J.: If there had been any proof of collusion in this case between plaintiff and defendant, I should certainly not have granted the order. In the case of voluntary surrenders the Court has always held that where there are no assets, and it would not be for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated, the sequestration should not be adjudged. In the case of a creditor applying for compulsory sequestration, there is proof that such creditor, at all events, believes that the sequestration would benefit the creditors. If there is any reason for believing that he is acting in collusion with the debtor for the purpose of obtaining a sequestration which would not be obtainable on the petition of the debtor, the Court would, of course, not grant the order. But there is no reason in the present case for believing that there is any collusion between the parties, and not sufficient ground for holding that the sequestration would not be for the benefit of the creditors as a whole. It is clear that the defendant is unable to pay his debts, and the Court will therefore adjudge the sequestration, with costs occasioned by the opposition.

DE JAGER V. DE WIT.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Order granted.

BAHLMAN V. PEELTON VILLAGE MANAGEMENT BOARD.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town for £21 19s. 9d., with interest at 6 per cent. from the 1st August, 1902, and £2 3s. 4d., taxed costs of judgment, and also costs of this application. Counsel also moved that certain rates, which are due to defendant Board and collected for them by the Divisional Council of King William's Town shortly to be paid over, be attached to satisfy judgment and writ.

Order granted.

VAN RHYN V. VAN RHYN.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Van Rhyn's Dorp for £205, with interest, and £2 2s. 9d., taxed costs, and costs of this suit, and for certain landed property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FEIN V. VAN RHYN.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Van Rhyn's Dorp for £30 18s. 4d. and £2 1s. 10d., taxed costs, and costs of this application, and for certain landed property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

OOSTHUIZEN V. MARINCOWITZ.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a notarial bond for £250, with interest, and for a certain inheritance to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE ATTWELL V. CABRITA.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest, less £400 paid on account, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Rowson appeared to consent to judgment, and applied for a stay of execution, stating that the defendant was willing that plaintiff should receive the rent of Ariam Cottages, which would be more than sufficient to pay the interest. He also asked that plaintiff should be ordered to return two diamond rings that had been pledged with him in security for the interest.

Provisional sentence granted, and property executable, with stay of execution for two weeks.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Rowson): In the meanwhile, you may induce the plaintiff to take the rents in lieu of the capital; it would be for the benefit of both, I think. As to the rings, I suppose they were pledged with the plaintiff, and the Court cannot now order the rings to be given up.

Mr. Rowson: I submit that the rents are ample security for the interest.

De Villiers, C.J.: But the interest has not been paid.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WILLMOT V. SNYDERS. { 1906.
{ Oct. 25th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to sign judgment against plaintiff (Snyders) for not proceeding with her action within the period fixed by the Rules of Court.

Order granted.

PICK V. JOHNSTON.

Mr. De Villiers moved for judgment under Rule 329d for an order of ejectment from a certain piece of ground of which plaintiff was the registered owner, plaintiff tendering £2 for improvements made by defendant.

Order granted.

ARMSTRONG AND CO. V. JEPPE.

Mr. Payne (for plaintiffs) moved for judgment in terms of consent paper. Judgment in terms of consent.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Van der Byl applied for the discharge from insolvency of Charles Theodore Bailie.

Granted.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for the rehabilitation of Gustav Meyer Schmolle.

Granted.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for the discharge from insolvency of Samuel Gibson.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte OSBURN. } 1006.
 } Oct. 25th.

Dr. Greer moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE DUKE.

Mr. Sutton moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for leave to sell certain building stands in the estate in order to pay off liabilities.

Order granted, subject to conditions recommended by the Master.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER HEEVER.

Mr. Burton moved for an order confirming the election of petitioner (Mr. Cloete, of Lady Grey), as sole trustee in the insolvent estate. An objection had been lodged by insolvent's husband on the ground that the trustee owed a sum of over £400 to the estate. This was denied by Mr. Cloete.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE LE ROUX.

Dr. Rainsford moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary, for authority to take over certain movable property in the estate of his late wife. Petitioner proposed to re-marry, and to pay for the movables in accordance with a sworn valuation, and to pass a kinderbewys securing the shares to the children. The will said that in such circumstances the movables must be sold by auction. It was stated, however, that the proposed arrangement would be in the interests of the minors.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The surviving spouse must carry out the terms of the will, which says that if he re-marries, he must sell the moveables by auction. He may then buy the moveables.]

Dr. Rainsford: There is an affidavit that this offer is better than any that would probably be obtained at public auction.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is a very dangerous thing for the Court to interfere with the desires of testators. The husband and wife made a mutual will, and they directed that in case the survivor should wish to re-marry, the movables of the joint estate had to be sold, and she died in the belief that that provision would be carried out. Well, the Court cannot enter into a speculation now as to whether it is the best thing for the minors. It may be that it would be better for them that the property should be taken over by their father, but, on the other hand, the wishes of the mother as set out in the provisions of the will should be carried out. If the father is anxious to pay a high price for this property, he can pay it, and others, no doubt, in the interests of the minors, will attend, and bid, and probably the goods will realise more than is at present anticipated. I do not think there can be any order. No order will be made on the application.

Ex parte ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Toms moved, on the petition of M. E. Esterhuizen, of Carnarvon, for leave to sue her husband, Samuel Jacobus Esterhuizen, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. It was stated that respondent was living in Fordsburg, Transvaal.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation returnable on the 14th November, personal service to be effected.

CAVANAGH V. STRASSBURGER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on the petition of James Cavanagh, formerly proprietor of the Grand Hotel, Cape Town, for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation to recover a sum of £215. Strassburger supplied certain champagne to the hotel while one James Welsh was manager, and it was alleged that double payment was made by Welsh for the champagne. Petitioner applied for the attachment of respondent's interest in the Cape Canning Company, now in liquidation, under which he would be entitled to a dividend approximately of about £300. Strassburger was now in Paris. A letter had been received from respondent saying that he did not remember the matter.

Leave granted to sue by edict, dividends to be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, citation returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte LEZARD AND WIFE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract excluding community of goods, petitioners stating that their impression had been that they could, after their marriage, enter into such an agreement.

De Villiers, C.J.: This goes rather further than any previous applications. The Court has always refused to register anything in the way of a post nuptial contract, but if the parties were prepared to say that, before the marriage, there had been an agreement as to certain terms, then if those terms were carried out in the contract executed after marriage, the Court would give effect to it, not as a post-nuptial contract, because no such thing as that can be registered, but as an ante-nuptial contract. Here it seems that the parties did intend to marry in community of property, and it was only afterwards that they bethought themselves of excluding community.

Mr. Gutsche said that under the circumstances he would ask the Court to allow the matter to stand over in order that a supplementary affidavit might be filed.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think that would be the best course, because it is a dangerous precedent to allow people to be married in community, knowing they were married in community, to alter the position. If they can clearly prove that it was their agreement before marriage that there should be no community of property, and that it was only because they believed that a post-nuptial contract could be executed that they failed to execute a contract before marriage, then I might consider the application. There will be no order, but leave will be given to file a supplementary affidavit.

Ex parte WARD.

This was an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Referred to Mr. Russell for certificate.

O'CONNOR V. MARAIS.

Mr. Upington moved, upon notice to the respondent, calling upon him to show cause why an attachment made by the Deputy-Sheriff of Robertson of the stock-in-trade of applicant at Ashton should not be removed.

Mr. Bailey appeared for the respondent to oppose.

It appeared that applicant, who is an hotelkeeper and general dealer at Ashton, was interested in the Montagu Baths. Respondent had taken judgment against him on a mortgage bond, and in satisfaction of that judgment the Baths property had been attached, and also the applicant's stock-in-trade at Ashton. Applicant was proposing to bring an action, but he said he could not proceed unless the attachment on his stock was removed. He was prevented meanwhile from carrying on his business at Ashton. Respondent said that he was willing to release the stock at Ashton, provided that other and good security was given by applicant.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: In cases of attachment of property in execution of judgments there must be a certain amount of hardship upon an execution debtor. His goods are attached; he has no longer any control over those goods, and he is hampered in his business accordingly. The one thing that could be said in the present case is that the hardship is somewhat greater than is usual, but I do not consider that any case has been made out to justify the interference of the Court. The execution creditor is entitled to payment of the judgment debt, and he is entitled to attach sufficient property for the Sheriff to satisfy his judgment. Of course, if more property is attached than is necessary, or reasonably necessary, it might well be that an action for damages might ensue, but such question would have to be decided by action. But, upon this motion, it is impossible for me to decide definitely that more property has been attached than under the circumstances is justifiable, and, therefore, I do not think that this application should be granted. The application must be refused, with costs. At the same time, I would intimate to the respondent that it would be well for him to come to some terms with the applicant, and consider whether part of the property cannot be released. This is a matter for friendly negotiation. It is not a matter for the interference of the Court. If the applicant would approach the respondent, value all his assets that have been placed under attachment, and make it clear to him that more has been attached than is reasonably necessary, I have no doubt that the respondent would meet him and release part of the property. That can only be done at this stage by friendly arrangement, and not by the interference of the Court.

BURCHELL V. BURCHELL AND OTHERS.

This was an application brought by Ignatius Theodore Price Burchell, as one of the executors testamentary of the estate of the late James Mathew William Charles Burchell, for funds out of the estate for the purpose of defending an action pending between the second-named respondent and the executors of the estate in respect to the execution of certain will. Applicant also sought to purge default.

Mr. Burton was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for Mrs. Watson (one of the surviving executors); Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for J. E. L. Burchell (plaintiff in the suit).

The matter was ordered to stand over until Thursday next, question of costs of the day also to stand over.

In re B.S.A. ASPHALTE AND } 1906.
MANUFACTURING CO. } Oct. 25th.

Rent—Preference—Tacit hypothecation—Act 5 of 1861.

The tacit hypothecation of a landlord in respect of rent due on premises let to a company must, in case of the company being ordered to be wound up, be confined to the proceeds of goods that were on the premises at the time of such order.

This was an application for confirmation of the second report presented by the liquidators of the B.S.A. Asphalte and Manufacturing Company, Limited.

Mr. Molteno appeared for the liquidators; Mr. Burton appeared for Andrew Allan, the late managing director of the company, to oppose the application.

From the report, it appeared that a good deal of the time of the liquidators had been occupied in an endeavour to adjust accounts between the late managing director and the company, and they now recommended that he rank as preferent creditor for £582 3s. 5d., and as concurrent creditor for £182 14s. 3d. They reported that they had been unable to recover any of the outstanding calls on shares. The liquidators also reported that they had called for tenders for the company's business, and they had received one from Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre, and Bisset, acting on behalf of the Neuchatel Company, of £3,000 for the assets, excluding the book debts and the right of purchase of tar under contract with the Gas Company. This they had accepted. Some two weeks afterwards they received an offer from Mr. G. J. O'Reilly, acting on behalf of A. G. Searle, of £3,500, also excluding book debts, but including purchase of tar under contract with the Gas Company. They were not satisfied that the latter offer would have been more beneficial to the liquidation than that of the Neuchatel Company, and they recommended that the agreement with the Neuchatel Company be confirmed by the Court. The liquidators added that the sale of the assets would, they estimated, result in a dividend to the creditors of 9s. in the £, but there was no prospect of any return to the shareholders.

Mr. Allan excepted to the report in regard to the way in which several portions of his claims against the company had been dealt with, and he put his side of the case before the Court at some length. He also submitted that the liquidators ought to have accepted the offer of Mr. Searle, instead of that of the Neuchatel Company, inasmuch as it would have been more to the interest of the liquidation.

Affidavits having been read and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Mr. G. W. Steytler was called to speak as to a point of practice raised in connection with insolvency proceedings.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Steytler): We know that you have had a large experience as trustee in insolvent estates. A question has arisen as to actual practice where there is a preferent claim in respect of rent in an insolvency, whether that preference is awarded in practice where there are no goods upon the premises?]

Witness: No, my lord. We do not recognise that preference. The practice has been that a landlord has only a lien on the property in the premises belonging to him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In respect of property on the premises let?—Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing there is any property whatever, would you allow for the whole of the rent even if the rent is in excess of the value of the property?—No, my lord, whatever is the value of the property in the premises.

De Villiers, C.J.: Several objections have been raised in this case to the confirmation of the report of the liquidators, but there is only one of these objections that, in my opinion, has been proved, and that is the objection in regard to the salary which has been allowed to Allan, the objector, after the date of liquidation. I think that the letter which has just been read written to Allan by the liquidators, shows that up to the time when that letter was written Allan was recognised as still the managing director in terms of the arrangement which had been made with the company before liquidation, and I think that Allan, in being retained in that position, might fairly have believed that the intention was to pay him full salary. It might well be that he did not perform all the work, which before liquidation he would have performed, but I think if the liquidators had intended to dispense with his services they ought to have informed him of their intention at the time when they undertook the liquidation. Apparently they did not inform him of it, and they subsequently wrote this letter, in which they dispense with his services in that capacity, showing that up to that time they recognised him as having that office. I consider that, once having retained him in that capacity, they should have given him a month's notice, and, failing the month's notice, that he is fairly entitled to £83 6s. 8d. claimed by him. The total amount claimed by him as remuneration for services is £195 1s. 5d., and the liquidators have allowed only £100, and I think, in fairness, Allan should be allowed the sum of £95 1s. 5d. in addition. In regard to the other objections, I am of opinion that they do not hold good. As to the rent, the practice in insolvency has been to confine the landlord's tacit hypothecation to goods on the premises at the time of insolvency. This practice appears to me to be perfectly correct. Before the passing of Act 5 of 1861 there was no recognised limit of time for which rent enjoyed a preference, and the 5th section of the Act limited the tacit hypothecation to one year's rent. But this tacit hypothecation affected only goods on the premises, and the Act made no difference in this respect. Then, in regard to the £500, which has been claimed by Mr. Allan, I do not think that he has given sufficient ground for being allowed to re-claim that £500. The transaction was one which no Court can possibly approve of. At the time Mr. Allan was the managing director of the company, there appears to have been no meeting of directors at which this arrangement, by which 500 shares were taken over as the payment of a debt of £500, was ever approved of. It is said that some meeting of shareholders was subsequently held at which this was sanctioned, but the circumstances of that meeting are not explained. It does not appear whether the shareholders had full notice that this question was to be raised at that meeting, and even if they had, I do not think that that would validate a transaction of this kind, and I am not, therefore, inclined to allow the £500 to be deducted. Moreover, there is no evidence whatever as to what the value of the shares was at that time. The value of the shares at that time is shown by the ultimate result, that the company has gone into liquidation, and that there will be nothing paid ultimately to the shareholders out of the assets of the company, and if Mr. Allan wants to rely upon his contention that these shares had any value at the time, it lay upon him to give clear proof of that value, in order to validate such proceedings as I have commented upon. Then, in regard to the sale of the property, I think that that is a matter in which the Court should not interfere with the discretion of the liquidators. They gave ample opportunity to persons inclined to send in their tenders to tender, and the Neuchatel Company did tender in time, and was successful in having its tender accepted, and I do not think it would be fair either to the liquidators or the Neuchatel Co. to reopen the matter and allow other tenderers to come in. Moreover, I am not satisfied that even if the question had been opened at the time, even if the other tender had been sent in and considered at the same time as the tender of the Neuchatel Co. was considered, the liquidators would be justified or bound to have accepted the tender of Searle in preference to the tender of the Neuchatel Co. They have exercised their discretion in the matter fairly, honestly, and reasonably, and I do not think this Court should now interfere. The effect of my judgment will be that the Court will order that the report be confirmed, subject to this amendment; that in lieu of the sum of £100 as remuneration for services after liquidation, the sum of £195 1s. 5d. be allowed to W. Allan. Costs of opposition will be paid out of the assets of the company.

Mr. Molteni asked if the costs of opposition would include the affidavits, which contained so much extraneous matter.

De Villiers, C.J.: Costs will come out of the assets, with the exception of costs of affidavits, so far as they refer to objections which have not been allowed by the Court.

In re ASSETS REALISATION ASSOCIATION, LTD.

Principal liquidator—Official liquidator.

In a competition for appointment as official liquidator of a company that is being wound up, the provisional liquidator should, ceteris paribus, be preferred to other candidates.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling upon all concerned to show cause why the Assets Realisation Association, Ltd., should not be placed under a winding-up order, and Wyndham Bishop and Alfred Theo. Lougher appointed official liquidators.

Mr. Alexander (for the petitioner, W. T. Seccombe) appeared to move for the rule to be made final.

Dr. Greer, on behalf of W. L. Scott and W. G. Coulton (as creditors of the company), appeared to show cause against the appointment of Messrs. Bishop and Lougher as official liquidators.

Hilyard Home Drummond, who was in custody, also appeared to oppose the appointment of Messrs. Bishop and Lougher.

It will be remembered that the rule was granted on the application of Secombe, who said that he was the holder of a £1 share in the company, and that the company was a bogus one, and had been run by the managing director (Drummond) for his own behoof and interest (16 C.T.R., 860).

Dr. Greer read an affidavit by W. L. Scott, of St. George's-street, who said that he had a claim against the company for £100 on a promissory note. Petitioner, as far as deponent was informed, had practically no interest in the company. He submitted that Lougher was not a fit and proper person to be liquidator of any company, there being several judgments against him in the Magistrate's Court. He also complained that the provisional liquidators had sold all the goods in the company's office, including certain furniture belonging to him (Scott). An affidavit by W. G. Coulton, attorney, was also read, in which he said that he had a claim against the company for £6 2s. 10d. for rent and expenses of attachment. He did not consider Bishop and Lougher to be fit and proper persons to be appointed liquidators.

Drummond, in an affidavit, alleged that the financial embarrassments of the company had been due to the defalcations of the late solicitor and book-keeper, and that the former had now joined Lougher, one of the provisional liquidators. He declared that Lougher had been put forward as a liquidator in order to save the late solicitor of the company from conviction for a felony. Deponent also said that the only acquaintance that Bishop had with such matters was the knowledge he had got when his own affairs went through the insolvency branch. As to Lougher, he was well-seasoned in such proceedings. Deponent also complained that all his goods had been sold by the liquidators, including his wearing apparel. The petitioner had not even paid up the £1 share issued to him.

Mr. Alexander read an affidavit by H. J. Atkinson, late book-keeper in the company's employ, who said that Drummond's allegations, so far as they referred to him, were untrue. Bishop, in an affidavit, said that he was thoroughly acquainted with the Company Law of this Colony, and that he had acted as curator under appointment from the Court. The assets alleged by Drummond to be in existence were a pure myth. Although Drummond said that he held 2,000 shares in the company, it did not appear from the share register that he was the holder of a single share. There was abundant evidence to show that the company had been carried on solely for his personal ends. The books were irregular and a disgrace to any company or trading concern. The other allegations as to his insolvency were, he said, ridiculous and erroneous. Lougher, in an affidavit, said that he could not find that Scott was a creditor of the company. The £100 represented moneys and interest on an advance by the said Scott to Drummond personally, which moneys were employed for the sole use and benefit of the said Drummond. The other allegations in the affidavit of Drummond were false, scandalous, and malicious. The company (he added) was hopelessly insolvent. An affidavit by H. Stanley Jones, late solicitor of the company, was to the effect that the charges which had been made against him were groundless and malicious.

Dr. Greer was about to read further affidavits by Scott, when

Mr. Alexander objected to further affidavits going in.

The affidavits were, therefore, excluded.

Dr. Greer applied for the appointment of Scott as liquidator. He said that Scott was the only person who had been proved to have a real interest in the company.

Drummond submitted that the association ought not to have been placed under a winding-up order. The whole of this business, he added, had been brought about by one gentleman, who was the solicitor of the company, Stanley Jones, and it was through his defalcations that the liquidation of the company had been brought about, and it was through his machinations that he (Drummond) was now in custody. He would support Dr. Greer in the appointment of Scott as a liquidator. The application was the outcome of venom. The company was not insolvent, and had assets exceeding £500, including one item alone of £250 Russian Four per Cent. Bonds.

Mr. Alexander submitted that no good and sufficient reason had been shown why the rule should not be made absolute. He said that the assets were not worth more than £50.

De Villiers, C.J.: An order has already been made for the winding up of this company, and there has been no appeal from that order. It still stands; it is not proposed in the present application that that order should be superseded, and the only question to be decided is who are to be the liquidators? Ceteris paribus the provisional liquidator, should, in a competition for appointment as official liquidator, be preferred to other candidates. We have had an affidavit by Mr. Scott and also by Mr. Drummond, and they both of them object to the liquidators already appointed, and they both make vague, general charges against the two gentlemen. As to Mr. Bishop, it appears that he has been appointed by the Court as curator in certain other cases, and there is nothing, so far as I can judge, against him. As to Mr. Lougher, it is said there are writs of civil imprisonment against him, but all the statements made against him are denied, and the writs have not been put in. The best evidence as to the existence of writs of civil imprisonment would be the writs themselves, and not one of them has been put in. But the Court can secure the creditors and persons concerned by directing that security shall be given by both liquidators. As to the amount, Mr. Drummond says that there are £500 of assets, and the applicant says there are £50. Between them, I should think that £300 might fairly represent all the assets of the company. Then it is suggested that the Court should appoint Mr. Scott to be liquidator, but I know nothing about the capacity of Mr. Scott to be liquidator. I will assume that the amount of debt which he alleges is owing to him, but by whom? It is alleged that the money which he is said to have advanced to the company was really not advanced to the company, but to Drummond personally. If there is any question on this point, I think it would be exceedingly undesirable to appoint Mr. Scott. No one else has been suggested, and on the whole, therefore, I think that these two gentlemen, Bishop and Lougher, having already received the provisional appointment, and as they can only be confirmed subject to proper security being given should be retained in their appointment. The Court will, therefore, appoint Wyndham Bishop and Alfred Theodore Lougher as official liquidators, with powers mentioned in the 149th section, security for £300, to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court, to be given.

Mr. Alexander applied for costs of opposition against the other side.

Dr. Greer urged that costs of opposition should come out of the assets.

De Villiers, (C.J.): What will there be left? There will be no order as to costs, except that the applicant will have his costs out of the assets.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

FOUCHE V. FOUCHE. { 1906.
Oct. 26th.

This was an action brought by Maria Magdalena Fouche, of Robertson, against her husband, Barend Albertus Fouche, described as a blacksmith and wagon-maker, of Graaff-Reinet, for a decree of divorce by reason of defendant's adultery, with one Jooste.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The Rev. A. McGregor, retired minister, of the D.R. Church, gave formal proof of the marriage at Robertson in November, 1884.

Plaintiff said that after the marriage she lived with defendant at her father's farm, and then they went to Kimberley, and remained about a year. While at Kimberley she had reason to suspect her husband's fidelity. Afterwards they removed to Uitenhage, where they remained about five years. Then her husband went to Johannesburg, and promised to send for her, but he failed to do so, and the next she heard of him was at Cradock. He visited her at Uitenhage, but did not remain in the house. About seven years ago he went to Graaff-Reinet, where he had since been living. Defendant had not contributed towards her support, except as to two small amounts. She had written to him, but had only received abusive letters in return. There were four children of the marriage, all boys, aged respectively 20, 18, 15, and 13 years. Witness asked for maintenance, as well as custody of the minor children.

Mr. Benjamin applied for leave to prove the adultery by means of affidavits, pointing out that plaintiff was a poor woman, and the case could not very well be tried at the Circuit Court, as the parties were living some distance from each other.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a letter had been received by the Registrar from the defendant, in which he admitted the allegations in the plaintiff's declaration, and said that he did not intend to defend the action. Under the special circumstances, plaintiff would be allowed to prove the adultery on affidavit.

Mr. Benjamin read affidavits by an amateur photographer at Graaff-Reinet and the Deputy-Sheriff, from which it appeared that defendant had been living in Cradock-street under another name with a woman and a child.

Mrs. Fouche identified her husband in a photograph of a man, woman, and child taken by the amateur photographer at Graaff-Reinet.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs, plaintiff to have custody of the minor children of the marriage, defendant declared to have forfeited benefits under the marriage, and ordered to pay to plaintiff £4 per month for the support of the children for two years from this date.

McMORROW V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Lunatic Asylum — Attendant — Responsibility for injury done by patient to attendant.

The plaintiff, who was an attendant on lunatics at a Government Lunatic Asylum, was suddenly attacked by one of the lunatics and had his jaw broken. There was no proof that the lunatic was dangerous or violent, except that on a previous occasion he had given another attendant a push.

Held, that although the plaintiff had not been informed by the Asylum authorities of the previous assault, he was not entitled to claim damages from the Government in respect of the assault committed upon himself.

This was an action brought by Andrew McMorrow, an attendant at the Valkenberg Asylum, against the Colonial Government, for £5,000 damages sustained by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendants or their servants.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on or about the 10th November, 1904, he had some ten patients entrusted to his charge for exercise, each and all of whom he had reason to believe, and did believe, belonged to the non-refractory class. In contravention of the rules and regulations of the aforesaid asylum, one Basil Elliott, who was well-known to the authorities of the asylum to be a dangerous and refractory patient, was on the said occasion entrusted to the care of the plaintiff. During the time the said Elliott and other patients aforesaid were exercising, Elliott suddenly, unexpectedly, and without provocation, inflicted a severe assault upon the plaintiff, whereby his jaw was fractured in two places. In consequence of the assault, plaintiff had suffered great pain and a severe shock to his nervous system, so as to be unfitted for his duties and for manual labour. His sufferings had been increased by reason of the unskilful surgical treatment which he had received at the Asylum. He claimed £5,000 damages.

Defendants originally excepted to the declaration on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action, but the exception had been withdrawn. In their plea, they admitted the formal paragraphs, except that they denied that plaintiff had no reason to believe that the patient referred to belonged to the non-refractory class, and especially said that there was no such classification recognised at the said Asylum. They denied the alleged contravention of regulations, save that the said Elliott was on the occasion referred to entrusted to the care of plaintiff. They admitted that plaintiff had suffered injuries in consequence of the assault, but denied the alleged unskilful treatment. Plaintiff had since the time of the assault, and was now, employed as an attendant at the Asylum, and he performed his duties as efficiently as he did prior thereto.

Mr. Rowson was for plaintiff; Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Lansdowne) was for the defendants.

Plaintiff said that he entered the service of the Government at Valkenberg Asylum in September, 1904, at a remuneration of 3s. 10d. per day, which had now been increased to 4s. per day, with board and quarters. He estimated that the office was worth £144 a year. About the middle of November, 1904, he was sent out with ten patients from Ward No. 1. He had been warned by the chief attendant not to allow one of the patients, Basil Elliott, to walk behind him, and to keep another patient, B., at his side. Witness had no idea from the warning that Elliott was dangerous. It was not usual to entrust ten patients, amongst whom there might be one or two dangerous subjects, to one attendant. If a man were known to be a dangerous patient, he was put under special observation. He noticed that Elliott was lagging behind, and he asked him to walk out in front. While witness's attention was diverted by B., Elliott rushed up and struck him on the jaw, stunning him, and causing blood to issue. He afterwards saw Dr. Black, and told him that he thought his jaw was fractured. Dr. Black, however, said he did not think so. A four-tail bandage was put on witness, and he was kept in his room for two and a half weeks.

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Rowson what he founded his case upon?

Mr. Rowson said that the plaintiff alleged negligence, in that he was not properly warned of the dangerous character of the patient, and in that he was not properly treated by the doctors at the Asylum.

Witness (in reply to the Court) said that he had not held any previous appointment at an asylum.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose there is a certain amount of danger that a lunatic may at any time become dangerous?]

Mr. Rowson: An attendant takes ordinary risks in a dangerous occupation, but he does not take extraordinary risks.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How do you make the Government responsible for the bad treatment of the surgeon?]

The surgeon acts as the agent of the Government.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, no. If the Government employs a surgeon who is known to be a skilful surgeon, then, if he does not do his work skilfully, the Government is not responsible.]

The Government is responsible for the torts of its servants.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the tort here?]

The tort is that this man was unskilfully treated.

Witness (continuing) said that he complained about the injury he had received to Dr. Black, who said that no man could do anything for him at present. Dr. Dodds advised him to go to a dentist. Witness subsequently saw Dr. McMullen.

By the Court: Witness had been permanently injured. He had constant pain in his jaw. There was a constant dragging on his teeth, trying to get into their natural position. His articulation had also been interfered with.

Witness, in further evidence, said that he was brought up on his father's farm, and there was no other occupation that he could turn to, as he was unfit for hard manual labour and he had no trade.

Cross-examined: When witness came out here he went on the Breakwater service. He left that service in order to better himself, as an attendant at the Asylum. He did not leave because he had seen a warder struck by a convict. He had seen an attendant struck by a patient at the Asylum before he was appointed. He had reason to believe that Elliott was a dangerous patient, because of assaults he had previously committed. Elliott was in the habit of loitering. He did not speak harshly to Elliott, who was a gentleman by birth.

Mr. Jones asked witness what rule and regulation had been contravened by entrusting Elliott to his care?

Witness said that he did not understand the question.

De Villiers, C.J., said that plaintiff's counsel had admitted that there was no rule and regulation that had been contravened.

Further cross-examined: Dr. Black told witness at first that he did not think that his jaw was fractured, but he afterwards said he thought his jaw was fractured in one place. He told Dr. Black that his teeth had tilted in in consequence of the assault. He had often suffered from headache in consequence of the blow. His nerves had also suffered, and he had a constant dragging on his teeth, which prevented him from masticating his food. Witness was now in receipt of 4s. 2d. a day. He considered that he had been injured for life, although he had been working two years since the accident occurred.

Re-examined: Witness was not constitutionally nervous prior to the accident.

Joseph R. Price, dental surgeon, produced two models—one of the mouth of a man who had perfect articulation and the other of the mouth of plaintiff. The first model was of witness's assistant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then, has everyone a perfect mouth?]

Witness: Very few.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your assistant has a perfect mouth?]

Nearly so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you say what the other mouth was like before the blow was struck?]

No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you say why plaintiff's mouth is not perfect?]

No.

Dr. McMullen, of Cape Town, said that he had had considerable experience of surgical cases. If a person had a double fracture of the lower jaw, witness would call in a dentist at once. When plaintiff called to see him, witness noticed that he had a double fracture. The union had been properly effected, but there was a mal-position of the teeth.

Mr. Rowson: Do you think that if plaintiff had been properly treated his teeth would have articulated in the normal fashion?

Witness: I believe they would. In further evidence, witness said that there was a danger that plaintiff would extract his own teeth in time if he tried to eat anything hard. He had been unable to get the plaintiff's pulse down to the normal. He did not think the plaintiff was fit to be continued in his office.

Cross-examined: Witness had never treated a double fracture of the jaw. He held that it was imperative that a dentist should have been called in to put a splint on the plaintiff's jaw. He was not surprised that plaintiff suffered from headache, seeing that his pulse was regularly 100. A normal pulse was from 65 to 75.

George W. Club, an attendant at Valkenberg Asylum, said that he had been at the Asylum about two years and seven months. He was not aware that Elliott had assaulted anyone at the Asylum prior to the attack which he made upon plaintiff. Witness was not aware whether a ward was set apart at Valkenberg for dangerous patients. Patients who were known to be dangerous were mixed with the others. Elliott had never been under his charge.

Cross-examined: There were about 200 patients at the Asylum, and about fifty of them had been known to assault the warders.

Charles S. Still, another attendant, said that on the day of the assault plaintiff spoke to Elliott in an ordinary tone. Elliott ran away after he had struck plaintiff, and witness gave chase, and he had a struggle with him before he could get him back again. He had known him commit one assault, viz., upon Warder Quirey, prior to the attack upon plaintiff.

Cross-examined: Elliott pushed Warder Quirey, but did not inflict any injuries upon him.

Dr. F. M. Morris said it was difficult to say whether the malformation of plaintiff's teeth was natural or due to violence. Certain of the deformities, he should say, were due to injury.

Archibald McCorkindale, manager of the New York Mutual, said that the cost of an annuity of £150 to a man of 26 years would be £3,000.

Mr. Rowson closed his case.

Sir Edmond Sinclair Stevenson said that he examined the plaintiff's jaw on the 24th September last, but he found no signs of any fracture. There was an abnormal formation of the teeth. He could not say whether there had been a fracture. Assuming that there had been a fracture, he could find no signs of unskilful treatment, in fact, he should say that, so far as the jaw bones were concerned, the treatment had been successful. The teeth were tilted inwards.

Dr. Wm. Johnson said that he had had a good deal of experience of dental surgery. He had taken a model of the plaintiff's teeth this month, and he was unable to find that the jaw had been fractured. Plaintiff's teeth were irregular, and he had an overcrowded mouth. Some of the teeth had never articulated.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that it was unnecessary to lead further evidence for the defence. He stated that he had read the evidence given on commission by Dr. Black.

Mr. Rowson: Our case is that the Government, by its servants, has been guilty of two species of negligence: (1) They did not warn the plaintiff as to the dangerous character of this patient, Elliott, who, together with nine others, was entrusted to his care. (2) He was improperly and unskilfully treated after his accident.

As to the first point, I must, of course, admit that when a man undertakes a dangerous employment, he undertakes such ordinary risks of that employment as by the use of ordinary human prudence he can foresee, but he does not undertake altogether unforeseen risks. The principle upon which this taking of risks is based is volenti non fit injuria. But how can a man will a thing of which he is utterly ignorant? Nihil volitum quin praeognitum. The plaintiff had a perfect right to believe, and did believe, that each of the 10 patients entrusted to his charge was harmless. He was not cautioned beyond being told not to let Elliott walk behind him, but that was not a caution as to the man's dangerous character. He might have been a dirty patient, or a mischievous patient, or a patient who would be likely to attempt an escape; there may have been fifty reasons for not allowing him to loiter behind. One witness has told us that dangerous patients are constantly sent to exercise with non-dangerous patients. Well, if that is true I do not know what stronger proof we could possibly have of the negligent management of this institution. If this is so, for what purpose is the dangerous ward? In the plea it was denied that any such classification of patients exists, but for the credit of the institution, I am happy to say, that this allegation is contradicted by the evidence.

But then it is denied that Elliott was known to be a dangerous patient. Well, he had committed at least one previous assault on an attendant, and after the assault on the plaintiff it was as much as two men could do to overpower him. How many assaults must a patient commit before he is considered dangerous? We have it in evidence that one patient was sent to the dangerous ward after having committed one single assault; but then that assault was committed, not on an attendant, but on Dr. Black.

As to my second point the evidence, especially that of Dr. McMullen, shows that the plaintiff was unskilfully treated, and that as a result of such unskilful treatment he is disabled for life from following the only kind of occupation for which he is fitted. True, he has continued for some time to perform his duties at the Asylum, but that does not prove that he is fit to do so. A man with shattered nerves, suffering almost constant pain, is not the sort of man to fulfil the onerous duties of an attendant on the insane. He has continued to perform those duties to the best of his ability because he must either do so or starve; and his services have been retained by the authorities because had they discharged him as unfit for duty they would have given their whole case away. The cast of his mouth speaks for itself: it shows lateral displacement and bad articulation of the teeth, while the facets and grooves on the teeth clearly prove that at one time the articulation was good. Dr. Morris considers that some of the dental deformities are certainly due to injury. Sir E. S. Stevenson, the chief Government witness, carries the case no further. All he can say is that the jaw has well united, but that does not prove that it was properly set. He admits an abnormal formation of the teeth, and that they are tilted inwards. I take it that it is hardly necessary to argue that unskilful medical treatment by a medical practitioner is a tort whether it arises from want of care or want of skill, and that the Government is responsible for the torts of its servants if committed in the discharge of their official duties. All actions against the Government for personal injuries sustained by reason of railway accidents are based on this latter principle.

As to the damages claimed, no doubt £3,000 may seem rather a large sum, but it is really very moderate as it is based merely on the present emoluments of the plaintiff, and takes no account of what would have been his future prospects had he not met with this accident. His present position is worth to him nearly £150 a year, and Mr. McCorkindale tells us that a man of plaintiff's age would have to pay fully £3,000 to purchase a life annuity of that amount.

Mr. Jones was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff, while employed as an attendant at the lunatic asylum at Valkenberg, was injured by reason of an attack made upon him by one of the patients. The patient was a Mr. Elliott, who, while the lunatics under the charge of the plaintiff were exercising, lagged behind. He was called upon by the plaintiff to go on, and he suddenly rushed upon the plaintiff and gave him a blow on the jaw, which resulted in a fracture of the jaw. The plaintiff was treated by Dr. Black, who was one of the medical attendants at the asylum, and after the treatment was over, he returned to his work, and has for nearly two years since been in the service of the Government and employed as an attendant at the asylum. He now claims £3,000 damages on the ground that the injury which he had sustained was so great as permanently to disable him, and he states that there is two-fold negligence on the part of the Government officials—first of all, in that he (the plaintiff) was not duly warned that Elliott was a dangerous patient, and, secondly, in that, after an injury had been done to him (plaintiff), he had not been skilfully treated by Dr. Black, the surgeon at the lunatic asylum. With regard to the first ground of negligence, there is no satisfactory evidence to show that Elliott was, in any sense of the term, a dangerous patient. It is true that on one occasion he did make a rush upon one of the attendants, that is before this occasion, but he seems to have given the attendant merely a push, no serious results ensued from it, and, in point of fact, the statement is made by Dr. Black, and it is not denied, that there is no charge of previous assaults recorded against Elliott in the record books of the asylum. According to Dr. Black, he says: "I certainly do not call Elliott a dangerous lunatic; he is easily managed as a rule; he is like an overgrown boy, etc." Now, a person who undertakes a duty like that of an attendant at an asylum must know that he would be exposed to sudden attacks of this nature. It is in the nature of the occupation. Every person confined in that asylum is a person who, legally, is not responsible for his actions, and, although the majority of them may not actually commit assaults, every attendant knows that he may at any moment be exposed to an assault. I do not say that there would have been a case if Elliott had been a dangerous patient, but I do say that inasmuch as there is no proof whatever that Elliott was a dangerous patient there was no necessity for giving plaintiff any caution as to Elliott, and that when the plaintiff was assaulted it was one of those matters which he might have expected, and which does not give him a legal claim against the Government for damages. Of course, as to the claim from other points of view, I say nothing, but as to the legal claim there is none. Well, then, the further question is raised as to whether, after the assault, the plaintiff had been properly treated. The medical attendant at the asylum, who was employed for the purpose of treating the plaintiff, was Dr. Black. He seems to have devoted his time and skill to the case of the plaintiff. He attended him regularly, and he did everything that he thought was reasonably required. He used what is called a four-tail bandage, and I am satisfied, from the medical testimony given to-day, that the treatment was perfectly sufficient under the circumstances. It may well be that if the plaintiff had been sent away to the hospital, and had been left to himself entirely, it would have been better for him, but, seeing that he was under the immediate care and daily attention of Dr. Black, there seems to have been no necessity for doing more than using this four-tail bandage which was used. Now a very good test as to whether there was proper treatment or not seems to me to be whether this fracture is still discernible now or not. The setting seems to have been so skilful that it is now impossible, from feeling the jaw or looking at it, to see where the fracture was. It is no longer possible to see the point where the fracture took place. I can quite understand the statement of Dr. Stevenson that, if this setting had not been skilfully done, the point at which the fracture of the jaw took place would have shown the marks of this fracture, but there is nothing at present to show any such mark. No lateral displacement was observed by Dr. Stevenson, and I am quite satisfied that everything that could reasonably be expected was done by Dr. Black, and that there was no unskilful treatment on his part. Therefore, I do not go into the further question whether, supposing there had been proof of unskilfulness in this case, the Government would have been liable for the acts of the surgeon. It may well be argued that if the Government employed a fit and proper person to attend to the plaintiff and that fit and proper person does go wrong in this instance, it does not necessarily produce any legal liability on the part of the Government. But it is not necessary now to express any opinion on that legal question, seeing that upon that question of fact, I am not satisfied that the plaintiff has proved such unskilfulness on the part of Dr. Black as to entitle him (the plaintiff) to sue either Dr. Black himself or the Government that employed him. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court must be for the defendant with costs.

Mr. Rowson submitted that the plaintiff should not pay costs of the commission to take Dr. Black's evidence, and of the exception withdrawn by the Government.

De Villiers, C.J.: My own view is that it is to be regretted that the exception was withdrawn, because if the exception had been argued possibly all the further expense would not have been incurred of witnesses coming into Court to prove this case to-day. I can see no reason, however much one sympathises with the plaintiff, why the Court should not follow the ordinary practice in this case, that, when the defendant has wholly failed in his case, he must pay the costs. As far as this Court is concerned, it must follow the ordinary course, and give judgment for the defendant with costs. If the Government wish to treat the plaintiff liberally, of course that is another question, but I must follow the ordinary course and give judgment for the defendant with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SELLE. { 1906.
{ Oct. 26th

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising registration of a certain bond.
Order granted as prayed.

PARKER V. FEDER.

Withdrawal of case—Costs.

The plaintiff having instituted an action against the defendant for a debt, discovered that it had been paid; and, according to his own statement, which the defendant denied, informed the defendant that the action would be withdrawn. Two days afterwards, the defendant called on the plaintiff's attorney, who knew nothing about the withdrawal of the case, and thereupon the defendant gave instructions to his own attorney for the defence of the case: Subsequently notice of withdrawal was given.

Held, that the plaintiff should pay the defendant's costs incurred before receipt of such notice.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not pay £7 16s. 5d., taxed costs incurred in certain proceedings in which respondent was plaintiff and applicant was defendant, which proceedings were withdrawn without (applicant alleged) due notice being given.

From the affidavits it appeared that the application arose out of an action commenced by respondent to recover £55, alleged to be due upon a certain notarial bond by reason of an instalment not having been paid. Applicant said that he had paid the instalment to another party on behalf of respondent, and that he should not have been sued.

Dr. Greer was for applicant, B. Parker, of Kalk Bay; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent, Harry Feder.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: Summons was issued at the time when there was nothing owing to the plaintiff. The applicant in the present case, who was the defendant, went to the plaintiff's place, and explained the matter, and what took place at the interview is in dispute. According to the applicant, nothing was said about withdrawing the case. According to the respondent's statement, it was said at the time that the case would be withdrawn. But I do not think that a case of this kind should have to depend on the question of credibility between these two persons. There was a formal summons issued as against the present applicant, and it would not have been safe for him to act upon a mere verbal arrangement that the summons would be withdrawn until there was a formal withdrawal. On the Saturday when this alleged arrangement took place the respondent ought there and then to have telegraphed to his attorney to withdraw the matter, or, at all events, if he did not do it on Saturday he should have done it on Monday morning, and informed his attorney as to what had taken place between him and applicant. Applicant went to Cape Town apparently in the belief that the action was to come on, else I do not understand why he should have come to Cape Town. He went to the office of the respondent's attorney, and the respondent's attorney did not then tell him that the action was withdrawn. The attorney had got a summons issued, the attorney had got the proceedings in hand, and he (applicant) would naturally look to the attorney as the one who would indicate whether the summons had been withdrawn or not. The attorney does not say anything of that kind. Naturally, the applicant instructed his own attorney to defend the case. But then it is said that, when he went to his own attorney, that attorney ought to have known that the action would not be proceeded with because he had a receipt. But in the absence of a formal withdrawal by the attorney of the action, the applicant was justified in believing that the action would proceed, and I cannot accept a vague statement of what took place between the parties on the Saturday as amounting to such a formal withdrawal as would compel the applicant to stay his hand and take no steps to meet the case. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the applicant is entitled to his costs. The Court will grant as order as prayed, with costs.

INSOLVENT ESTATE DICKSON V. TURNBULL.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from removing or disposing of certain goods, being furniture and stock of liquors contained in the Royal Hotel, Wynberg, pending an adjustment of the rights between himself and applicant by action.

Mr. Upington was for applicant; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

Having heard counsel in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The rule in question called upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from removing or disposing of certain goods pending adjustment of the rights between himself and the applicant by action. It would seem that before this rule was served upon the respondent, the respondent had obtained from the auctioneer a sum of £50, as a charge upon these goods, and he had already paid over the money to his attorneys for the purpose of prosecuting an action against Ohlsson. The rule, therefore, cannot operate upon the £50. Already that £50 had been paid. The rule could only operate upon the goods, to prevent the removing or disposing of the goods; that is all. Then, after that, there was an agreement between the parties that the goods should be removed and disposed of, and that the proceeds should be paid over to Mr. Steytler (the trustee), pending further action. But the whole of the proceeds could not be handed over to Mr. Steytler, because £50 had already been paid over, and had been handed over by the respondent to his attorneys. I do not see, therefore, that the Court can now make the rule absolute, or make any order as to the £50. As to the rest of the property, it has already been sold by an agreement between the parties. The only course, therefore, now will be for the present applicant to proceed with his action against respondent, or else the trustee may retain the money until the question of Turnbull v. Ohlsson has been decided, in which this question of partnership is also raised. There will, therefore, be no order upon the present application, but I do think that the costs of this application may fairly be reserved for the final decision.

After hearing counsel further,

De Villiers, C.J., said there would be no order, except that the applicant's action must be brought to trial during next term, costs to be costs in that action.

STOWE V. BROMBERG AND } 1906.
ANOTHER. } Oct. 26th.

Police Offences Acts—Exception—Amendment of Record.

The applicant, having been convicted by the Resident Magistrate of S. of having in the main street of S. used threatening, offensive and insulting language and behaviour towards B., with intent to provoke a breach of the peace in contravention of the 10th section of Act 27 of 1882, applied to the Supreme Court for an order to have the Record amended so as to make it clear that an exception had been taken to the summons to the effect that Act 21 of 1894 ought to have been mentioned. The Magistrate denied that the exception had been taken.

Held, that there was no necessity for such an amendment, for even if the exception had been on the Record, there would have been no ground for disturbing the conviction.

This was an application brought by George Frederick Stowe, against Hyman Bromberg and the Acting Resident Magistrate of Steytlerville to show cause why a certain record of proceedings in the Magistrate's Court should not be amended.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Acting Resident Magistrate of Steytlerville.

Affidavits having been read, and Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The charge against the applicant was that "he did, in the main street of Steytlerville, use threatening, abusive, and insulting words and behaviour to the said Hyman Bromberg, with intent to provoke a breach of the peace," and it is said that thus the applicant did contravene the 10th section of Act 27, 1882. It is now asked that this Court should order that the record be amended by making it clear that an exception was taken to the summons to the effect that the Act No. 21 of 1894 had been contravened. The Magistrate, however, denies that such exception was taken. He says that the Act was mentioned, but it was not by way of formal exception. Whether the applicant is right or whether the Magistrate is right, it is quite clear that even if the exception had been inserted on the record, it would have made no difference to the result, because not mentioning the Act of 1894 could not possibly affect a charge of using insulting words in a public street at Steytlerville, which would have been triable under the Act of 1882, and, moreover, the Act of 1894 distinctly says that "this Act shall be read as one with the Police Offences Act, 1882, and as though the last preceding section were inserted in part 2 of the said Act." Then there is a further objection to the effect that Bromberg, against whom these words were used, and upon whose complaint and information the prosecution had been instituted, desired to withdraw the charge. Well, I shall not inquire now into the question whether, even if it had been mentioned in the record, that there was such a desire that the Magistrate would have been bound to allow the withdrawal, but if the applicant wishes for an amendment it lies upon him to prove that the application was formally made by Bromberg to withdraw from the prosecution. The Magistrate held that such application was not made. The prosecution was not a private one, he says, and the complainant Hyman Bromberg, said nothing whatever about wishing to withdraw the charge in Court or out of it. Bromberg himself is not called to prove that he did withdraw the charge, and there is this fact, that, upon the record, it appears that Bromberg gave his evidence and fully supported the charge. So that I am inclined to accept the statement of the Magistrate that no formal application was made by Bromberg to withdraw the charge. Under these circumstances, there is no necessity for any amendment of the record, and the application must be refused, with costs.

NATIONAL BANK V. PEEL.

Divisional Court—Appeal to Supreme Court—Security.

The question as to whether the security offered by the party appellant under Sec. 26 of Act 35 of 1896 is good and sufficient, should in the case of an appeal from a Divisional Court to the Supreme Court be decided by the Registrar of the Supreme Court, as he is also Registrar of the Divisional Court.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be barred from prosecuting an appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp, sitting as a Divisional Court, by reason of his failure to prosecute the said appeal within the time fixed by Rules of Court, or should the Court give leave, why he should not be barred until he has entered into good and sufficient security.

The Divisional Court had given judgment against respondent for £5,601 18s. 5d., with interest and costs. An appeal was noted, but there had been delay in the preparation of the record, and some question had arisen as to providing security for the due fulfilment of the order of Court. Respondent said that he was willing to pass a mortgage bond binding generally his person and all his property, and specially hypothecating his landed property, which was valued at about £22,000. He submitted that this was ample security.

Mr. Upington was for applicant; Mr. Burton (with him Dr. Rainsford) was for respondent.

Affidavits having been read and counsel heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that the respondent has been in default, not only in prosecuting his appeal, but also in not giving the requisite security. The Court is now asked to prevent the respondent from proceeding with his appeal at all. Well, I do not think that, in all the circumstances, the Court should prevent the respondent from prosecuting his appeal in case he can give the requisite security, but that security must be given, and it must be to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court. The respondent now, in his affidavit, offers to give certain security, but I do not think the matter should come in the first instance before the Court. If the Registrar were to refuse the security tendered, then, perhaps, there might be ground for applying to the Court, but until it has been before the Registrar, I do not think the Court should express any opinion about the security which has been offered. The Court will therefore order that the respondent be barred from proceeding with his appeal, until he shall have entered into good and sufficient security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court for the due performance of the judgment of the Divisional Court, and I think respondent should pay the costs of this application. I would, however, suggest to the applicant that he should carefully consider the proposal. If the applicant consent, I suppose the Registrar will raise no further objection. If he refuse, the Registrar will have to go into the whole question. But it does appear, on the face of it, that the security offered by the respondent will be ample security for the judgment.

Mr. Upington asked that some time should be fixed within which security should be given.

De Villiers, C.J., said that leave would be given to the applicant to move for execution on the judgment unless the security were given.

SCHWANER V. HOLMES.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why the case should not be set down for trial on the 12th November.

Mr. Burton was for applicant; Mr. Gardiner was for respondent.

Respondent made a cross-application that the subject matter of the dispute should be submitted to an accountant as referee. The case arose out of a partnership business at Upington.

Having heard affidavits and counsel, De Villiers, C.J., directed the case to be set down for the 12th November, costs to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BULAWAYO MUNICIPALITY { 1906.
V. BULAWAYO WATER- { Oct. 29th.
WORKS CO. { Nov. 5th.

Contract—Construction—Supply of electric current—Actual cost—Depreciation of plant—Generating light.

Under a contract between W. and M., the former obtained a concession to supply the inhabitants of B. with electric light, and M. stipulated that W. should light the public streets on condition, inter alia, that W. shall work the generating plant and maintain the light in all the street lamps for an average of six hours per night on two hundred and fifty nights per annum, "to be fixed by" M.

Held, affirming the decision of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, that the parties must be presumed to have intended that there shall be a corresponding obligation on M. to take and pay for the light and that it was for M. to fix the 250 nights when the lamps should be lit.

In consideration of the undertakings given by W., M. undertook and agreed to pay

W. at such rate as would yield to W. a return equal to ten per cent. over the actual cost of generating the light.

Held, that the cost of generating the light included the cost of generating the electric current as well as transmitting the current to the lamps, and that "actual cost" did not include interest on capital, but did include depreciation of plant and machinery as well as rents, rates and taxes, so far as they relate to the electrical works.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Vincent, senior judge of the High Court, Southern Rhodesia, in an action brought by respondents against appellants for £1,240 2s. 3d., on an account for electric light charges and a declaration of rights in respect of an agreement under which the Waterworks Co. supply electricity to the municipality for street lighting purposes. There was also a cross appeal.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are a company duly incorporated under the English Companies' Acts, having an office and carrying on business in Southern Rhodesia. The defendants are the Municipality of Bulawayo.

2. On the 28th February, 1895, an agreement, copy of which is hereto annexed marked "A," was entered into between the British South Africa Company and Messrs. Napier, Weir and Clark, whereby the latter undertook to supply the inhabitants of Bulawayo and its suburbs with electric light upon the terms and conditions in the said agreement set forth, and to which plaintiffs crave leave to refer.

3. On the 17th August, 1897, the said Messrs. Napier, Weir and Clark, with the knowledge and consent of the British South Africa Company, ceded all their rights and interest under the said agreement to Willoughby's Consolidated Company, Limited, who in turn with the consent of the British South Africa Company on the 4th September, 1897, duly ceded same to plaintiffs.

4. On the 1st September, 1899, the British South Africa Company ceded and assigned all its right, title and interest under the said agreement to the defendants, who have since that date exercised all the powers previously exercised by the British South Africa Company.

5. The plaintiffs have duly carried out the terms of the said agreement, in terms thereof, and during the months of October, November and December, 1904, supplied to defendants 12,665 units of electrical power for lighting purposes, for which they are entitled in terms of Clause 20, Sub-section 11 of the said agreement to payment of the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d., the said sum being at the rate fixed by the aforesaid Sub-section, and will more fully appear from the account hereto annexed marked (B).

6. The defendants have refused and still refuse to pay to plaintiffs the said sum of £1,240 2s. 3d., or any part thereof.

7. Under the terms of the said agreement the plaintiffs undertook in the event of defendants desiring to avail themselves of the electric light in their streets or public places, to provide light for such streets or public places upon certain terms and conditions in the said agreement, and set forth more especially in Clause 20 thereof, to which plaintiffs crave leave to refer.

8. The defendants duly notified their intention of availing themselves of the electric light in the public streets, and determined the number and positions of street lamp posts required, and plaintiffs placed them where required, and have from time to time as defendants requested provided additional street lamps.

9. The plaintiffs have since the 1st July, 1904, requested defendants to fix the hours of street lighting in terms of the said agreement, and have always been ready and willing to maintain the light in all such street lamps for an average of 6 hours per night on 250 nights per annum, but defendants in breach of the said agreement have failed and refused to fix the hours aforesaid, and refused to use all the said lamps for the time agreed upon.

10. All times have elapsed, all things have happened, and all things have been done entitling the plaintiffs to bring this action.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim:

(a) Judgment for the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d.

(b) Interest a tempore moræ.

(c) A declaration of rights that plaintiffs are entitled to maintain and keep alight the street lamps for an average of six hours per night on 250 nights per annum, and that defendants be ordered to fix the hours of street lighting.

(d) General relief and costs of suit.

To this declaration defendants pleaded and claimed in reconvention as follows:

1. The defendants admit paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 8 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 5 of the declaration, save that the defendants admit that the plaintiffs during the said months supplied 12,665 units of electrical power for lighting purposes to the defendants and that the plaintiffs are entitled to be paid for the same in terms of clause 20 sub-section 11 of the said agreement, they deny the allegations contained in the said paragraph.

3. The defendants deny the accuracy of the account annexed to the declaration, or that it is such an account as they are entitled under the said agreement to be provided with by the plaintiffs. They deny that the said account is an account of the costs actually incurred by the plaintiffs in generating the light consumed in the streets, public places, or private property of the defendants for the said months of October, November and December, 1904. The defendants further deny that the plaintiffs are entitled under the agreement to charge against the defendants on the basis of the particulars contained in the said account or to include in the same the items repairs, maintenance, management, rent, rates, taxes, depreciation, interest on capital, or any charges other than the actual cost of generating the said light.

4. As to paragraph 6 of the declaration, the defendants admit the refusal to pay the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d., but deny that they have not paid or refuse to pay any part thereof.

5. The defendants have always been ready and willing to pay the plaintiffs whatever amount is actually due to them in terms of clause 20 sub-section 11 of the said agreement, and have from time to time informed the plaintiffs to that effect, and requested them to provide a proper account showing the amount due in terms of the said sub-section. The plaintiffs, in the breach of the said agreement, have failed and refused to provide the defendants with such an account or to render any account from which the defendants can ascertain what is due to the plaintiffs under the said agreement so as to enable the defendants to pay or tender the said amount.

6. Failing the receipt of such an account, the defendants have, with respect to the said 12,665 units, paid the plaintiffs the sum of £635 5s., being at the rate of 1s. per unit, such payment having been agreed between the plaintiffs and defendants to be without prejudice to the defendants' right to a refund should this Honourable Court hold that they have overpaid the plaintiffs, or to the plaintiffs' right to recover any excess that they may be legally entitled to.

7. As to paragraph 7 of the declaration, the defendants crave leave to refer to the said agreement.

8. As to paragraph 9 of the declaration, the defendants admit that the plaintiffs have since the said 1st July, 1904, being ready and willing to maintain the light as therein alleged, and that the defendants have refused to fix the said hours, but deny that such refusal constitutes a breach of the said agreement, or that it was ever agreed that the defendants should be bound to use all or any of the said lamps for the time alleged.

9. The defendants deny the allegations in paragraph 10 of the declaration, or that the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration of rights as claimed.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention, the defendants (now plaintiffs) repeat paragraphs 3 and 5 of the plea, and claim a declaration of rights that they are entitled under the said agreement to be provided by the plaintiffs (now defendants) with quarterly accounts showing the costs actually incurred by the plaintiffs (now defendants) in generating the light consumed in the streets, public places or private property of the defendants (now plaintiffs) for each particular quarter, and that the plaintiffs (now defendants) are not entitled to charge against the defendants (now plaintiffs) on the basis of the particulars annexed to the declaration, or to include charges other than the actual cost of generating the said light.

The defendants (now plaintiffs) further crave leave to repeat paragraph 6 of the plea, and should it be found that they have overpaid the plaintiffs (now defendants) for the said light, claim a refund of such overpayment if any.

Wherefore the plaintiffs in reconvention claim:

1. A declaration of rights against the defendants in reconvention in terms as above stated.
2. A refund of any amount which may be found due to them as above referred to.
3. General relief.
4. Costs of suit.

PLAINTIFF'S REPLICATION.

1. Save as hereinafter admitted and except in so far as defendants' plea contains admissions, the plaintiffs join issue thereon with defendants.

2. Plaintiffs admit paragraph 6 of defendants' plea, and claim judgment for the balance of the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d.

For a plea to the claim in reconvention the plaintiffs (now defendants in reconvention) say:

(1) They crave leave to refer to the admission made in paragraph 2 of the replication.

(2) They have always been and still are ready and willing to furnish plaintiffs in reconvention with accounts showing the costs incurred in generating the light for the particular quarter ending 31st December, 1904.

(3) Save as above they deny each and every allegation contained in the claim in reconvention, and pray that the same may be dismissed with costs.

The defendants' replication to the plea in reconvention was general.

The judgment of the Court below was as follows:

In February, 1896, an agreement was entered into between the British South Africa Company and Messrs. Napier and Weir and Clark, whereby the latter undertook to supply the inhabitants of Bulawayo and its suburbs with electric light upon certain terms and conditions to so much of which special reference will hereafter be made in so far as is pertinent to the issues in this action.

In August, 1897, Messrs. Napier, Weir and Clark with the consent of the British South Africa Company ceded all their rights under this agreement to Wilmoughby's Consolidated Company, Limited, who, in September, 1897, ceded the same to the plaintiffs in this action; and, in September, 1899, the British South Africa Company ceded all its rights under the agreement to the Municipality of Bulawayo, who have since that date exercised all the powers previously exercised by the British South Africa Company. The plaintiff company under one management carries on two undertakings, viz.: the supply of water and of electricity.

It was admitted that the primary object of the agreement was for the supply of electricity to the general public. The agreement also makes provision for the supply of electric light for the public streets and to the private property of the British South Africa Company or its assigns when the Waterworks Company is called upon to provide the same.

It appears that prior to September, 1904, with regard to the supply of electric light to the street lamps a special tariff had been agreed upon, and it was only in consequence of a request on the part of the municipality to the plaintiff company for a reduction in the tariff that the present dispute arose.

It is common cause that the plaintiff company have duly complied with the terms of the agreement in so far as the erection of lamps in the streets at the request of the municipality is concerned.

The plaintiffs now sue the municipality for the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d., being as they allege the amount due under sub-section 11 of section 20 of the agreement of 12,665 units of electrical power supplied for lighting the street lamps during the months of October, November and December, 1904. The plaintiffs further claim an order declaring that they are entitled to maintain the lights in the street lamps for an average of six hours per night for two hundred and fifty nights per annum, and that the defendants be ordered to fix the hour of street lighting. This latter claim is based on the provisions of sub-section 8 of section 20 of the agreement which is in the following terms:—

"The contractors shall work the generating plant and maintain the light in all the street lamps for an average of six hours per night on two hundred and fifty nights per annum to be fixed by the company, the lamps to be lighted within fifteen minutes after sunset."

Annexed to the plaintiffs' declaration is an account showing the method by which the sum of £1,240 2s. 3d. is arrived at.

The defendants in their plea deny the accuracy of this account, or that it is such an account as they are entitled to under the agreement. They further say that it is not an account of the cost actually incurred by the plaintiffs in generating the light for the streets, and they further allege that the plaintiffs are not entitled to charge against the defendants on the basis of the particulars contained in such an account, or to include in the same the items repairs and maintenance, management, rent, rates, taxes, depreciation, interest on capital, or any charges other than the actual cost of generating the said light. The defendants further say that they have always been ready and willing to pay whatever amount is due in terms of sub-section 11 of section 20 of the agreement, and have from time to time requested the plaintiffs to provide them with a proper account showing what is due in terms of such sub-section, but that the plaintiffs have failed and refused to provide them with such an account as would enable them to ascertain what is actually due.

With regard to the charge for the supply of 12,665 units of electricity the defendants have paid (by agreement between them and the plaintiffs, but without prejudice to defendants' right to a refund should the Court hold that they have overpaid the plaintiffs, or to the plaintiffs' right to recover any excess they may be entitled to be paid by the defendants) the sum of £635 5s., being at the rate of one shilling per unit of electricity supplied.

In answer to the second claim of the plaintiffs, the defendants admit that the plaintiffs have been ready and willing to maintain the lights in the street lamps for two hundred and fifty nights per annum for six hours per night, and that they (the defendants) have refused to fix such hours, but they deny that such refusal constitutes a breach of the agreement, or that it was ever agreed that the defendants were bound to use all or any of the street lamps for the time alleged.

By way of claim in reconvention, the defendants allege that they are entitled to be provided with quarterly accounts showing the cost actually incurred in generating the light consumed in the streets for each particular quarter, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to charge for electricity on the basis the particulars contained in the account annexed to the declaration. They further claim a refund of such amount as the Court may find due to them in respect of the payment of £635 5s.

I propose dealing first with the second claim of the plaintiffs, and this involves the interpretation of sub-section 8 of section 20 of the agreement. I may at once say that I have no hesitation whatever in arriving at the conclusion that the contention of the plaintiffs is correct. I am of the opinion that when once the plaintiffs, in compliance with the request of the municipality, erected street lamps, it was the duty of the municipality to fix the nights and hours during which the light is to be maintained in the street lamps. I consider that the contention of the municipality that this sub-section merely fixes the maximum amount which can be demanded from the plaintiff company, and which the company is bound to supply if required, is unsound.

Sub-sections 1, 2, 8 and 9 of section 20, when read together, appear to me to mean that as soon as the company (now the municipality) have stated the number of lamps they desire to be erected, such number becomes the minimum they agree to pay for, though they can still ask for more and pay for more.

The acceptance of the interpretation placed on this sub-section by the municipality would, in my opinion, if carried out to extreme lengths, be most inequitable, for it would mean that if the company were called upon to erect at their own expense a large number of street lamps, and to have always in readiness (as they would be bound under the agreement) a supply of electrical current sufficient for the lighting of such lamps, the municipality could quietly lie by and, without incurring any liability whatever, refuse to make use of current for such lamps.

On this part of the case, then, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs must succeed, and that if the municipality refuse to comply with the provisions of sub-section 8, the plaintiff company is entitled to demand payment for so much current as may be sufficient to maintain light in the street lamps for two hundred and fifty nights on an average of six hours per night.

Now I come to what is the difficult part of the case. As I have already said, the plaintiff company carry on two operations under one general management, viz., the supply of water and electricity.

I find that the amount of capital sunk in the waterworks amounts to £86,000 odd, whilst that invested in electrical plant, etc., is £58,000 odd. I think it must be clear from the nature of things that more management must be devoted to, and more expense incurred in, the electrical than in the waterworks operations. In allocating the expenses of these two operations the plaintiff company have taken as a basis the amount of gross revenue. In connection with this point the defendants contend that the respective capitals should be taken as a test, and that it is not fair to take as a basis gross revenue.

I must confess that I have experienced some difficulty on this question, but I am inclined to the view that gross revenue should be regarded as the more satisfactory test to be applied whenever allocation becomes necessary.

Now taking the account annexed to the declaration it will be found that in order to arrive at the cost per unit for the year 1904, the plaintiffs have taken as a divisor into what they considered as actual cost, the total amount of units sold to the general public and to the municipality.

The amount of electricity supplied to private consumers is ascertained from reading the meters at the consumers' premises, while the amount of electricity supplied to the municipality is shown on a meter kept at the plaintiffs' works. The municipality are thus debited with units generated. It has been said and I accept the statement as a fact that with regard to the electricity supplied to the private consumers, there is a loss of current in transmission to the extent of twenty-five per cent. Under these circumstances it is argued by the municipality that the divisor should not be units sold but units generated, and that being so, there should be added to the total amounts of units sold, thirty-three and a third per cent. of the total amount of units sold to private consumers. In such a case the divisor instead of being 185,347 should be 230,606. I consider this contention to be fair, and in my opinion should be accepted.

I now come to the question of the construction of sub-section 11 of section 20 of the agreement. It is as follows:—

"In consideration whereof the said company undertakes and agrees to pay to the contractors or to their assigns at such rates as will yield to the contractors a return equal to 10 per cent. over the actual cost of generating the light, payments to be made quarterly at the office of the company in Bulawayo."

The plaintiffs argue that this sub-section means in effect that they are to receive in payment 10 per cent. over all costs incurred by them in supplying the municipality with electricity. On the other hand, the defendants contend that they are only bound to pay 10 per cent. over what is actually expended in the works in and about the generation of current, and that such costs only include such items as wages, fuel, oil, waste, water and engine-room stores, and repairs and maintenance to plant in the works, and to so much of management as is devoted to the production of electricity at the works. They further contend that if there is any additional liability on them, it is only in respect of what is reasonably incurred in and about the distribution of electricity, that is to say, transmission of current up to the point of ignition at the lamp.

Great reliance is placed by the defendants on the form of yearly returns required by the Board of Trade in England to be made by companies and local bodies supplying electricity. These accounts are divided into various headings, showing the costs of the separate departments. Form "A" deals with the generation of electricity, and shows what charges are allocated to generation. It includes such charges as wages, fuel, oil, waste, water and engine-room stores, repairs and maintenance to plant at the works. Form "B" deals with the distribution of electricity, and provides for the salaries of superintendents and officers, wages to linesmen, fitters and labourers, repairs and maintenance and renewals of apparatus at distributing stations. Form "E" deals with rent, rates and taxes. Form "F" deals with management expenses, such as director's remuneration, salaries of managing engineer, secretary, accountants, clerks, messengers, salaries or commissions of collectors, stationery and printing, general establishment charges, auditors of companies. Form "G" deals with the law and parliamentary charges. Form "H" deals with depreciation. Form "I" deals with special charges such as insurance, superannuation, etc.

Now the municipality urge that the words "generating light" in the subsection under discussion means "generating current," that is to say, the production of electricity at the works, and that being so, they were only chargeable in accordance with Form "A" of the form of accounts prescribed by the Board of Trade, with such items as appear in such form, but that if the Court holds that "generating light" must be interpreted to mean the production of electricity, plus transmission to the lamp, their liability is confined to the items contained in Form "A" plus those contained in Form "B" of the before-mentioned accounts.

Now it is clear that in several clauses of the agreement the term "light" is not correctly used, leading one to infer that the agreement was drawn up by a person not fully cognisant with the technical terms. In my opinion the parties contemplated the cost of production and distribution, and in these circumstances I am bound by the form of accounts prescribed by the Board of Trade. I do not consider that the form is conclusive in this case. Local bodies and companies in England supplying electricity are bound by Statute to fill up annually statements of accounts in such form and containing such particulars as shall be prescribed from time to time by the Board of Trade. These accounts are framed to enable the Board of Trade as well as the general public to ascertain the cost at which the undertakers are carrying on their operations and for the sake of comparing the costs incurred in each department with a view of framing such tariff of charges as may be considered to be reasonable. In these circumstances I am inclined to the view that in deciding as to what is the meaning of "actual costs of generating light," I am not bound by whatever form the Board of Trade may from time to time prescribe.

Now as I have already stated the argument of the plaintiffs really amounts to this, that "actual costs" mean "total costs," and includes such items as general management, depreciation, and interest on capital.

Reference was made to the cases of The Harrington, and the Grtna Holme, and The Marjessa, in all of which cases charges such as depreciation, repairs and maintenance, and interest on capital were recognised as being recoverable. With regard to these authorities it became practically necessary to define the terms "charges" and "expenses," which in my opinion have a far broader meaning than "actual costs."

I will first deal with the question of interest on capital. I find it difficult to understand why a percentage of this amount should be chargeable to defendants under the heading of "actual costs." In the case of Hills v. The Colonial Government (21 Juta, page 59) the meaning of "actual costs" was discussed, and the question arose whether interest should be included in the amount of "actual costs." The Chief Justice in his judgment (vide page 70) states:

"The question whether interest should be included in the amount of 'actual costs' was considered in the case between the same parties relating to the two other lines of railway, and I see no reason for departing from the view there taken. That was the case of a contract with an ordinary contractor, whereas the agreement now in question was with a concessionaire undertaking to construct a railway on consideration of a subsidy to be paid to him, but that is no reason for giving a different interpretation to the words in question. Evidence was tendered and not objected to, that the term 'actual cost' would, in commercial dealings, be regarded as including interest, but no definite instance was mentioned in which this interpretation was accepted. The witnesses do not appear to me to give sufficient effect to the limitation introduced by the word 'actual.' Moreover, the meaning of the phrase must be collected from the terms of the agreement, and not from the opinions of expert witnesses."

It will be noticed that in the report and statement of accounts of the plaintiff company for the year ending 31st December, 1903, there is no record of interest, and in the cost chart for that year I can find no reference to interest on capital. Similarly, in their cost chart for the year 1904, no mention is made of the item interest on capital, and there is an absence of this item in the account originally supplied to the defendants in their letter of the 25th January, 1905. I am of opinion that this charge, interest on capital, should not be included in the term "actual cost."

I consider that the term "actual," when used in connection with cost, must have some limited meaning, and I incline to the view that the nearest approach to it would be "prime cost." I find in Volume 2 of the "Encyclopædia of Accounting," pages 262 and 263, a discussion as to prime cost. It says:—

"Prime cost is literally first cost, and the phrase is best used to mean either the sum expended by a merchant in acquiring a complete article to be sold in the form in which it is bought, or the sums expended by a manufacturer (a) in purchasing raw material, and (b) in paying for the labour in converting the raw material into a saleable product, leaving aside the question of expenses.

"In the United States, 'prime cost' is generally known as 'flat cost.' The word 'cost' alone, if used correctly, should mean the full cost, or 'total cost,' the total outlay in the production of a commodity being 'prime cost,' plus expenses of sale, distribution and administration.

"These 'expenses,' or 'charges,' are broadly divisible into 'direct' and 'indirect.' They are also known as 'establishment charges' and 'oncost' in British practice, and as 'expense burden' or 'general expenses' in the United States.

"The difference between 'prime cost' and 'cost' is therefore the amount of the expenses, while the difference between 'cost' and 'selling price' is the trader's net profit, and the difference between 'prime cost' and 'selling price,' is the trader's gross profit. . . .

"The cost of a product falls into three distinct parts:—(1) Material used in its production. (2) Labour or workmanship, i.e., wages directly expended upon its productions. (3) The expenses of keeping up the factory and establishment.

"The following is a general analysis of a product based upon the above definitions:—Elements of a product (Order or Job).

"Elements of a Product (Order or Job).—Prime Cost: (1) Material. (2) Labour (productive). (3) Departmental or direct expenses (of production); motive power; wages of superintendence, foremen, cleaners, etc., royalties, wayleaves, patent fees; lighting and heating of plant and buildings; rents, taxes and insurance of buildings; depreciation and upholding of plant and buildings."

And then it goes on:—"(4) Indirect expenses (of distribution and administration); salaries of directors, officers and managers; upkeep of office and warehouse; interest and financing expenses; traveller's salaries, commissions and expenses; bad debt allowance."

It will thus be seen that indirect expenses, such as salaries of directors, officers and managers, upkeep of office and warehouse, interest and financing expenses, travellers' salaries, commissions and expenses, are not included in the term "prime cost."

Much argument was devoted to the item depreciation. I am of the opinion that the principle of including depreciation should be allowed. I think it would enter as an element in the cost should enter as an element in the cost of manufacture. In this "Encyclopædia"

"... In relation to profit and loss, it enters as an element in the cost of manufacture represented by the deterioration by wear and tear, decay, or reduction of value arising by reason of age, and use of buildings, fixed and loose machinery, and plant of every description employed in the production of things produced for sale or disposal in the ordinary way of trade. In the ultimate result of this employment, buildings, machinery and plant are, in their nature, an element in the cost of production of any given article of trade manipulated or manufactured, just as are all other articles and things consumed in the process of manufacture. . . ."

It is natural that in the course of generation of electricity, machinery and plant must suffer wear and tear, and I see no reason why this wear and tear should not be part of the cost of generating light.

If I am correct in adopting the definition I have given of "prime cost," it is clear that the item depreciation should enter into calculation, and I am of opinion that the principle should be allowed.

I need make no reference as to wages, fuel, oil, waste, water and engine-room stores, for none of these were disputed on principle by the municipality. With regard to repairs and maintenance, these should be allowed on principle.

With respect to management, in my opinion only so much should be allowed as is referable to work done in the works. Under this head would be chargeable the salary paid to Mr. Lister, the company's engineer, and there should be excluded from it such salaries as those of managing director, officers—in fact all such indirect expenses as are incurred under the heading of administration.

As to the items rent, rates and taxes, there should be only included such rents, rates and taxes as are payable in respect of the plant and buildings at the works.

I have not dealt, in considering this matter, with the actual figures mentioned in the account annexed to the declaration, for it was agreed by the parties at the hearing of the case the question of figures might be left for reference to an accountant if it were considered necessary, and that my decision at present was requested on matters of principle only.

In coming to the conclusion that "actual costs" do not mean "total costs," I considered that the parties to the contract contemplated that there should be a distinct limitation as to cost of generating light in so far as the municipality were concerned.

The primary object of the agreement was the supply of electricity to the general public, and it does not appear unnatural that the British South Africa Company when granting the concession should make a distinct limitation in its or its successor's favour with respect to the charges for electricity supplied.

In conclusion I am of opinion then:—

1. That plaintiff company is entitled to such declaration as is sought for in paragraph "C" of its claim.

2. That the term "generating the light," in sub-section 11 of section 20 of the agreement, means production of electricity plus distribution.

3. The term "actual costs of generating the light" means "prime cost" of production and cost of distribution.

4. That the item "interest on capital account" should be disallowed.

5. That only so much of the item "management" as forms part of the salaries of those persons employed in and about the works in the course of actually generating and distributing electricity should be allowed.

6. That so much of the items rent, rates and taxes as do not relate to the actual works should be excluded.

7. That so much of the expenditure incurred on joint account of electric and water supply should be allocated to each of these undertakings in proportion to the gross revenue received from each of these sources,

8. That when estimating what is the cost per unit of electricity supplied, the total cost should be divided by the total number of units generated for the supply to both private consumers and the municipality.

9. That if the investigation of figures be referred in dealing with the items "repairs and maintenance," due regard should be had to such items under the heading repairs and maintenance as may be fairly chargeable to depreciation.

That the question of costs of the action do stand over until the receipt of the aforesaid accountant's report. And that, in the event of an appeal by either party to the Supreme Court from the foregoing judgment, the reference to an accountant be postponed pending the result of such appeal.

[For Appellants: Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan). For Respondents: Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington).]

Mr. Searle said that in 1896 an agreement was entered into between the B.S.A. Company, the rights and obligations of which under the contract were now vested in the Bulawayo Municipality and certain concessionaires, whose successors were the respondent company for the supply of electric light to the municipality and inhabitants of Bulawayo. The action of the Court below arose out of this agreement, and the Court ordered the matter to go before an accountant on the basis of certain nine headings. The municipality now appealed against Nos. 2, 3, parts of 5, 6 and 9.

Mr. Schreiner said that the company cross appealed on paragraphs 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the order of the Court below. [De Villiers, C.J.: The light is generated the moment it is actually produced.]

Mr. Searle: Light and current are used interchangeably. The wires in the street do not belong to the generating plant; it was specially agreed that they formed the system of distribution.

Continuing, he said that everything beyond the works was the system of distribution. The light was "generated" at the station, and all plant outside the station was distributing plant. The company did not supply "light" to the inhabitants, but "current." Without his lamp, the inhabitant would not get light.

The most important point was the depreciation. Three thousand pounds were set aside for depreciation in the year in question, but this was in addition to repairs and maintenance. In no case could depreciation be part of the cost. It was a confusion between cost and value. He cited the case of Hills v. the Colonial Government (P.C. judgment, 16 C.T., 551).

The money put into the plant was not beneficial expenditure for the municipality; it was put in for the benefit of the company. If £3,000 were allowed every year, the company would get its capital back, although it was specially agreed that the company had to supply the generating plant. He here referred to the remarks of the Chief Justice in Hills' case (20 S.C., pp. 107, 132 and 133); and the Harrington case (L.R., 13, P.D. 48), which was followed by the Court of Appeal in the Gretna Holme case (1896, P.D. 192). If the company could not charge interest on capital, then it could not charge for depreciation. A company was entitled to pay dividends where its balance of revenue was greater than expenditure even where fixed assets had diminished in value. He quoted Werner v. General Commercial and Investment Trust (L.R., 1894, 2 Ch., 239); Bolton v. Natal Land Co (L.R., 1892, 2 Ch., 124); Lee v. Neufchatel Asphalte Co. (41 C.D., 1, judgment at p. 26); Wilmer v. Macnamara (L.R., 1895, 2 Ch., 245). For the distinction between fixed and circulating capital he referred to Werner's case, supra cit.

Mr. Searle was about to read a report by Professor Dicksee, published in the "Electrician," when Mr. Schreiner objected, saying that the witness who wrote it should have been called.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But Mr. Searle wishes to make use of it as part of his speech. We use dictionaries; should the man who made the dictionary be called? Read it, Mr. Searle, as part of your address.]

Continuing, Mr. Searle said that Dicksee regarded depreciation being put in as a reduction of capital. The system of allocation between the water and light was wrong. The rates and taxes could not be brought up as costs of distribution.

On Mr. Schreiner rising to argue, the Chief Justice told him that he need not address himself to paragraphs 1 and 2 of the order of Court.

Mr. Schreiner said that the municipality had undertaken to pay such sum as would yield a return of at least 10 per cent. When it called on the company to go to this large expense, it guaranteed 10 per cent. over and above the actual cost of generation. In prime cost depreciation was included. The company required some expression of opinion as to depreciation, office furniture, etc. Before the company could supply one unit it had to put up the plant; before paying a dividend it had to make provision for plant that depreciated. Its main obligation was to supply light for at least 25 years; if the plant wore out, where was the company going to get capital to buy new plant if depreciation was not allowed. Id certum est quod certum reddi potest.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But you disregard the meaning of the word "actual."]

But "cost" is not "payment," and the contract says actual cost and not actual payment.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then every point of your argument would apply a fortiori to interest.]

No, because we cannot get interest if we get depreciation. The dilemma is this, that if they do not pay us the depreciation piecemeal and the plant were to break down then they must put in the whole lump sum for replacing the plant. In Hills' case all that was excluded was what the Government had no benefit of. Repair and maintain an article as well as you like, at some time or other it will become useless. The probable life of the plant was not more than 17 years.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was it not understood that the plant was in existence?]

Mr. Schreiner: No, nothing had been put up yet, and nine months were allowed for the preparations.

Continuing, he said that the dilemma was inexorable, as one had either to pay for the whole plant the first year or pay yearly, so that it did not wear away and leave one with nothing. Counsel cited Pizley on the duty of auditors (p. 225, 8 ed.); Chadwick Healy (p. 138); Dicksee on Accounting (chap. xx), and Dicksee on Auditing (ed. 3, p. 213).

Mr. Searle, in his reply, said that the question of depreciation was important because it meant about 4d. per unit on the electric light supplied. His learned friend had put a mistaken view before the Court in regard to the relations of the company and the municipality. He said that the municipality were the guarantors of this undertaking. He (Mr. Searle) submitted that that was not so. "Actual cost" must be out of pocket expenditure incurred for the benefit of the municipality. Depreciation in this case, therefore, could not be included in the actual cost of generating the light. As to office expenses, etc., he would say that they were charged with a management fee of £500 in the expenditure in connection with the office work. The appellants said that of the management fee only an infinitesimal part could be charged against them.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 5th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal, as well as a cross-appeal, from the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, in an action for a declaration of rights, and to recover the sum of £1,240, alleged to be due to the plaintiff company for electric light supplied by the plaintiff company to the defendant Council. The plaintiff is the cessionary of the rights of certain contractors, under a contract made by them with the British South Africa Company, on the 4th of September, 1897, and the defendant is the cessionary of the rights of the British South Africa Company, under that contract. It was a contract by which the contractors acquired the right to supply the inhabitants of Bulawayo and its suburbs with electric light and power, and undertook, in case the British South Africa Company should desire to avail themselves of the electric light in their streets, public places, or on their private property, to light such streets, public places, and private property upon certain terms and conditions. The first condition is that the minimum number of lamp-posts to be lighted shall be determined by such company, and shall be placed in the positions required by the company. The fifth condition is that the contractors shall supply the necessary generating plant, regulating apparatus, and material in a suitable position on land to be furnished by the company. The sixth condition is that the contractors shall supply and fix the supply wires as well as the posts, insulators, and whatever else may be necessary for carrying the supply wires from the generating station to the street lamps. The eighth condition read as follows: "The contractors shall work the generating plant and maintain the light in all the street lamps for an average of six hours per night on two hundred and fifty nights per annum, to be fixed by the company, the lamps to be lighted within fifteen minutes after sunset." The eleventh condition is as follows: "In consideration whereof the said company undertakes and agrees to pay to the said contractors or to their assigns, at such rate as will yield to the contractors a return equal to 10 per cent. over the actual cost of generating the light, payments to be made quarterly at the office of the company in Bulawayo." It is as to the construction of the 8th and 11th conditions that disputes have arisen between the parties. The plaintiff's contention as to the 8th condition is that they are entitled to maintain and keep alight the street lamps for an average of six hours per night during 250 nights per annum, and to an order that the defendants shall fix the hours of street lighting. The defendant, on the other hand, maintains that it is optional for the Council to have that number of lamps lit or not, and that the condition was intended to fix the maximum, which the defendant can demand, and which the plaintiff is bound to supply, if required under penalty of committing a breach of the agreement. Reliance is placed by the defendant's counsel on the use of the words "to be fixed by the company," but these words, in my opinion, apply to the particular nights when the defendant desires the lamps to be lighted. During bright moonlight nights the defendant would not require the light, but it was considered that during 250 nights of every year the light would be required, and it was agreed that those nights should be fixed by the defendant. The obligation rests on the plaintiff to supply the light for the full period, and there is a corresponding obligation on the defendant to accept and pay for it at the rate agreed upon by the 11th condition. It would, no doubt, have been more formally correct to specially mention this corresponding obligation in the contract, but it seems to me to follow as a necessary implication from the terms of the contract. Take the case of a person contracting to deliver two hundred and fifty loads of oathay to A, and delivery to take place in ten days, to be fixed by A, of a given number, and the price to be determined by reference, say, to a particular market quotation, it would be impossible to hold that because it was left to A to fix the particular days on which the delivery is to take place, he is freed from the tacit obligation of taking delivery of the oathay and paying for the same. To hold, in the present case, that the defendant is not bound to take the light provided by the plaintiff would be as unreasonable as to say that a person who directs a shopkeeper to supply certain goods for the use of his household would not be bound to accept delivery and pay for them because he did not expressly promise to do so. The learned judge in the court below held that the plaintiff was right in his contention, and in this part of his judgment I fully concur. The next question arising in this case is whether the expression "generating the light" in the 11th condition means generating the current only, or whether it includes the transmission of the current to the lamps, where the light is finally produced. Upon this point there has been a great deal of expert evidence, and the Court has been referred to the forms prescribed by the Board of Trade in England for the use of public bodies and companies supplying the electric current. The English Acts relating to the Board of Trade are not applicable in Rhodesia, and, as to the expert evidence, it does not greatly assist the Court upon a simple question of construction. In a strictly technical sense it may not be quite correct to apply the term "generating" to the process by which the light is called into existence, but it is reasonably clear what the parties meant. The price of the current supplied to the defendant was to be the actual cost of generating the light, plus 10 per cent. of such actual cost, and the term "generating the light" was intended to include not only the generation of the current but also the transmission of the current to the points where the light is finally evolved. I therefore fully agree with the Court below in the finding that the expression means production of electricity plus distribution. The real difficulty in the present case is to decide what the parties meant by confining the contractors to the "actual" cost of generating the light. The learned Judge decided that the term means "prime cost of production and cost of distribution," and having so decided he proceeded to examine the different items of the plaintiff's account by the light of that decision. His ground, however, for deciding that "actual cost" means "prime cost" is by no means clear, to me. He refers to the case of Hills v. Colonial Government (21 Juta, 59), and he accepts the view that interest on capital is not included under actual cost. In that case it was held by this Court that a concessionary of a railway who, upon the happening of a certain event, would be entitled to claim from the Government payment of the actual cost of such railway, was not entitled to include interest paid by him on the capital expended by him as part of such actual cost. The ground of the decision was that effect should be given to the limitation introduced by the word "actual," which could only be done by confining it to "payments actually made for materials used and for work done by the concessionary." On appeal the Judicial Committee accepted this view, and their Lordships added the following remarks (16 C.T.L.R., p. 551): "To add interest would seem to them to disregard the plain meaning of the word 'actual' as applied to cost. The referees have here, as practical men, found the cost of the works—in other words, they have said that so much money was expended to make them. To add something more in the name of interest would be to add something which never could be actual cost, for it would be either a sum calculated on an assumed general rate of interest, or it would be a sum which varied according to the financial position of the particular contractor." In neither Court was it held that actual cost meant prime cost. The difference between that case and the present consists in this, that there repayment of the actual capital expenditure was to be made once for all, whereas in the present case quarterly payments are to be made upon the basis of the actual cost, plus ten per cent. thereon. This difference would not justify the allowance of interest as part of the actual cost, but if interest is not allowed the important question arises whether the certain annual depreciation in the value of the plant should not be so allowed. The cost of the plant forms part of the actual cost of generating the light, but as the use of that plant would extend over several years, it could obviously not have been intended that the whole of that cost shall be charged during the first quarter of the contract. But the same objection does not exist to a distribution of the actual cost of the plant over the whole period of the life of such plant. The effect of allowing a certain sum for depreciation in the quarterly accounts of the plaintiffs would simply be to distribute the actual cost of the plant over the whole period during which it would, in the ordinary course, be of any service in the generation of electricity and light. To add depreciation would not, in the language of the Judicial Committee, "disregard the plain meaning of the word 'actual' as applied to cost," for the initial expenditure upon the plant and machinery forms part of the actual cost of generating the light. A different view might, perhaps, have prevailed if the price had been fixed upon the basis of the actual annual cost of generating the light, but the terms used are wide enough to include as part of the "actual cost" the actual capital expenditure spread over the period of the life of the plant and machinery. It has been urged that as the contractors are bound under the fifth condition to provide the necessary generating plant, it could not have been intended that any part of the cost of such plant should be brought into calculation under the eleventh condition. But this calculation is directed only for the purpose of affording a basis on which to fix the price payable for the supply of electric light. The direction that the contractors shall supply the necessary generating plant is not inconsistent with the view that the parties intended the cost of such generating plant to be brought into calculation for the purpose of fixing the price of the light. Nor is the circumstance that under the 18th clause of the contract the defendant has the option of purchasing the plant at the expiration of 25 years inconsistent with this view. The price—if not mutually agreed upon—is to be determined by arbitration, and the arbitrators would be bound to allow for the depreciation which the plaintiff has himself brought into calculation for the purpose of ascertaining the actual cost of generating the light. I agree therefore, with the Court below, that while interest on capital account should be disallowed a fair allowance should be made for depreciation.

One of the items in the account framed by the plaintiff is that of "management," as to which the Court below decided that only so much as forms part of the salaries of those persons employed in and about the works in the course of actually generating and distributing electricity, should be allowed. The plaintiff appeals against this part of the judgment, in so far as it separates the management of the plaintiffs' waterworks from the management of the electric works, whilst the defendant appeals against it in so far as it includes the distribution of electricity. In my opinion neither appeal should be upheld. I have already said that generating the light should be held to include the transmission of the current to the lamps. The actual cost, however, of generating the light cannot fairly be held to include the costs of management unconnected with the generation and distribution of the current required for the defendant. In the same way I agree with the learned Judge that so much of the items, rent, rates, and taxes as do not relate to the actual works should be excluded. Under this item the learned Judge seems to have included insurance, and this Court will not disturb his finding. Another question which has given rise to much discussion between the parties was whether expenditure incurred on joint account of electric and water supply should be allotted to each of those undertakings in proportion to the gross revenue derived from each of these sources, or in proportion to the capital sunk in each of these undertakings. The learned Judge has decided in favour of taking gross revenue as the proportion, but I do not quite follow the reasoning by which the expenditure of an undertaking is to be ascertained by reference to its gross revenue. My own view is that the referee to whom the investigation is to be entrusted should be directed to ascertain from the books and accounts what proportion of the joint expenditure should fairly be allocated to the undertaking for the supply of electricity. Wherever he finds this impossible he must allocate the expenditure in equal shares. The next question is whether in estimating the actual cost per unit of electricity supplied, the total cost should be divided by the total number of units generated for the supply to both private consumers and the defendant, or by the total number of units actually supplied to such consumers and the defendant. The Court below has decided in favour of the former course, and the plaintiff has appealed against this decision. It would appear that with regard to the electricity supplied to private consumers there is a loss of current in transmission to the extent of 25 per cent., and if the divisor should be taken to be the number of units actually so supplied it is obvious that the result would not represent the actual cost of generating the electricity as well as evolving the light. The only mode of arriving at a fair and correct result is to divide the total cost by the total number of units generated. No decision was given in the Court below upon the claim in reconvention for a declaration that the defendant is entitled to be supplied with quarterly accounts of the actual cost of generating the light, but on appeal the plaintiff's counsel has not disputed the claim. The result is that the Court will declare that the plaintiff is entitled to be supplied with quarterly accounts, showing the actual cost of generating the light, and will direct that of the expenditure incurred in joint account of electric and water supply, so much shall be allocated to the supply of electricity as shall be found by the referee from the books and accounts to represent the due proportion expended for the purpose of generating the light, and that wherever this information cannot be obtained from the books and accounts, he shall allocate half the cost to each undertaking. For the rest, the judgment of the Court below will stand. Upon all material points, therefore, the defendant's appeal has failed, and if the plaintiff had not cross-appealed, it might have been a question whether the defendant should not pay the costs of appeal. Seeing, however, that the plaintiff has also appealed, and has failed in obtaining any modification of the judgment, I am of opinion that each party should pay his own costs.

OLIFF V. HEARDEN.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of J. F. Oliff, for an interdict restraining Mrs. Dearden from removing certain furniture and goods from premises situate at 6, Weltevreden-street, Cape Town, pending settlement of petitioner's claim for rent or an action.

Rule granted, calling on respondent to show cause on Thursday next why she shall not be interdicted as prayed, rule to operate as an interim interdict.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and a Jury.]

LAWRENCE V. CAPE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL. { 1906.
Oct. 30th.
" 31st.

This was an action brought by James Lawrence, M.L.A., of Kimberley, against the Cape Divisional Council, to recover £3,000 damages, alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff and his wife by reason of the negligence of defendants or their servants.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Kimberley, and he sues on behalf of himself and his wife, to whom he is married in community of property. The defendant is the Divisional Council of the Cape.

2. On or about January 1, 1906, while the plaintiff and his wife were driving in a vehicle drawn by one horse across a certain bridge on the road leading from Tokai to the Main-road from Cape Town to Muizenberg the plaintiff and his wife, together with the said vehicle and horse, were thrown over the side of the said bridge, with the result that both the plaintiff and his wife sustained severe injuries, the plaintiff having both of his arms broken and his skull fractured, and both he and his wife receiving a grievous shock and divers other injuries.

3. The said road upon which the accident happened is a public road which, together with the said bridge on it, are under the control of the defendant, and the control, maintenance, and repair of which were, in or about July, 1902, by arrangement with the Colonial Government, specially undertaken by the defendant for reward, in the interests of the public, and the defendant is responsible to the public for maintaining the said road and bridge in a fit and proper state of repair.

4. The said accident was due to the negligence and default of the defendant in not keeping the said road and bridge in a proper state of repair, more particularly in that, whereas the said bridge had been theretofore provided with a parapet for the protection of travellers on either side, but the parapet on the side of which the accident occurred, had after the defendant undertook the maintenance of the said bridge as aforesaid, been destroyed or removed, yet the defendant failed and neglected to restore, replace, or repair the same, or otherwise render the said bridge safe in that respect for traffic, and the said bridge was not, at the time of the said accident, provided with any proper parapets or protection, or otherwise in a proper state of repair.

5. In addition to the pain and suffering entailed upon the plaintiff and his wife by the said injuries, the plaintiff has been put to considerable expense in the way of medical attendance in connection therewith and otherwise, and he estimates the damage which he and his wife have sustained in the premises at the sum of £3,000.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims payment of the said sum of £3,000 as damages, alternative relief, costs of suit.

Defendants' plea was as follows:

1. The defendant Council admit the allegations in paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. They do not admit the allegations in paragraph 2, but put the plaintiff to such proof thereof as he may be prepared to adduce at the trial.

3. They admit that the road leading from Tokai to the Main-road from Cape Town to Muizenberg is a public road, and is together with the bridge on it under their control by an agreement with the Colonial Government entered into in or about the month of July, 1902, under which agreement the said Government contribute a certain annual amount towards the cost of maintenance of the said road. Save as is herein stated, they deny the allegations in paragraph 3, and specially crave leave to refer to the full terms of the agreement aforesaid when produced at the trial.

4. They say that in or about the winter months of 1905 the bridge upon the aforesaid road, together with a portion of the roadway, was swept away by floods, over which they had no control, and was replaced by a temporary structure until circumstances should admit of a permanent one being erected in its place; they say that the said temporary structure was a fit, proper and sufficient one, and protected by a fit, proper and sufficient fence on the side over which it is alleged that plaintiff and his wife were thrown; they say that any injuries which plaintiff or his wife may have suffered were due to the horse which was drawing the vehicle in which they were seated shying or becoming restive, and not because of any act, neglect, or default for which they are liable. Save as is herein stated, they deny each and every the allegations in paragraph 4.

5. They deny that plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of £3,000, or in any other sum for which they are liable.

Wherefore they pray that the claim be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton), for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendants.

The plaintiff said that he resided at Kimberley and was one of the members of Parliament for that division. He had a house at Muizenberg, where he was staying in January last. On New Year's Day he took his wife in the afternoon in a Ralli cart. Both cart and horse were his own property. They passed off the main road and drove along the Tokai-road. As they were approaching the bridge witness noticed a man with a bicycle. The man was sitting on the parapet. Evidently the horse did not notice the presence of the man until it had got its forequarters on the bridge. As soon as it noticed the man it shied towards a piece of loose earth falling away towards the donga below. That ground was more like garden soil than a portion of the road. When the animal shied he tried to pull it round, but it kept drifting towards the edge of the donga. Finding that they were going over, that the horse was already on the slope, and that there was no chance of getting the horse back, as it was still on the move towards the edge of the road, witness immediately slackened off the right rein and pulled the animal round towards the donga and went over square into the sluit below.

Mr. Schreiner: Why did you do that?

Witness: Because I felt we were going over, and that the only chance of saving our lives was by taking the donga square. Continuing, witness said that he had been accustomed to driving since boyhood. After the first fall, witness was calm, and he remembered everything until the horse jumped from the boards. Then they were landed down below, and witness became unconscious. Witness described his injuries. He said that he was not now able to bend his hand forward properly in the manner indicated by counsel.

Mr. Schreiner: Was it like that before?

Witness: Not quite so loose as yours. His left wrist was also damaged. Both his arms were broken. He sustained injuries to his nose, face, and the bottom of his spine. Even now he was not able to dress himself without assistance.

Mr. Schreiner: You always have been a pretty strong man?

Witness: I have always been very fit. The siege took it out of me a great deal, and the anxiety of that brought on some heart trouble.

Has that heart trouble been made worse by the accident?—I think so, and the doctors told me so.

Witness (continuing) said that he had been in the habit of taking horse exercise, but he was no longer able to take exercise of that kind. After the accident, witness spent some time in Cape Town, and then went to Caledon, and subsequently he returned to his home at Kimberley. He attended Parliament for about a fortnight, and left for England in June. In consequence of his injuries he resigned his post as Government whip at the beginning of the session. On reaching England, witness underwent treatment at Smedley's Hydropathic at Matlock. Mrs. Lawrence was for some time undergoing treatment at Harrogate, and also at Smedley's. Witness had incurred an expenditure of about £1,100, solely in consequence of the injuries caused by the accident. His health had been permanently affected.

Cross-examined: The horse had been in witness's business at Kimberley about a year before the accident. The horse had been about a fortnight at Muizenberg when the accident occurred. The animal was of quiet habits. He had not noticed the horse shy before so badly. If the horse saw anything in the road, it would move round it. Witness had driven over the Tokai-road on previous occasions, and was well acquainted with both the road and bridge. He had driven along the road on the Saturday previous to the mishap. Before he reached the Tokai-road he had to pass the bridge at Alphen and other bridges, photographs of which he recognised. He had no difficulty in passing over the other bridges. The bridge where the accident took place could not be seen a long way off. The right-hand parapet could be seen at a distance of about 100 yards. At none of the other bridges had the horse shied. The man was sitting on the edge of the parapet when they arrived at the bridge. Witness did not know whether the man was reading a newspaper. He admitted that the horse got a severe fright.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Can you suggest what caused this very quiet horse a severe fright?

Witness: I should think the man sitting on the parapet and the bicycle.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had never heard it suggested before that the man had a newspaper. If Jobson himself said that he had a newspaper, he would believe him. The horse got out of his control as soon as it shied.

Sir H. Juta: So that the cause of this accident was that you lost control of this horse?

Witness did not reply.

You do not expect the Council to give you a bridge that will prevent a horse from getting beyond control when it shies?—You expect the Council to give you a road that, even if the horse shies, you can manage it.

Further cross-examined: Witness was unable to give any other explanation as to why the horse shied. The animal had passed over the bridge before.

Sir H. Juta: You are sure that you did not pull the left rein?

Witness scouted the suggestion, and added: We were not out to commit suicide.

Re-examined: The suggestion that he might have pulled the left rein was unfounded and ridiculous. If the road had been solid and level, there was a chance that he might have regained control of the horse.

Patrick Scott Jobson, a general dealer, of Kimberley, said that on the 1st January last he went for a cycle ride, and was resting on the bridge on the Tokai-road when he saw a cart approaching. Witness was holiday-making at the time. It was not true that he was reading a newspaper. He saw the horse come on the bridge: it shied at witness and his bicycle. Mr. Lawrence pulled the right rein, and in a moment horse, cart, and occupants went over the slope into the donga. Witness rendered assistance. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence were both injured. The cart shafts were broken, but the horse was uninjured. The level bit of road by the parapet was about 14 feet wide. From that width it sloped away very quickly to the donga. A constable investigated the matter, and witness told him that the animal shied at himself and the bicycle.

Cross-examined: The accident happened so quickly that almost the moment he saw the horse on the bridge, it was going over the side. Witness was about to smoke at the time of the occurrence. He did not think he had matches in one hand. He was a good deal upset by the mishap. He knew Mr. Lawrence, but he was not a personal friend. He was the Jonah, as it were. Witness was quite sure that he had not a newspaper when he was resting on the parapet. He considered that a quiet horse would take a fright even at a pool of water.

Elizabeth E. Lawrence (wife of the plaintiff) corroborated her husband's account of the mishap. Witness said that she was severely injured, though no bones were broken. She had not yet fully recovered from the effects of the accident, her nerves having been permanently damaged.

Dr. B. G. Roscoe, of Tokai, said that he was familiar with the spot at which the accident occurred. He did not remember any parapet on the southern side of the bridge. Before the washaway, there was a level road. The washaway caused more than half the road to fall in. Temporary repairs were made. Witness also gave evidence as to the effects of the accident upon Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence. He did not think Mr. Lawrence would again be able to take part in public life. Witness was at present the owner of the horse, which had been presented to him by Mr. Lawrence. The animal was quiet to ride and drive. He did not regard the fence on the side of the road as any protection against mishap.

Cross-examined: Between January and August of this year witness had used the horse on the roads about the Tokai and Constantia districts. The animal had not shied at motors or cyclists while it had been in his possession. If the road had been hard and level the parapet would have prevented the horse from going over the bridge, but in this case there was a sharp decline, and loose soil and no parapet.

H. Orpen, superintendent of the Tokai Convict Station and Porter Reformatory, said that on the 1st July, 1902, the Divisional Council took over the road from the Government, upon the recommendation of witness. Both the parapets on the bridge were intact at that time. The road was in very good order, about £290 having been spent. The Government were anxious to be relieved of the road. Witness described the condition of the road and bridge before and after the accident. He considered that the Divisional Council could have taken effective steps after the washaway to prevent an accident from occurring.

Cross-examined: Witness had always regarded the bridge as unsafe. People had been in the habit of visiting him at Tokai, and they had always come by this road. The bridge in the photo produced situated on the Plantation at Tokai, was unsafe, but it was a bridge used for farm purposes, though it was largely used by the public. Witness had never had a high opinion of the Divisional Council. This opinion of his that the bridge where the accident had occurred was dangerous had not been formed in consequence of the mishap. Witness was not biased against the Divisional Council.

Re-examined: Witness had always found that it was very difficult to get the Divisional Council to move, in fact, they only moved at the point of the bayonet, as it were.

Evidence was also given by Dr. A. E. Thompson, Cape Town; Albert E. Gower, superintendent of plantations at Tokai; and Alex. J. Chiappini (a resident near the scene of the accident).

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Shaw, engineer in the Cape Divisional Council's service, said that he inspected the road before it was taken over by the Council. There was a culvert in which water ran usually from June to the middle of December. There were two parapets, each 18 inches wide and 16 inches high, leaving a hard road 15 feet wide. During the washaway one of the parapets was taken away. Witness described the temporary measures that were taken to restore the roadway after the washaway, as a consequence of which the width of the road was extended about 8 feet. They placed a fence at the side of the slope, so as to protect pedestrians. The public could have used 23 feet of roadway, but the widening was off the line of the road. He saw the road from time to time. After the washaway the whole of the widened road was made up level, and no steep portion was left. There might have been a subsidence of about 6 inches from the middle of the road to the edge. Between the washaway and the accident to Mr. Lawrence, no complaint was received about the dangerous condition of the road or culvert.

Witness gave evidence as to other points in the roads of the Wynberg district, and the Cape Flats, where he considered that a restive horse might go over into the ditch. The ground where the washaway took place was not fit to put any permanent work upon, because it was too soft to put concrete in. The idea of putting in the concrete was to stop further enlargement of the donga. The work was begun on the 22nd January. They extended the roadway to 30 ft. and put in the concrete work. Witness proved certain photographs of the scene of the accident taken from different points as well as photographs of the bridge coming from the Constantia-road. The washaway took about four feet of the road away between the two parapets. Despite the washaway, the road could safely be negotiated. After the washaway, temporary repairs rendered the road safe for traffic. The road was level, and was of the same material throughout. There was a good 23 feet width of road, and it was quite safe for traffic. In December there were a few holes in the road, but the holes were not dangerous. Witness would not say that the plaintiff was careless; it was the fault of the horse.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not touch the road in consequence of the plaintiff's accident.

Robert Macbeth, proprietor of Wynberg Hotel, and four years chairman of the Wynberg Public Works Municipal Committee, stated he remembered the washaway in question. Witness used the road shortly before and after the accident. There was a slight variation in the level, but nothing particularly noticeable, as described by Mr. Orpen and Dr. Roscoe. The road seemed to be fairly wide, and he did not look upon it as dangerous. Of course, he could not say what would happen to him if someone held a paper in front of the horses.

H. H. Scowen, who had been Mayor of Kalk Bay, and who knew the road for the last eleven years, stated he saw the road before and after the accident. After the washaway he noticed the road had been widened and a temporary fence erected.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The temporary structure would not keep a horse in the road.

Henry Alfred Reid, Inspector of Roads to the Cape Divisional Council, stated he had charge of the Tokai-road ever since it was taken over. After the washaway he repaired the road temporarily. It was not possible to go on with the permanent repairs at the time of the accident. From the washaway up to the time of the accident he had no complaints as to the danger of the culvert.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the facts he had outlined at the commencement of the case had been abundantly proved by the evidence. In the conflict of evidence as to the width of the road and the condition of the bridge he could only ask the jury to believe that the zeal of the officials of the Divisional Council had carried them away. If what they said were correct, Mr. Lawrence should never have come into court at all, for the defence went to the length of saying that he was never in any danger at all.

Sir H. Juta submitted that there had not been any negligence proved, for which the Council could be held liable. There was no danger in the Tokai-road that any reasonable man could have foreseen. If it were such a danger as anyone could reasonably have foreseen, it was very singular that the road should have been in use for six months without any complaint having been received. He submitted that the onus rested upon the plaintiff of proving that the accident was occasioned by the negligence of the defendants, and that he had not discharged that onus.

Mr. Schreiner, in his reply, submitted that his learned friend had put up a number of "men of straw" for the purpose of knocking them down again. It was absurd for his learned friend to say that they expected public bodies, wherever there was a bridge on a public road, to put parapets there. What the plaintiff did say was that the Divisional Council took over a road on which there was a bridge and that that bridge was protected by parapets. What the plaintiff complained of was the negligence of defendants in not maintaining a condition of protection for the travelling public that existed when they took over the road from the Government.

Maasdorp, J., said that it was undoubtedly the duty in law of a body in the position of the Divisional Council, who had taken over the control of a road, and the management of a road, and had actually commenced their work upon a road, to do their duty with care and diligence and if, through their negligence, the road was in such a bad state after they had taken it over and assumed the control, as to cause loss to anyone, they were liable in law. There was no doubt that the Council had taken over the road, they had done work upon the road, they were responsible for due care and diligence in regard to it, and the question was, had the Council been guilty of negligence? There were two matters in which negligence was alleged in this case. Firstly, it was said that the Council left in the road an incline which was rough and dangerous to persons using it. Secondly, it was said that the Council neglected to place a lateral protection at the side of the road. In regard to parapets, it was not a matter of law what the Council should do, but a question of fact. Parapets might be necessary in some places and not in others. The question was one which he must leave entirely to the jury. Touching upon the point as to whether there was a dangerous incline in the slope, His Lordship alluded to the direct conflict of evidence which had occurred, and said that it was for the jury to decide on the facts disclosed whether the state of affairs on the 1st January was dangerous. Again, should the jury find that there had been negligence, they must inquire whether the negligence had caused the injury to the plaintiff.

Sir H. Juta applied to his lordship to direct the jury that they might bring in either a general or a special finding on the facts.

Mr. Schreiner objected to such a proposal at this stage of the case, after the summing-up of his lordship.

Maasdorp, J., said that it must be presumed that the jury knew the law. They could either find a general verdict or make a special finding on the facts.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £1,500.

Mr. Schreiner moved for judgment for the plaintiff for £1,500 with costs.

His Lordship entered judgment accordingly.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte ABRAHAM. { 1906.
Oct. 30th.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining the sale of the applicant's property that had been seized in execution of two writs at Clanwilliam. The petition of the applicant, Varin Abraham, set out that he was a general dealer carrying on business as Varin Abraham and Co. at Salt River, Calvinia, and elsewhere in this Colony. On the 18th inst. he received a telegram from one Casim, who was conducting the business at Calvinia, informing him he had received a demand for payment of £100 from one Van Dyk. A further telegram was sent to the petitioner to the effect that two summonses had been served, one for £144 on a promissory note from Van Dyk, and one for £50 from a man named Marais. Both cases, he was informed, would be heard in the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Calvinia, on the 24th inst. The petitioner telegraphed repudiating the debts. Writs were issued in the Magistrate's Court, and the shop was seized. Petitioner stated that he never signed the promissory notes, nor did he ever authorise anyone to do so. He denied that he was indebted to Van Dyk and Marais in the sums mentioned. Through the closure of the business at Calvinia petitioner was suffering a loss, and he intended instituting an action to have the judgment set aside and for damages. It was shown at a meeting of creditors that his assets exceeded his liabilities, and the creditors were willing to support him, and he was willing that the business should be carried on for the benefit of the creditors.

[Hopley, J.: Will he give security to cover the amount of the judgment?]

Mr. Benjamin: I understand so.

Hopley, J., ordered that the two writs of Van Dyk and Marais be suspended and execution stayed pending an action by petitioner to set aside the judgment, the petitioner to give security in the sum of £250 to cover the judgments and costs in the two cases, the property thereupon to be handed back to the petitioner, the security to be to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court.

RICKETTS V. RICKETTS.

This was an action brought by Louise Sofia Ricketts against her husband, Arthur Edward Ricketts, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. Bailey was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The parties were married on the 12th February, 1885, in community of property, at Kimberley, and there was issue of the marriage, a girl, aged 20, and three boys, aged 17, 11, and 7 respectively. In 1898, while the parties were living at Cape Town, the defendant deserted the plaintiff, and since 1903 he had not contributed anything to the support of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, custody of the children, and forfeiture of the benefits arising out of the marriage in community.

The plaintiff, in the course of her evidence, stated that when her husband left her in Cape Town he wrote for some three or four years from Kimberley, and contributed to her support. Since the beginning of 1903 the defendant ceased writing to her. On the 3rd August this year witness wrote to the defendant, but he did not answer.

An order was granted, calling on the respondent to restore conjugal rights on or before 30th November, failing which to show cause by the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and why the plaintiff should not have custody of the minors, and why he should not pay the costs.

ESTATE MARTIENSSEN V. DAWSON.

Mr. Sutton, for the plaintiff, moved for judgment in terms of a consent paper for £25, with costs. The claim in reconvention, counsel added, had been withdrawn.

Judgment entered in terms of the consent paper,

WOLF V. STEVENSON.

Mr. Alexander said he understood the defendant was appearing in person. He filed a plea, and made an offer on Saturday last, but no settlement was arrived at, because he was not prepared to come to any arrangement about the payment of the costs. It was agreed that execution should be stayed for six months, and the only question was one of costs.

[Hopley, J.: What will you get out of him by getting an order as to costs?]

Mr. Alexander: We say he has something.

[Hopley, J. (to defendant): What are you doing at present?]

Defendant: Nothing.

Hopley, J.: There will be judgment against you as prayed, with costs, the execution to be stayed on payment of £3 a month for the next six months, the plaintiff to have the right to apply for a variation of this order, if she can show the defendant has means, the payments to be on the 15th of each month.

WAR DEPARTMENT V. { 1906.
DUFFUS AND CO. { Oct. 30th.
Nov. 1st.

Pro fugus — Process of Court —
Edictal citation.

The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant and filed a declaration to which he ultimately pleaded. Before he could be served with notice of trial, &c., he left the country without giving directions as to service, his present address was unknown and his attorneys had retired from the case.

The Court ordered all further process to be served by edictal citation, with substituted service by one advertisement in the "Government Gazette" and one in the "Cape Times."

Mr. Upington said the application he was about to make was a novel one. The defendant was originally barred from pleading. He had asked the indulgence of the Court to be allowed to plead, and, having placed a plea upon record, he had now left the country, and it was alleged in the petition he was endeavouring to evade the service of process. His attorneys of record had withdrawn, and there was therefore now no attorney of record upon whom, in terms of any rule of Court, the notice of set down, or further notice could be served. The application was for direction in the circumstances from the Court. Counsel did not know of any previous case. The object of the application was to avoid following this gentleman over half the continent of Europe with a notice of set down of the case in the Supreme Court at Cape Town. On the 20th October, 1906, the plaintiffs' declaration was filed, the defendant having failed to file a plea. On the 8th January he was barred from pleading, and the case was set down for judgment under the Rule 319 for the 12th January, 1906. The defendant then petitioned for leave to purge his default, and an order was granted by the Court, and the defendant filed his plea on the 26th January, 1906. The pleadings were closed on the 15th February, 1906. The evidence of Colonel Hoskings was taken on commission in England, and in April last a discovery order was obtained by the plaintiff, calling on the defendant to make a discovery. The petitioner believed the defendant left South Africa for the Argentine, and afterwards left that place, and was at present somewhere in England, but he purposely kept his whereabouts unknown. The defendant's conduct throughout the whole of the proceedings led to the belief that he was treating the proceedings with contempt. The case was now ripe for hearing, but by reason of the exact whereabouts of the defendant being unknown, and the withdrawal of his attorneys from the further conduct of the case, plaintiffs' attorneys were unable to serve the notice of set down on the defendant or his attorneys. Counsel did not know he could ask for a specific order, but he felt some relief should be afforded to the plaintiff. He submitted the Court, in its general discretion, would have power to make some special order. For instance, there was a provision that a plaintiff should proceed with his action in a certain time. If the plaintiffs had to pursue this man, who had come within the jurisdiction of the Court, there was every possibility that they might have to go over half the habitable globe. The suit would never come to a termination, and enormous costs would be involved.

Mr. Upington: It is the War Department that is suing, and one knows that having started the suit, if the matter is to be continually postponed, they will be considerably embarrassed by not being able to procure their witnesses. Proceeding, counsel referred to the analogy of the Insolvent Ordinance, where provision was made for the service of notice upon debtors who had been absent from the Colony.

[Hopley, J.: Yes, but I do not think I have got the power.]

Mr. Upington: After all, what is to be done? The defendant in this particular case has obtained the indulgence of the Court to be allowed to plead, and surely a defendant cannot come within the jurisdiction of the Court for the purpose of entering an appearance and filing a plea, and then withdraw his attorney from record and proceed to remain out of the jurisdiction?

[Hopley, J.: It may be that we ought to draft a Rule of Court about it, so as to deal with such a case.]

Mr. Upington: I am not aware of any previous application. One feels that there ought to be a remedy for such a position.

[Hopley, J.: I sympathise with you, but I do not see how I can help you. I will speak to the other judges, who may possibly have some precedent which we are all unaware of here. If there is a remedy, I will intimate it at a future date.]

Postea (November 1st).

Hopley, J.: I have consulted the other Judges in regard to this matter, and they cannot recall any distinct precedent, but we are of opinion that substituted service should be ordered by a process analogous to that adopted in matters of edictal citation. In such cases leave is granted to sue by edict, and if personal service cannot be effected a substituted service by publication in some form is directed, and the notices, such as the notice of trial, are allowed to be given in the same manner.

Such course being the ordinary practice, it would seem a fortiori that in this case a service of the notices by publication might be allowed, as the summons, pleadings and other documents have been served in the ordinary way, and the defendant thereafter chose to leave the country without leaving any address or legal representative. Such are the present circumstances. The process to date has been served in the ordinary way upon the defendant or his legal representatives; but now that the time has arrived to set down the case and give notice of trial, there is no place where or person on whom the notice can be served. No injustice is done in such a case by allowing substituted service, by publication in some paper, to meet the state of circumstances which the defendant has brought about.

The defendant left this country for the Argentine Republic, and after a short stay there, so it is said, left for Europe; but his present whereabouts are unknown. The question is what advertisement might be reasonably expected to reach him? Publication in the last known place of residence, I think, would in this case be sufficient, and the Court will order advertisement once in the "Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte FYSH.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order on the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a certain mortgage bond. The petition set out that the applicant's wife had occasion to leave her house at Observatory, and for the sake of safety, she deposited the bond in the oven. Her reason for doing so was that she was afraid the unemployed rioters might break into the place and steal the papers. The applicant's wife had occasion to light a fire under the oven, and the bond, with other documents, were reduced to a heap of ashes. The parties lived in Ash-street, Observatory-road.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on all concerned to show cause why the copy should not be issued, the rule returnable on December 12.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE SMITH.

Mr. Upington moved on behalf of the petitioner, William Elliot, of Cathcart, for his appointment as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Florence W. Smith.

Order granted, the petitioner to have full powers to liquidate the estate, costs to come out of the estate.

WALKER V. BRUNT.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause in his capacity as sole trustee, or in his individual capacity, why an order of the Court restraining an auctioneer from parting with the proceeds of the sale of certain furniture should not be set aside.

Mr. Alexander was for the applicant, and Dr. Greer was for the respondent.

It was ordered that the rule be extended for a fortnight and the money handed by the auctioneer to the applicant, unless the respondent previously brings an action to establish his right to the said money, in which case the rule shall stand. It was further ordered that if the applicant give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for the payment of the said money and costs, the rule to be discharged forthwith, costs to be costs in the cause, or as ordered on further application.

Ex parte ESTATE HOLST.

Mr. Pyemont moved for leave to the petitioner, Floretina Holst, executrix testamentary in the estate of Peter Petersen Holst, to dispose of certain property by private treaty, or otherwise as might be most advantageous, Order as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PIETERSEN V. PIETERSEN. { 1906.
Oct. 31st.

This was an action brought by Solomon M. Pieteresen, a cart driver, of Cape Town, against his wife, Johanna Pieteresen, or Dreyer, for divorce, by reason of her adultery with divers persons, including a Chinaman named Kong.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for plaintiff; defendant appeared in court under the charge of gaol officers.

Mr. De Villiers said that the defendant had been barred from pleading. She had recently been sentenced, along with a Chinaman named Kong, to a term of four and a half years' imprisonment for brothel-keeping in Longmarket and Hout Streets, and for suffering a white girl to resort on the premises for immoral purposes.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal proof of the marriage, which took place in Cape Town in October, 1900.

Solomon M. Pieteresen (the plaintiff) said that defendant left him about a week after the marriage. He did not know of any reason why she should have left him. Witness was at the front about six months during the war. Upon his return they became reconciled, and lived together about three months. One night she went out and did not return until about three o'clock the following morning. He spoke to the defendant about her conduct, and her mother interfered. Since that time he had not often seen her. He believed that she had frequently been in gaol. At the Criminal Sessions last month the defendant was tried, in company with a Chinaman, for brothel-keeping, and for inducing a white girl to resort to a brothel. A few months ago he saw the defendant at a house in Hout-street, and while he was there, Kong, the Chinaman, came in and acted very familiarly towards her.

By the Court: Witness had not told defendant that he had another wife.

Defendant said that during the early days of the marriage she found that her husband was familiar with another woman, and that he was giving money to her.

By the Court: Witness had had one child, of which the plaintiff was the father. She did not go and live with the Chinaman until 1903.

Plaintiff denied the story told by the defendant as to his having another wife.

Defendant (in answer to the Court) said that she had no witnesses in court, as she had been told that it was too late to appear to defend the case.

His Lordship: If you want to bring a charge of adultery against your husband, you ought to prove it.

Defendant: They told me it was too late to write.

Mr. De Villiers said that that statement was incorrect.

Decree of divorce granted.

MECHAN V. MECHAN.

This was an action brought by Henry W. Mechan, a commercial traveller, of Cape Town, against his wife, Jane Anne Mechan, who was supposed to be in England, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Payne was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

The suit was by edictal citation, substituted service having been effected by means of advertisements in a newspaper in England and the "Gazette."

The plaintiff said that he was married to defendant on the 2nd May, 1891, at Preston, Lancashire, where they resided for some time. They were living at Wath-on-Dearne, Yorkshire, when his wife left him. She was addicted to drink. He had not since been able to discover her whereabouts, although he had been at considerable sacrifice and expense for that purpose. There were two children of the marriage, aged about 14 and 12. He landed in this country in October, 1900, his intention being to remain here.

By the Court: Witness would be prepared to pay his wife's passage to this colony.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You must try to find out where she is; there must be personal communication.]

Mr. Payne: We have reason to believe that the mother is wilfully concealing her whereabouts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I must have clear proof that she refused to come out here after the passage money had been offered.]

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th February next, failing which, rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the last day of February next why a decree of divorce should not be granted; personal service of the rule to be effected, accompanied by a passenger's ticket by the White Star Line, enabling the defendant to return to South Africa; failing personal service, service to be made on the defendant's mother, and the ticket tendered to her on behalf of her daughter.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

HAWKSLEY V. ACTING RESIDENT MAGISTRATE, STEYTLERVILLE. { 1906.
Oct. 31st.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why he should not be directed to rectify a record of a certain inquiry into the applicant's conduct, which had resulted in his suspension from practising as a law agent for a period of three months.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Howel Jones was for respondent.

It appeared that the applicant had been summoned by letter by the Acting Resident Magistrate of Steytlerville to attend before him for the purpose of an inquiry into alleged misconduct in his position as a law agent, by reason of an overcharge of £7 0s. 11d. made to one Buckley. The applicant had excepted to the form of the complaint and the procedure, having set out his exceptions in writing. At the inquiry he paid a cheque for £13.

The present application was for an amendment of the record which had been sent up to this Court pending an application for review, by reason of omission of all reference to the exceptions and the misdescription of the money paid by applicant as a "tender."

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by the applicant, and was about to read an affidavit by the applicant's clerk, Greening, when [De Villiers, C.J.: Is that Greening the man who has been guilty of malpractices in this court?]

Mr. Buchanan: Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, if there is any conflict between his evidence and that of the Magistrate, I should prefer the Magistrate's evidence.]

Mr. Buchanan: It was only, my lord, as to the exceptions being taken. Counsel added that he should not, under the circumstances read Greening's affidavit.

Mr. Howel Jones read a replying affidavit by the respondent (Mr. F. J. Lawrence), who said that the record was correct, and who went in some detail into the matter.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out to Mr. Buchanan that the Magistrate had written saying that he was sending up the exceptions, so that at the appeal they could be considered.

Mr. Buchanan said that if the exceptions were treated as part of the record at the appeal, it would be sufficient for his client. There was, however, the point remaining as to the tender.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the exceptions had been sent up in due order.

Mr. Buchanan said that the applicant objected to the word "tender" appearing on the record, because the £13 was paid into court pending an action as to who was entitled to it. He submitted that the reference to a tender should be erased, and words should be inserted to the effect that "£13 was paid to the Clerk of the Court, pending result of exceptions and to abide an action."

De Villiers, C.J.: This application appears to me to be wholly frivolous. Several objections were raised in the correspondence, but only two have been urged to the Court to-day. One objection is that the record does not state that certain exceptions had been taken in the Magistrate's Court at the hearing of the application against the present applicant. It appears, however, that the Magistrate informed the parties that a letter, which had been sent to the Magistrate, had been forwarded as part of the record. It is said now that the applicant could not have known that that letter referred to the exception, but if reference had been made to the record in the Supreme Court it could easily have been ascertained before further costs were incurred, whether those exceptions formed part of the record or not. I certainly would have understood by the Magistrate's letter that he intended to convey that the exceptions had been sent to the Supreme Court, but even if that is not the construction, by inspection of the record in the Magistrate's office information could have been obtained, and all this needless inquiry would have been avoided. As to the other point, that the record is not correct in regard to the tender, well, I will accept the Magistrate's statement duly made that "a cheque for £13 is tendered Mr. Buckley; £13 paid, 2.30 this day, 30th September, 1906." There is nothing that has been said in this case that has satisfied me that that is not a correct entry by the Magistrate. These objections fall to the ground, and the application for an amendment of the record must be refused, with costs.

Mr. Buchanan asked if the Court would fix a day for hearing the application for review.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It will be set down in the usual way.]

Mr. Buchanan: It was set down for Monday last.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The matter will be taken in its course.]

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER WEST-HUIZEN.

Mr. Payne moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary, for authority to the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to petitioners in their private capacity of estate property at Beaufort West, which they had purchased at public auction.

De Villiers, C.J.: Under the special circumstances of this case, you may take the order, but, otherwise, it would have been necessary to give clear proof that a fair price was paid.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1906.
Nov. 1st.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Robert Gordon Foord as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of East London.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Roelof Soholtz as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of Swellendam.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

AHMED V. KHAN.

Dr. Greer moved for a degree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for taxed costs amounting to £53 19s. and for taxed costs of this application. The matter arose out a promissory note on which the present plaintiff was sued, the Court having given judgment in his favour. The parties were Indians.

It transpired that the defendant was already in custody on a charge of perjury.

Hopley, J., observed that he did not see what advantage was to accrue to the plaintiff by having the man civilly imprisoned when he was already criminally imprisoned.

Dr. Greer said that there was some question as to a sum of about £40 or £50 which defendant had said that he had in the bank.

Defendant said that the money had been absorbed by legal expenses. He had only 15s. in the bank now. He had already paid attorneys over £50.

[Hopley, J.: Expensive work, isn't it?]

Dr. Greer: It has been an expensive case.

Defendant (in answer to Dr. Greer) said that he did not know who was paying his attorney to defend him against the perjury charge.

Dr. Greer applied for the matter to stand over pending determination of the criminal charge.

The matter was ordered to stand over sine die.

LAWRIE AND CO. V. GELB.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. The matter had previously been before the Court. There had been service upon two defendants only previously, and service had now been made upon the present defendant.

Order granted.

THE MASTER V. SMITH AND OTHERS.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for provisional sentence on certain two mortgage bonds for £10,500 and £6,000, with interest from the 1st January, 1905, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BARDY V. MOSTERT.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest from the 17th January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and rents to be attached.

Order granted.

GILL V. SHAMSHUDIEN.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,600, less £13 5s. paid on account, with interest from the 1st July, 1905; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents to be attached.

Order granted.

SHASKOLSKY V. JOYNT.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court for £13 9s. 2d., with £2 12s. 8d. taxed costs. A return of nulla bona had been filed.

Defendant offered to pay £1 a month for the ensuing four months, and £4 a month subsequently.

Decree granted, execution to be suspended upon payment of £1 a month for the next four months, and thereafter £4 a month until capital and interest have been paid, first payment on the 15th November.

DREYFUS AND CO. V. TAYLOR AND MYLES.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £130 8s. 6d. upon a bill of exchange dated 23rd August, 1906, drawn by plaintiffs on defendants, and payable at the Standard Bank, and by defendants accepted on 27th September, and made payable at 105, Castle-street, Cape Town. Counsel also applied for provisional sentence for £70 8s. 6d., upon a bill of exchange, dated 4th September, drawn and accepted, and payable under similar circumstances to the previous bill. Neither of the bills had been paid when due.

Order granted as prayed.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

REID AND NEPHEW V. { 1906.
ROCHESTER BRICK CO. { Nov. 1st.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for 33s. 6d., professional services, and for costs.

Order granted.

REID AND NEPHEW V. STEVENS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £43 7s. 5s., professional services, and for costs.

Order granted.

STREETER V. MYERS, PUXTY AND CO.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment under Rule 319 in default of plea, for £20 6s., advertising charges, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION. { 1906.
{ Nov. 1st.

Mr. McGregor moved for the rehabilitation of Willem Hendrik Fourie. Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

In re INSOLVENCY OF KUSSEL.

Max Kussel stated that while he was helplessly ill his wife obtained a separation against him by default, and sued him on an alleged settlement of £1,000 in an ante-nuptial contract. He (Kus-sel) had been made insolvent. His estate had been adjudged as insolvent, but he understood that the Castle Breweries had now desired to withdraw from the proceedings.

[Hopley, J.: Why don't they come and do so?]

Mr. Payne (for the Castle Breweries, Ltd., the petitioning creditors), said that they had no objection to the order being withdrawn provided that Kussel undertook to pay all their costs in connection with the matter.

[Hopley, J.: Once an order is made they are not the only people who are concerned; there are other creditors, no doubt.]

Kussel said that there were other creditors.

[Hopley, J. (to Kussel): The Court with the information now before it, cannot make any order. You had better set about getting good legal advice.]

MARAS V. MARAS.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of divorce, with custody of the child and division of the joint estate, with costs, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Decree granted, as prayed.

Ex parte PATERSON.

Mr. Louwrens moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

EAST LONDON HARBOUR BOARD V. CALEDONIA LANDING, SHIPPING AND SALVAGE CO. AND ANOTHER.

This was an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a judgment of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hopley in an action for damage to certain craft in the Buffalo River in the course of the freshet of October, 1905.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the matter should come before a full bench.

[Hopley, J.: Is there an important matter of practice involved?]

Mr. Benjamin said that that was so.

[Hopley, J.: I should prefer that it should be heard on Monday next, when a full bench will be sitting.]

Mr. Buchanan said that he did not object to the matter being postponed until next Monday, only he thought there should be some undertaking by respondents that they would not insist upon an execution in the meantime.

Mr. Benjamin said that he did not think there was any need for apprehension on that head.

Mr. Buchanan said that respondents had by letter threatened the Harbour Board with an execution.

The matter was ordered to stand over, with leave to mention it on Monday next.

RUMSEY V. RUMSEY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency on behalf of the defendant in the suit, R. L. Rumsey, of Graaff-Reinet, for leave to set the case down for hearing on the 7th November. Plaintiff had commenced an action against her husband for divorce, on the ground of his malicious desertion, and the defendant had filed a claim in reconvention for divorce from his wife on a similar ground. Plaintiff failed to plead to the claim in reconvention within the time fixed by Rules of Court.

[Hopley, J.: They are suing each other for restitution, so that they are anxious to get back. They will both have to come and express their willingness to receive the other one back.]

Mr. Jones: As far as one can understand, the plaintiff does not intend to proceed. Plaintiff has been barred, and the defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) applies to set down the case for the 7th November. The Registrar declines to set down the case this term by reason of the terms of the 30th Rule of Court. The whole point is as to whether the plaintiff in reconvention, for which we are claiming restitution of conjugal rights, is entitled to take advantage of the 30th Rule of Court and have the case set down for this term. Otherwise, the case will have to set down for the February term. His Lordship said that before he gave any decision he would like counsel to cite some case bearing on the point. He thought the matter might very well be mentioned again.

Mr. Burton (interposing) called the Court's attention to the case of Smuts v. Ackerman (15 C.T.R., 711).

His Lordship said that the matter would stand over until counsel had looked up the case mentioned by Mr. Burton.

Mr. Jones, later in the day, cited the case of Smuts v. Ackerman (15 "Cape Times" Reports, 711). Counsel added that the plaintiff in convention had abandoned her claim.

Hopley, J.: My own impression was when the matter was first mentioned that the claim in convention and the claim in reconvention should be looked upon as two separate cross actions, and that the plaintiff in reconvention, though he was the defendant in convention, should have all the benefits of the Rules of Court, which a plaintiff may take. Of course, if the whole of the action had stood, and the plaintiff were proceeding with her claim, then possibly the defendant in the original claim could not take advantage of the fact, and force an earlier hearing than the Rules of Court entitle the original plaintiff to contend for, but it seems to me that when the original plaintiff in convention drops out of the action, or, if not entirely drops out of the action, at any rate abandons her part of it, the defendant can come and say, "I am the plaintiff in the reconventional claim, and I demand to set down my case for hearing like any other plaintiff." I think he is right, and I think the Registrar would be right to accept the set down papers by the plaintiff in reconvention. The case will be set down for the 7th November, costs to be costs in the cause.

BELL V. ESTATE DOUGLAS.

Mr. Gardiner (on behalf of the defendants in the action) moved for postponement of trial. Counsel said that the action had been set down by plaintiff for hearing on the 7th November, which was the same day as that for which certain exceptions taken by defendants to the plaintiffs' declaration had been set down. The result might be that the witnesses would have to make two journeys to Cape Town.

Mr. McGregor (for the plaintiff) said that his client was shortly leaving Pretoria for British East Africa. He was willing to consent to a reasonable postponement, but it would be a great hardship upon him if the case were to be postponed until the February term.

Counsel having been heard in argument, on the facts.

Hopley, J., said that the exceptions would be heard on the 7th November but the hearing of the action would stand over until some date to be fixed, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte DE BEER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the appointment of J. G. Taute as curator ad litem to represent Jan Conrad Lotz, of Prince Albert, in certain proceedings about to be taken to have him declared incapable of managing himself or his affairs, and for the appointment of Andries S. Snyman as curator bonis. Petitioner was brother-in-law of the alleged lunatic. Mr. Snyman was overseer of Mr. Lotz's farms.

There was also a petition filed on behalf of Mrs. Lotz.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for Mrs. Lotz) said that the application was not opposed, except so far as the persons whom it was proposed to appoint were concerned. He had to suggest that Advocate De Waal should be appointed curator ad litem, and that Nicolaas C. van der Hoven, who was the executor under the will, should be appointed curator bonis.

Mr. Buchanan suggested that the R.M. of Prince Albert should be appointed curator ad litem.

Sir H. Juta said that this was a very rich estate, and there were some very funny things about it, which made it desirable, from their side, to ask the Court to appoint someone who was not in Prince Albert as curator ad litem.

Mr. Buchanan consented to the appointment of Advocate De Waal as curator ad litem.

Hopley, J., asked why all this competition should be taking place for these appointments. Was there any question of fees?

Mr. Buchanan: The whole fact is that Mr. Taute is an attorney at Prince Albert, and Mr. Theunissen is also an attorney at Prince Albert.

Sir H. Juta said that Mr. Theunissen was not mentioned in the affidavits.

Hopley, J.: It seems clear that the state of mind of Mr. Lotz should be inquired into, and the Court will order that there be an inquiry into his mental condition. It is now conceded by both sides that it will be wise to have an advocate of this Court to go down, independently of all local feeling or knowledge, and inquire into the matter, and act as curator ad litem of the alleged lunatic, and Mr. Advocate De Waal will for that reason be appointed, he being the person acceptable to both sides. The point really about which the most contention arises is as to who is to be the temporary curator bonis. I do not know why there should be all this fuss and heat, unless it be thought that the one who is appointed curator bonis temporarily will be appointed permanently. One of the nominees is Mr. Snyman, who has been in the employ of the old man for some years, and the other is Mr. Van der Hoven, who was appointed by the old people the executor under their will. I think on principle the better appointment to make will be that of Mr. Van der Hoven. Mr. Van der Hoven will be appointed curator bonis temporarily, costs to come out of the estate. The summons will be returnable for December 12.

Ex parte MNZOYI.

Mr. Bailey moved for leave to petition to sue his wife, Lydia, in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner's wife was employed at a coffee shop at Idutywa, and declined to join him.

Petitioner, a native, appeared, and answered several questions put to him by the Court.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on December 12.

ESTATE WRIGHT V. WRIGHT. { 1906.
Nov. 1st.
" 2nd.
" 5th.

Lunatic — Death of — Executor dative—Act 1 of 1897, Sec. 41.

An application having been made to the Eastern Districts Court to have W. declared of unsound mind and a curator appointed to his estate, that Court declared him to be incapable of managing his own affairs and appointed curators to his property. Upon the death of W., the curators continued the administration of the estate under the authority of the Master, who acted under the 41st section of Act 1 of 1897.

Held, that as W. had not been declared to be of unsound mind, the 41st section did not apply, and the Master was directed to call a meeting of next of kin for the selection of an executor dative.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent (Archibald H. B. Wright) calling upon him to show cause why an order should not be granted recalling and annulling the order granted by this Court on the 17th September last on his petition authorising the Master to call a meeting of next of kin and creditors of the late G. B. Wright, attorney, Graham's Town, to appoint executors dative, and restraining the present applicants from proceeding with the sale of certain movables. Applicants also asked for an order confirming their appointment as executors dative in the estate.

It appeared that the late Mr. Wright was in February of this year declared unfit to manage his affairs, and the present applicants, along with one of Mr. Wright's sons (B. B. Wright) were appointed curators of his property. The last-named, however, was unable to take up his appointment because of his failure to provide security. Then Messrs. Shand and Grocott proceeded to administer the old gentleman's affairs. Mr. Wright died a little while afterwards, and left a will, without appointing executors. The curators then, under section 41 of the Lunacy Act of 1897, assumed the duties and powers of executors dative, being sanctioned by the Master. On the 17th September last an ex parte application was made to this Court by Archibald Wright, for an order authorising the Master to call a meeting of next of kin and restraining the curators from proceeding to dispose of the assets in the meantime. Complaint was made that the curators were about to disperse valuable heirlooms, pictures, and so forth, in defiance of the wishes of the heirs, who were not represented in any way in the administration of the estate. The Court granted an order authorising the Master to call a meeting of the creditors and next of kin, and directing the curators to stay further sale of the assets. Since that time, a meeting of the next of kin and creditors had been held at Albany, before the Resident Magistrate, and it was then proposed that Mr. R. H. Walpole, secretary of the Port Elizabeth Assurance Company, and Mr. Archibald Wright should be appointed executors dative. The curators, however, were represented at the meeting, and no decision was come to pending the present application.

The present applicants said that they had been duly appointed executors dative, and that material facts were withheld from Mr. Justice Buchanan when the ex parte application was made by the respondent, inasmuch as on the 23rd August, about a month previously, they (the curators) had made application to the Eastern Districts Court from an order restraining the said B. B. Wright from in any way interfering with or obstructing the petitioners in their administration of the estate. The E.D. Court granted an order as prayed, and thus the petitioners were confirmed and recognised in their appointment as executors dative. The present applicants intimated that they were quite willing that Mr. Archibald Wright should be joined with them as executors. Mr. Shand is the secretary of the Eastern Province Guardian, Loan, and Investment Company, Graham's Town.

Affidavits were read on both sides.

Mr. Burton was for applicants (Messrs Shand and Grocott); Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Pohl) was for respondent.

Mr. Burton said that the Court could always recall its own order upon proof being given that that order had been improperly obtained. It was not necessary to allege actual fraud. The Court would recall its order if facts which ought to have been before the Court had not been brought before it. Archibald Wright made no reference whatever in his application to the proceedings which had taken place in the Eastern Districts Court a few weeks before. He submitted that if Mr. Justice Buchanan had had information before him in regard to the judgment of the Eastern Districts Court recognising and confirming the appointment of the petitioners, in all probability he would not have granted the order which it was now sought to annul. The order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan was, in essence, in conflict with the order granted by the Eastern Districts Court. It was clear that the object of the application made to this Court in September was to get the petitioners removed from their office as executors, and to have Mr. Walpole and Mr. Archibald Wright appointed in their stead. Mr. Burton went on to urge that the order of the Eastern Districts Court appointing the petitioners as curators was such as to bring the matter within the Lunacy Act, and he submitted that under section 41 of the Act the Master was justified in appointing the curators to continue to administer the estate as executors dative. The effect of the order of the Eastern Districts Court in August last was to maintain and confirm the appointment of the petitioners. He submitted that it was quite competent for the application to be brought for an order of the Court to be annulled if it were shown that material facts which ought to have been brought before the Court had not been mentioned. On the power of the Court to recall its own order, counsel cited Ritchie v. Andrews (2 E.D.C. Reports, 254), and Meintjies v. Thunissen (10 E.D.C. Reports, 56).

Mr. Upington said that as to the question of notice, Mr. Justice Buchanan was informed that the Master had received notice of the particular application then made to him, and the Master subsequently reported upon it. It was felt that inasmuch as this was a matter within the Master's department, he was the proper person to come before the Court and raise any objections there might be.

[Hopley, J.: Could executors be removed from office without notice to them?]

Mr. Upington: They are not executors: they are simply curators continuing to act as they did before, as if the late Mr. Wright had not died. Proceeding, counsel said that the most important point in the present application was whether information had been withheld from the Court that should have been placed before it. The high-water mark of the decisions quoted by his learned friend was that the Court would recall its own order where there had been a total misconception of the facts. He submitted that the order made by the E.D. Court between other parties upon a question as to whether or not Bayard Wright was to remain in occupation of a portion of the estate was entirely irrelevant matter when the question came up before the Supreme Court to decide whether or not section 41 of Act No. 1 of 1897 rendered legal the appointment of these curators as executors dative. Counsel submitted that there had not been any such total misconception as would entitle the present applicants to have the order of this Court annulled. He submitted that the record of the case in the E.D. Court could not have affected the question which Mr. Justice Buchanan had to decide. If it were urged that the decision of Mr. Justice Buchanan was wrong in law, then this was not the correct procedure to take to have it put aside.

Mr. Burton, in his reply, said that their position was that Mr. Justice Buchanan was induced, in ignorance of the order of the E.D. Court, to grant an order which was inconsistent with, and did practically override, the E.D. Court's order. He repeated that the petitioners were prepared to accept Mr. Archibald Wright as a colleague of theirs.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Posteu (November 2nd).

Hopley, J., intimated that in reference to the matter of the estate Wright v. Wright, he thought that this was not a matter which could be decided by one Judge, and the wisest course, perhaps, would be for the counsel on both sides to agree that it should be treated as an appeal. The matter might be heard on Monday before a full Court, or if not treated as an appeal, it might still be heard before a full Court, because he thought it was a matter that a full Court should deal with and not one Judge alone. It might be heard in the form of setting aside an order made by a Divisional Court. The application, at any rate, could be mentioned to the full Court on Monday next.

Posteu (November 5th).

Mr. Burton said it was unnecessary to quote authority to show that the Court could recall its own order, where such an order had been made without all the facts being placed before the Court. It was quite clear that the proceedings in the Eastern Districts Court were material, and should have been brought to the notice of the Court. Counsel then quoted section 41 of Act 1 of 1897. Wright had, he proceeded, been declared incapable of managing his own affairs, and so was a lunatic by the definition in the Act.

Mr. Upington said the important point to notice was that G. G. Wright had never been declared of unsound mind. Curators bonis had been appointed, but it did not necessarily follow that Wright was a lunatic. Section 43 of the Lunacy Act left the jurisdiction of the Court in the appointment of curators untouched. The Court had often appointed curators bonis without declaring the person to whom the curators had been appointed a lunatic. He quoted in re Rensburg (3 M., 199), the Master v. Lehmann (4 E.D.C., 306), and in re Filmer (1875 Buch., 2). Curators were often appointed to prodigals and deaf mutes—Grotius (1—11—1) and Voet (27—10—13). The curator had in this case been appointed because the person in this case was a very old man, nearly 80 years of age, and could not carry on his business, which consisted of large farming operations.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Could the Court have made an order without finding that there was an unsoundness of mind to the extent that he could not manage his own affairs?]

Mr. Upington, continuing, said that the definition certainly used the word incapable of managing himself "or" his affairs, but great injustice would be done if that definition were strictly construed. In every case where a curator bonis was appointed to any person it would necessarily follow that that person was of unsound mind.

[Hopley, J.: The proceedings were under the Lunacy Act; a curator ad litem was appointed!]

Mr. Upington: It does not follow that the proceedings were under the Lunacy Act because a curator ad litem was appointed. He quoted in re Zeederman (1 M., 525).

Continuing, counsel said that so long as an executor could be found who was willing to act, section 41 of the Act did not come into operation at all. The Legislature could not have intended to take away from the next of kin the right to elect an executor. The appointment of the curator in this case was not under the Act at all, but under the Common Law, and so section 41 of the Act did not apply. He referred to in re G. C. Rens (Ford, p. 92).

Mr. Burton, in reply, said that the objection that the appointment of the curator had not been made under the Lunacy Act had been brought to the notice of the Eastern Districts Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for an order to recall and annul an order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan on the 17th September, 1906, by which a meeting of next of kin was directed to be held for the purpose of electing an executor dative to the estate of the late George Greatbatch Wright. The ground of the application is that important facts were withheld from the notice of the Judge at the time the application was made. The fact so alleged to have been withheld was that some question which had previously been raised—the question of the validity of the appointment of the respondents in this case to administer the estate of the deceased after his death—was not brought before the learned Judge. The case now stands thus: The learned Judge has made an order that a meeting of next of kin shall be held. In my opinion, there has been no such withholding of facts as to justify the Court in interfering with the order of the learned Judge, if that order were correct. Upon the whole, the Court has come to the conclusion that the order of the learned Judge should not now be interfered with. The section under which the Master acted in allowing the respondents to proceed with the administration of the estate after the death of the alleged lunatic was the 41st section of Act 1 of 1897, which reads as follows: "When any lunatic, for the care or administration of whose estate a curator has been appointed, shall die intestate, or having left a will, there shall be no executor, or none willing to act, such curator shall continue the administration of the estate of such lunatic and distribute the assets thereof as if he had been appointed an executor ad litem." Now, it is certainly an anomaly in the law that persons who are appointed for one purpose should, after the death of the person whose estate they are administering, for a wholly different purpose be allowed to continue the administration of the estate. During his lifetime they administer the estate on behalf of the lunatic; after his death the interests of the lunatic cease, and they administer the estate on behalf of the heirs. Under the 41st section the heirs, who are so vitally interested in the administration of the estate, have nothing to say. Persons appointed for a wholly different purpose continue to administer the estate, and at all events the Court must require in every case in which the 41st section comes into question that it should be clearly proved that that is a case in which the 41st section applies. An essential requisite is that the person should be a lunatic in terms of the Lunacy Act, and that the appointment should have been made in terms of the 41st section. Now, we find that the order of the Eastern Districts Court for the appointment of a curator was as follows: "Be it remembered that George Greatbatch, Wright, an alleged lunatic, of the farm Kraatz Drift, in the district of Albany, the defendant in the above-named suit, duly assisted by his curator ad litem was summoned to answer Bayard Bailie Wright of the said farm, the plaintiff in the above suit, in an action instituted for the purpose of having him declared of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, and for the appointment of a curator or curators for

curred should be borne by the estate. They have acted perfectly honestly and fairly, and I would further express a hope that the next of kin in electing executors dative to act in this estate will bear in mind that these men have done good and efficient work, and that they will re-elect them, together with such representatives as they themselves wish to appoint, for the purpose of administering the estate. Of course, that is for the heirs, and the Court will only make the suggestion. The application will be dismissed, costs to come out of the estate. One other remark I would make, and that is, that this decision is by no means intended to be in conflict with the decision of the Eastern Districts Court. The question now raised before this Court was not specifically raised before the Eastern Districts Court. The Eastern Districts Court was not asked to recall the appointment made by the Master.

Maaedorp and Hopley, J.J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

FLUCKIGER V. FLUCKIGER. { 1906.
Nov. 2nd.

This was an action brought by Anna Dorothea Henrietta Fluckiger, of Cape Town, against Jacob Fluckiger, of Berne, Switzerland, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Rowson was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Plaintiff sued in forma pauperis and by edictal citation.

In her evidence, plaintiff said that she was married to defendant in Cape Town in 1891. In January, 1895, he deserted her, stating that he was going away on account of ill-health, and that he would not return to South Africa as the climate did not agree with him.

De Villiers, C.J., said, that the defendant still seemed to be in poor health according to a letter received from him.

Witness said that she believed he had not been in good health lately. She added that she was not in good health.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then how are you going to be better off by getting a divorce?]

Witness: It is no good being a wife in name only. She added that she had been deserted for fifteen years, and it was only quite recently that, through the efforts of the Salvation Army, she had traced her husband's whereabouts.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th February, failing which to show cause on the last day of next term why a decree of divorce shall not be granted with costs, personal service to be effected.

ROBINSON V. ROBINSON.

This was an action brought by George Fredk. Wm. Robinson, of Cape Town, an employee of the Customs, against his wife, Hester Gertruda Beatrice Robinson, for divorce by reason of her adultery with one Charles Howard, at Durban, Natal.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

It was stated that defendant was at present undergoing sentence of four months' imprisonment on a charge of committing bigamy at Durban with Charles Howard, with whom she had gone through a form of marriage in September, 1905. She had since given birth to a child, of whom the plaintiff was not the father. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, gave formal proof of the marriage, which took place at Simon's Town on the 1st September, 1902.

George Fredk. Wm. Robinson (the plaintiff) said that he was a tide-waiter in the Customs, Cape Town. He lived with his wife at Simon's Town until September, 1903, and then removed to Cape Town, where they lived together until August, 1904, when defendant went to Johannesburg. Subsequently he heard from her in Natal. She said she wanted to come back to him. She came back in June of this year, but they did not live together. His wife visited her father on his farm. Soon after her return he received a letter from one Chas. Howard asking whether he (plaintiff) was her uncle, and stating that he (Howard) wanted his wife back. Witness gave information to the Criminal Investigation Department. He did not speak to his wife again. She returned to Durban.

question which had previously been raised—the question of the validity of the appointment of the respondents in this case to administer the estate of the deceased after his death—was not brought before the learned Judge. The case now stands thus: The learned Judge has made an order that a meeting of next of kin shall be held. In my opinion, there has been no such withholding of facts as to justify the Court in interfering with the order of the learned Judge, if that order were correct. Upon the whole, the Court has come to the conclusion that the order of the learned Judge should not now be interfered with. The section under which the Master acted in allowing the respondents to proceed with the administration of the estate after the death of the alleged lunatic was the 41st section of Act 1 of 1897, which reads as follows: "When any lunatic, for the care or administration of whose estate a curator has been appointed, shall die intestate, or having left a will, there shall be no executor, or none willing to act, such curator shall continue the administration of the estate of such lunatic and distribute the assets thereof as if he had been appointed an executor ad litem." Now, it is certainly an anomaly in the law that persons who are appointed for one purpose should, after the death of the person whose estate they are administering, for a wholly different purpose be allowed to continue the administration of the estate. During his lifetime they administer the estate on behalf of the lunatic; after his death the interests of the lunatic cease, and they administer the estate on behalf of the heirs. Under the 41st section the heirs, who are so vitally interested in the administration of the estate, have nothing to say. Persons appointed for a wholly different purpose continue to administer the estate, and at all events the Court must require in every case in which the 41st section comes into question that it should be clearly proved that that is a case in which the 41st section applies. An essential requisite is that the person should be a lunatic in terms of the Lunacy Act, and that the appointment should have been made in terms of the 41st section. Now, we find that the order of the Eastern Districts Court for the appointment of a curator was as follows: "Be it remembered that George Greatbatch, Wright, an alleged lunatic, of the farm Krantz Drift, in the district of Albany, the defendant in the above-named suit, duly assisted by his curator ad litem was summoned to answer Bayard Bailie Wright of the said farm, the plaintiff in the above suit, in an action instituted for the purpose of having him declared of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, and for the appointment of a curator or curators for the care and administration of his estate." The Court, in its judgment, is silent upon the first part of the application, viz., to have him declared of unsound mind; it makes no order upon the question of the unsoundness of mind, and makes this order, that "The Court declares the defendant to be incapable of managing his own affairs." This order is quite consistent with a man not being a lunatic or of unsound mind. This Court has frequently appointed curators to persons who, although not lunatics, are wholly unable to administer their own affairs. It is quite consistent with the whole of this record that that is the state of things here. It is quite true that under the 2nd section of the Act the definition of a lunatic is given as follows: "Lunatic includes any idiot or person of unsound mind incapable of managing himself or his affairs." But if a question comes before the Court under the 41st section, it is not sufficient to say, "Here is an order of Court declaring a person incapable of managing his own affairs," the order should go further and state that the person is of unsound mind, and, until that has been stated, there is not sufficient proof before the Court that it is a case to which the 41st section of the Act applies. The 35th section of the Act, no doubt, says that "where . . . the Court shall be of opinion that the person to whom it relates is of unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs, but that he is capable of managing himself, and is not dangerous to himself or to others, such court may make such an order as it thinks fit for the care or administration of the property of the lunatic," etc. But it does not follow from the 35th section that the power which the Court had previously exercised of declaring a person to be incapable of managing his own affairs without declaring him to be of unsound mind was intended to be taken away. At all events, it lies upon those who claim under the 41st section to have this anomalous proceeding of a curator acting as an executor after the death of the person whose curator he was, to prove that the case falls within the 41st section, and such clear proof has not been given in the present case. The Court, therefore, will not interfere with the decision of the learned Judge. I do think that the better course in that case would have been to have granted a rule nisi, because it does seem somewhat unfair towards the curators, who had been administering the estate very honestly and fairly, that their appointment by the Master should be set aside without notice being given, and if they were not represented, as I understand they are, in this application I should certainly have directed that an opportunity should be given to them to defend this application. I do consider, however, that all the costs which have been incurred should be borne by the estate. They have acted perfectly honestly and fairly, and I would further express a hope that the next of kin in electing executors dative to act in this estate will bear in mind that these men have done good and efficient work, and that they will re-elect them, together with such representatives as they themselves wish to appoint, for the purpose of administering the estate. Of course, that is for the heirs, and the Court will only make the suggestion. The application will be dismissed, costs to come out of the estate. One other remark I would make, and that is, that this decision is by no means intended to be in conflict with the decision of the Eastern Districts Court. The question now raised before this Court was not specifically raised before the Eastern Districts Court. The Eastern Districts Court was not asked to recall the appointment made by the Master.

ROBINSON V. ROBINSON.

This was an action brought by George Fredk. Wm. Robinson, of Cape Town, an employee of the Customs, against his wife, Hester Gertruda Beatrice Robinson, for divorce by reason of her adultery with one Charles Howard, at Durban, Natal.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

It was stated that defendant was at present undergoing sentence of four months' imprisonment on a charge of committing bigamy at Durban with Charles Howard, with whom she had gone through a form of marriage in September, 1905. She had since given birth to a child, of whom the plaintiff was not the father. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, gave formal proof of the marriage, which took place at Simon's Town on the 1st September, 1902.

George Fredk. Wm. Robinson (the plaintiff) said that he was a tide-waiter in the Customs, Cape Town. He lived with his wife at Simon's Town until September, 1903, and then removed to Cape Town, where they lived together until August, 1904, when defendant went to Johannesburg. Witness gave information to the Criminal Investigation Department. He did not speak to his wife again. She returned to Durban.

By the Court: His wife did not tell him that she was married to Howard. She said that she was under a contract of service as a nurse, and that she would have to return in a few weeks. Witness did not go to Durban to give evidence in the trial of his wife.

Mr. De Villiers put in the record of the criminal trial.

The Chief Justice remarked that it was a pity there was no better evidence of identification of the defendant.

Mr. De Villiers pointed out that the defendant pleaded guilty to the criminal charge, the details of which clearly showed that she was the plaintiff's wife.

De Villiers, C.J.: It should not be supposed that because it is merely a divorce case evidence may be given in a slipshod fashion. Some degree of evidence, and perhaps even more strict evidence, should be given in these cases. In the present case there are special circumstances which would justify the Court in believing that the defendant in this case is the person who is married to the plaintiff, and from whom he seeks a divorce. According to the marriage certificate a marriage took place on the 1st September, 1902, at Simon's Town, between George Frederick Wm. Robinson and Hester Gertruda Beatrix Hugo. Now it appears that in Natal a woman named Hester Gertruda Beatrix Hugo has been convicted of bigamy, and the indictment there alleged that she had been previously married to George Frederick Wm. Robinson at Simon's Town on the 1st September, 1902. The names of the people were the same, the date was exactly the same, and the place was exactly the same, so that it seems almost conclusively proved that the accused in that case, who confessed her guilt, was the defendant in the present case. Well, then, there is the further circumstance that there has been personal service upon her of all the proceedings, and she has taken no notice of them. She has not even written to the Registrar denying that she is the same person, so that, under those special circumstances, you may take the order, but I should be sorry, again I repeat it, if it is thought that evidence of a slipshod character is admitted in these divorce cases.

Ex parte SMITH.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, for a temporary interdict restraining the Chairman and Commissioners of the Municipality of Ceres from laying certain water mains. Counsel said that the Commissioners had no power to carry out works involving an expenditure of more than £50 unless certain formalities had been gone through. The works in question would mean an outlay of more than £200, and the requisite formalities had not been gone through.

Rule granted calling upon the Commissioners of Ceres Municipality to show cause on Thursday next why an interdict should not be granted as prayed, rule to operate an interim interdict, with leave to petitioner's attorneys to telegraph terms of the order.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL	{	1906.
V. TABLE BAY HARBOUR		Nov. 2nd.
BOARD.		" 3rd.
		" 5th.

Town Council—Harbour Board—
Invalid agreement—Restitutio in integrum—Crown property rates (Act 36 of 1891).

The Government having promised the plaintiff Council that it would introduce into Parliament a Bill to provide for the taxation of Crown property within Municipal limits, the defendant Board, whose property was regarded as Crown property, proposed to the Council certain exemptions from its rating powers. To these proposals the Council agreed and "in consideration of the Council having the exemption introduced into the Bill, the Board covenanted to pay to the Council the sum of £2,500 upon the promulgation of the Act, and thereafter the like sum annually, so long as the property of the Government is liable to be rated." The exemptions were in substance introduced into the Bill which was passed, but the Bill made no mention of the sum to be paid annually by the Board in addition to the rules which would become payable by the Board under the Act. After the passing of the Act, the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of his Ministers, approved of the agreement substituting special provisions for the taxation of Board property in lieu of the provisions of the Act.

Held, that the Board had no power to enter into the agreement and that the approval of the Governor in Council could not render it valid.

The agreement contained a separate provision that the Council should supply the Board with all water required by it, and that the Board should pay the same price as should from time to time be paid by householders: and for several years the Board enjoyed the benefit of this provision. For several years also the Board paid the annual contribution of £2,500 in addition to the rates payable by it.

Held, that although the Board was entitled to be relieved from further payments of the contribution, it was not entitled to recover back contributions already paid under the agreement.

This was an action brought by the Town Council of Cape Town against the Table Bay Harbour Board to recover rates upon certain properties situate within the municipal limits and outside the Dock area.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the Town Council of the City of Cape Town a body corporate constituted under Act No. 26 of 1893 and amending Acts.

2. The defendant is the Harbour Board of Table Bay a body incorporated under Act No. 36 of 1896.

3. The defendant is, and before the levying of the rates, hereinafter referred to, was the owner of the rateable immovable property within the municipality of Cape Town, situate outside the Dock area as enclosed for Customs purposes in the year 1891, and not being land reclaimed from the sea upon which no dwelling house has been erected; the said property is rateable property within the meaning of Act 36 of 1891.

4. In accordance with the provisions of the said Act No. 26 of 1893 the plaintiff duly imposed and levied upon the valuation of the aforesaid property certain rates for municipal purposes.

5. The said rates amounted for the years 1899 and 1900 to 3½d. in the £; for the year 1901 to 3½d. in the £; and for the years 1902, 1903, 1904 and 1905 to 2½d. in the £; and they became payable respectively on the fifteenth day of March in each of the said years.

6. The defendant did not pay the aforesaid rates when due, or any portion thereof, and under the provisions of section 100 of the said Act 26 of 1893, there became due and payable by any person in default in the payment of rates after the 30th day of June, in each of the said years an additional sum equal to one-twentieth of the rate in respect of which such person was in default.

7. The plaintiff annexes hereto an account marked "A" setting forth in detail the said rateable immovable property of the defendant, its situation, the valuation thereof in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, and the several amounts payable in the years from 1899 to 1905 inclusive, in respect of the rates levied and imposed as aforesaid, including the additional sums for which the defendant has become liable as aforesaid by reason of default in the due payment of rates on or before the 30th June in the said years.

8. The plaintiff craves leave to refer to the said account as though herein inserted and says that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £4,279 13s. 3d.

9. All things have happened, all times have elapsed and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff to demand from the defendant the said sum of £4,279 13s. 3d., but the defendant refuses to pay the same or portion thereof.

The plaintiff claims: (a) The sum of £4,279 13s. 3d.; (b) interest a tempore moræ; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

Defendant's plea and claim in reconvention were:—For a plea to the declaration the defendant says:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 are admitted.

2. The defendant admits ownership of the immovable property set forth in Schedule A annexed to the declaration, and admits that the said property is situated outside the dock area as enclosed for Customs purposes in the year 1891.

3. The defendant admits that so much of the said immovable property as is shown in the column headed "Rateable" in the schedule hereunto annexed and marked B, is property which is rateable in terms of Act No. 36 of 1891, and that between March 15th, 1899, and March 15th, 1905, the sums shown in the said column from time to time became due and payable by the defendant as rates duly levied upon the said properties, to the amount in all of £751 13s. 7d.

4. The defendant says further that so much of the said property as is shown in the column headed "not rateable" in the said schedule is property which is specially exempted from rates under and by virtue of such sections and subsections of the said Act No. 36 of 1891, as are specified opposite each such property in the "remarks" column of the said schedule, and that upon such properties the defendant is not and has at no time since 1891 been liable in law to pay rates.

5. The defendant says further that between the 15th March, 1899, and the 15th March 1905, sums amounting in all to £17,500 have been paid annually by the defendant to the plaintiff, far in excess of any amount which in law became due and payable annually by the said Board in respect of rates upon the aforesaid properties.

6. Save as above the defendant denies each and all the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the declaration, save that the Board refuses to pay the sum claimed or any part thereof.

Wherefore it prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says:

1. It craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of its plea.

2. On the 2nd June, 1891, the plaintiff Council and the defendant Board entered into an agreement in writing, copy of which is hereunto annexed marked C. The defendant (now plaintiff) prays that the same may be considered as inserted herein.

3. Neither the said Council nor the said Board as then constituted had power or authority in law to enter into such agreement. The said agreement was not thereafter incorporated in, authorised or ratified by Act No. 36 of 1891, nor was it authorised by or recognised in Acts Nos. 26 of 1893 and 36 of 1896, reconstituting the said Council and Board respectively, or any other legislation; the said agreement was and is ultra vires the said Council and Board, invalid in law and not legally binding upon either party thereto.

4. From time to time since the year 1891, the defendant (now plaintiff) has made payments to the plaintiff (now defendant) under the terms of the said agreement far in excess of any sums annually becoming due and payable in law by the defendant (now plaintiff) to the plaintiff (now defendant) as and for rates; and between the 15th March, 1899, and the 15th March, 1905, the defendant (now plaintiff) has so paid to the plaintiff (now defendant) the sum of £17,500 in all, being £16,748 6s. 5d. in excess of the amount which in law became due and payable in rates by the defendant (now plaintiff) during the said period.

5. The said payments so far as the same were in excess of amounts in law due and payable by the said Board for rates were payments which were not due to the said Council and which the said Board was not in law required, empowered or authorised to make, and the said Board is now entitled to recover from the said Council the said excess payments.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) prays:—(a) That the said agreement of the 2nd June, 1891, may be declared null and void; (b) an account of all moneys due in law by the defendant (now plaintiff) to the plaintiff (now defendant) as and for rates between the years 1891 and 1905, and of all moneys paid by the defendant (now plaintiff) to the plaintiff (now defendant) under the said agreement during the said period, and payment to the defendant (now plaintiff) by the plaintiff (now defendant) of such sum as may be shown by the said account to be due, including the aforesaid sum of £16,748 6s. 5d.; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The agreement attached to the plea set out inter alia that the "Harbour Board, in consideration of the Town Council having the aforesaid exemption from their rating powers introduced into the proposed bill," should pay to the Council £2,500 a year.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendants.

Mr. Searle read a consent paper which had been entered into between the parties.

David P. de Villiers Graaff said that he was Mayor of Cape Town in 1891, and he was a member of Parliament at that time. He remembered the agreement, which he signed on behalf of the Town Council. The three bodies, the Town Council, Harbour Board, and the Colonial Government were all in accord on the terms set out in the agreement. The municipality had prepared a drastic Bill in which they intended to provide that the Harbour Board property should be taxed the same as other property in the town.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If all the parties were agreed, why was not that agreement made part of the Act?]

Witness: Personally. I understood that it was in order, and that the agreement would hold good, and that the Act was sufficient for all purposes as appertaining to Harbour Board property.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As I understand it now, the Act is not quite consistent with the agreement.]

Witness: At the time I thought they were consistent. In further evidence, witness said that at that time, as far as he was aware, the Harbour Board had no property outside the Dock area except Harbour Board dwellings and cottages.

Cross-examined: Witness was not actually aware of any record of the agreement between the Government and the Town Council. He was perfectly clear that it was an honourable understanding between the members of the Government and the Town Council and the Harbour Board. Amongst the members of the Government who were consulted was the Attorney-General of the day.

Chas. B. Martin, City Treasurer, produced a certified copy of the valuations of the properties in question. He had visited the various properties. Witness described the property marked "L," near the Amsterdam Battery, in reference to which the Harbour Board said that the rate payable was uncertain. The building was now used for stables in connection with the cartage department. He also described certain of the other property in regard to which there was a dispute.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Frank Robb, Acting General Manager of the Table Bay Harbour Board, said that as to the unfinished stores and ground off Ebenezer-road the buildings occupied about two-thirds of the ground. The buildings were not now revenue producing. From the 1st July, 1899, to the 31st December, 1901, the buildings were leased to Wilson, Son and Co. Afterwards the buildings were used by the Board for stabling horses for both cartage and works purposes. Some of the horses were used for delivery of goods and others for work inside the Dock area. The iron building in Hospital-road (No. 2 on the plan) was used for keeping meat sold by the lessee of the location store. No additional rent was got from the lessee of the location store for the use of this store.

Cross-examined: There was no written agreement under which the lessee of the store occupied the iron building. The rental which Wilsons used to pay was £15 a month. The Board made a revenue from the cartage department, and the stables off Ebenezer-road were utilised for horses employed in that department.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Searle said that his case raised some very important issues both on the claim in convention and on the claim in reconvention. The claim in convention referred to certain specific properties outside the Dock area which the Council said were rateable property under the Act No. 36 of 1891 (section 4, sub-section b). (Certain other properties were said not to be rateable because they were on reclaimed land. Counsel submitted that the stables, harness-room, etc., were rateable because they were revenue producing, inasmuch as the Board could not make its revenue without the stables, etc.)

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the very docks themselves are revenue producing.]

Mr. Searle: The Board now comes into competition directly with anyone else, and it delivers goods and baggage under regulations which are framed and proved.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But is not the revenue meant in the Act to be of a more direct nature?]

Mr. Searle submitted that anything outside the dock area which was utilised as a means of producing revenue was liable to be rated. The principle which was adopted by the Court in Aliwal

North Municipality v. Colonial Government (7 S.C.R., 232), should be applied to buildings in connection with which the Board obtained profit. The Board obtained very substantial revenue from the cartage department every year.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would the office used in connection with the cartage department be liable to be rated?]

Mr. Searle: The offices are inside the dock area.

Counsel went on to argue that the test to apply was that the Municipality had to render the usual services as a municipality to this property situate within the limits of the Municipality, and that as long as there was revenue derived from it it was liable to be rated. If the buildings were used for the purposes of a business and of making a return they must be regarded as revenue producing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you derive a revenue from your chambers?]

Mr. Searle: Someone else does. It would not be easy, of course, for a barrister to carry on his practice unless he had chambers, and I submit that his chambers are revenue producing inasmuch as they are essential to the earning of his income. Counsel went on to contend further that the cartage department had nothing to do with harbour works. Thus the Council had two strings to their bow.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The second is a good deal better than the first.]

Mr. Searle said that he thought the first string, that these buildings were revenue producing, was also a good one.

Counsel proceeded to argue that certain pieces of ground on which works had been laid down to make them suitable for the purposes of the cartage department were liable to be rated. As to the buildings within the location, counsel submitted that the location superintendent's office and the butcher's shop or store room were not part of the Harbour Works. He did not press for a rate upon the hospital, as the Council's practice had not been to press for a rate on hospitals. On the question whether certain properties were rateable because they stood on reclaimed ground, he contended that the exemption in the Act did not apply to these properties. He submitted that the reasonable construction of the words in the Act would be that they referred to land reclaimed by the Harbour Board and under their control. The Council had never claimed rates on the reclaimed land along the coast. The land in question at the foot of Adderley-street was acquired by the Board for the Railway Department, and it had been used for a goods shed prior to offices being built by the Board. If the Board's contention were correct, then the whole of the lower part of Cape Town would be exempt from rating if the Board bought the ground. Counsel also submitted that the land behind the Sailors' Institute was not entitled to be considered reclaimed land within the scope of the exemption.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that an important question upon which much of this case turned was whether the agreement between the Council and the Harbour Board was valid. It was significant how sedulously his learned friend had tried to escape from the agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The agreement has nothing to do with the claim in convention.]

Mr. Schreiner said that he would argue the claim in reconvention first. As to the agreement of 1891, counsel submitted that the agreement should be made void. It seemed on the face of it that however well-intended the parties may have been, the agreement was bad because it was not put into the Act.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Searle): Do you object to the agreement being declared void, or do you intend in the future to act upon it?]

Mr. Searle: We intend in the future to act upon it. The Harbour Board have been glad in the past to avail themselves of it.

Mr. Schreiner (proceeding) submitted that the fact that the agreement might have had the special authorisation of a minute of the Governor in Council in 1892 did not make it any better or worse. The Town Council had no power to make a special contract with any section of its ratepayers that a lump sum should be paid by way of rates each year. Counsel cited Collector of Customs v. Cape Central Railways (6 Juta, 402) and quoted Voet (4, 12, 55), and submitted that if the Harbour Board had paid rates for a number of years under a mistaken view of the law they were entitled to a refund. Mr. Schreiner went on to argue that the Harbour Board had been paying a lump sum of £2,500 a year while at the same time the Town Council had no duties to perform in respect of the dock area, and thus the people who did business with the Board had had to pay that sum for the benefit of the Municipality.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then the Board desired it themselves. They wanted to govern in their own domestic sphere.]

I understand that, but they could only do it by going to Parliament. They could, if necessary, have sought in a special Act to control the relations between this particular Council and this particular Board. But no such thing has been done. Counsel went on to say that this was not a question of money merely, but it bore upon the way in which affairs should be conducted between two great public bodies. There was no power to choose on the part of a rating body who should pay full rates and who should compound for a lump sum.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think any Court could say that it would go back all those years and order the money so paid to be refunded. The money had been expended and the rates had been levied on the basis of this lump sum had been paid.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that there had been a total failure of consideration in the agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It might have been a great advantage to the Harbour Board to have sole control in their own domestic sphere.]

Mr. Schreiner said that the Board took upon itself, not only the burden of £2,500 a year, but the extra burden of various services such as the Municipality would have to perform.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think any Court could be guilty of such a thing, after all these years, as to say that the payments shall be refunded. It is against every principle of law. I would go with you to this extent, that if it had been like the Customs case, where there was no possible consideration, there might be much to be said for the view that the money should be paid back.]

Mr. Schreiner contended that on the strength of his lordship's judgment in the Customs case it would be quite possible to make a refund.

He referred to Brice on ultra vires (3rd ed., pp. 104, 146, 172 and 489), to several English and American cases, and to the case of Van Blommestein v. Holiday (21 S.C., 11).

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Council are now demanding rates from you on property other than that on which you allege that you have overpaid rates. Can you set off these amounts against this present claim?]

You can set off an obligation upon which you can't sue. For example, you can set off a prescribed promissory note. A heavy payment like this is merely a gift, and here it is a gift of trust money, without any causa. It is a bad gift. Then the donee claims a lesser amount, and the lesser claim is set off, inso jure. He cited Kruiser v. Van Turen's Executor (5 S.C.R., 162).

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Harbour Board has appropriated the payment. Can they now appropriate it to something else?]

Yes. If it were appropriated to something due, then they could not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it correct to say it was not due; was the agreement not binding till set aside?]

No, the agreement was bad ab initio. Parliament did not see the agreement. The Government might have known of it, but that was quite different from Parliament knowing of it. The agreement could have no validity, unless it were embodied in the Act. The Auditor-General could not have passed the payment of £2,500 until he got a Governor's Minute. The Council should return this money, as to a new trustee. It was public money, found indirectly by the taxpayer. It was a sum for which there was no valid consideration.

On the point of the construction of Act 36 of 1891, section 4, sub-section B, the Harbour Board stables were not buildings from which revenue was derived. The horses did not work in the stables. The stables were not Harbour works, but they were used for the purposes of harbour works, and that was covered by sub-section B. Before the Act of 1891 Crown property was exempt from rates, and when it was made rateable railways and harbours were still exempted. As to section 5, sub-section 2, the Act spoke in each year as the rate was levied. If the property was then reclaimed from the sea, and "under control of the Harbour Board" then it was exempt, except where there were dwelling-houses on it.

In reply, Mr. Searle cited the case of the Woodstock Municipality (22 S.C., 7). The difference between the agreement and the Act was, that the agreement said "reclaimed land and land to be reclaimed," whereas the Act said "reclaimed land." There was no inconsistency between the Act and agreement. The Town Council was entitled to claim on both. The consideration for the agreement was that the Harbour Board got water at half rates, and that the Town Council would not interfere in the dock area. The case of the Port Elizabeth Divisional Council v. Uitenhage (B 1868, p. 221) settled the point as to set off.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not the effect of the stipulation for payment of £2,500 per annum in conflict with the exemption from rates conferred by the Act? So far as I can see the only consideration is the supply of the water.]

If the agreement is set aside, then we will be entitled to stop their water supply.

Counsel then cited Brice on ultra vires (pp. 637, 696, 697, and 767), and Rooth v. The State (K. and B. II., 259), and Divisional Council of Aliwal North (7 J., 232).

After further argument, De Villiers, C.J., recalled Mr. Martin, who said that he had been treasurer to the Council in 1903, but he had been in its service since January, 1895. He could not speak from personal knowledge, but according to the books the Council charged the rate-payers 30s. per 100 gallons of water a day from 1890 to 1898. Persons not paying the general property rate paid 60s. per 100 gallons per diem. From the date of the agreement, the Harbour Board paid at the rate of 30s. The Railway Department paid 60s. up to 1893, when it got its water elsewhere.

In answer to Mr. Schreiner, he said that he could not say if the Board actually paid 60s. before the agreement. He could not say if there was a change in the rate paid for water by the Harbour Board after the agreement. In 1896 the Town Council tried to make the Harbour Board pay more, but the Board referred to the agreement. After the Act the Harbour Board would still have had to pay 60s. if it had not been for the agreement. The difference between what the Harbour Board would have paid under the old rate and what it paid under the agreement was about £23,000. for the last seven years. For the years 1891, 1892 and 1893 the difference would have been inconsiderable.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 5th).

De Villiers, C.J.: Before considering in detail the various questions raised in this case, it would be well to decide the very important question whether a certain agreement made between the plaintiff Council and the defendant Board on the 2nd of June, 1891, was valid or not. It appears that the Colonial Government had promised the Council to introduce a Bill to provide for the taxation of Crown property within the municipal limits. Up to that time the property of the Board had been free from taxation as being considered Crown property. The Board being desirous of having property under its control excluded from the provisions of the proposed Bill, proposed certain exemptions from the rating powers of the Council. To these proposals the Council agreed, and "in consideration of the Town Council having the aforesaid exemption from their rating powers introduced into the proposed Bill," the Board entered into certain covenants. The first is "to pay to the Council the sum of £2,500 upon the promulgation of any Act of Parliament which may be passed during the present session of Parliament rendering liable to be rated for municipal purposes the property belonging to the Colonial Government, situated within the limits of Cape Town, and to continue to pay to the Council annually a like sum of £2,500 so long as the property of the Colonial Government is liable to be rated as aforesaid." The second covenant was "that all dwelling-houses and residences which may hereafter be built within the limits of the dock area, and all dwelling-houses and residences outside the dock area which may be the property or under the control of the Board shall be liable to be rated in the same manner, and to the same extent as the property of the Colonial Government. The Board further covenants to perform certain specified duties within the dock area "as would be performed by the Municipality if the properties exempted had been rated." The last covenant is "to pay for all water supplied by the Council within the dock area (other than that supplied at a special price for the shipping) at the same rate or price as paid from time to time by the householders, the Council undertaking to supply all water required by the Harbour Board." In consideration of these covenants, the Council further undertakes and agrees "that from the rating powers over Colonial Government property to be obtained by means of the proposed Bill shall be exempted the following property: (a) All buildings, land, and other property vested in or under control of the Harbour Board, and situated within the Dock area, other than houses or residences, hereafter built, which shall be liable to be rated under the provisions of any Act which may be passed; (b) all reclaimed land or land hereafter reclaimed, wharves, and buildings, other than dwelling-houses and residences outside the Dock area, which dwelling-houses and residences shall also be liable to be rated under the provisions of the said Act." It further appears that the Government did in the session of 1891 introduce a Bill to abolish the exemption from certain rates in respect of certain immovable property vested in the Crown. The Bill was duly passed, and is now known as Act 36 of 1891. The second section enacts that such Crown property within the limits of any Municipality or corporate town shall, subject to the provisions contained in the Act, "be liable to be rated for Municipal purposes by the Council of such Municipality or town to the same extent, and in the same manner as if the said property had been owned or occupied by a private person. The fourth section enacts that notwithstanding the provisions of the second section no rates shall be levied by or be payable to the Council of any municipality or corporate town in respect of certain specified classes of property, including, amongst others, "any dock, breakwater, wharf, pier, retaining wall, or immovable property of any kind (not being a dwelling-house or a store or a building from which revenue is derived by any harbour authority), which forms part of, or is used for the purpose of any harbour boards." So far the Act is general in its terms, and although the 5th section proceeds to make special provisions for the exemption of certain property of the defendant Board, counsel on both sides appear to have assumed that the exemptions specified in the fourth section are also applicable to the defendant Board. Something might have been said in favour of the view that the fourth section was not intended so to apply, but as neither side has raised the point, and as the fourth section has always been treated by the parties themselves as being binding, I do not propose to raise the question. The 5th section enacts that "no rates shall be levied by or be payable to the Town Council of Cape Town upon

(2) Any immovable property, other than dwelling-houses erected after the promulgation of this Act, which is under the control of the Harbour Board, and is situated within the Dock area, as enclosed for Customs purposes, and any land reclaimed from the sea, which is under similar control, and upon which no building has been erected." On comparing the agreement with the Act I find that with some unimportant variations the exemptions created by the 5th section of the Act agree with the exemptions stipulated for by the agreement, but the agreement is silent as to immovable property (not being a dwelling-house or a store or building from which revenue is derived by the harbour authority), which forms part of, or is used for the purpose of, the harbour works, and is outside the dock area, whereas the fourth section of the Act exempts such property. Unreclaimed land, for instance, outside the dock area, upon which improvements have been effected and which is used exclusively for the purpose of the harbour works, would under the agreement be liable to pay rates, whereas under the fourth section of the Act it would be exempt. In April, 1892, the following minute was submitted by the Ministers to, and approved of, by the Governor in Council: "Ministers have the honour to recommend that His Excellency the Governor may be pleased to approve of the terms of the accompanying agreement entered into between the Town Council of Cape Town and the Harbour Board of Table Bay, under which it is proposed to substitute special provisions for the taxation of the docks, quays, piers, breakwater, warehouses, sheds, and the other property belonging to the Colonial Government, situate within the dock or customs area, and under the control of the Table Bay Harbour Board, in lieu of the provisions enacted by the Crown Property Rating Act, No. 36, of 1891, from the operation of which the property aforesaid was exempted in view of the agreement now recommended for approval." We here find that the Governor in Council deliberately took to himself the power of substituting the special provisions of a private agreement for the provisions of a public Act of Parliament. The minute states that the property in question was exempted from the operation of the Act in view of the agreement (thus recommended, but there is no evidence whatever to show that Parliament was informed of the agreement before it passed the Act. If the agreement was valid, it did not require the consent of the Government, and if it was invalid the approval of the Government could not give it validity. If the Governor in Council is to have the power to substitute one form of local taxation for another form which has been deliberately sanctioned by Parliament, where are his powers to stop? It so happens that in this case the two public bodies concerned agreed beforehand that in addition to the rates to be levied under the proposed Act a lump sum shall be annually payable by the Board to the Council, but the Act does not direct such a payment, and when the Legislature limited the annual rates payable to the Council it could not have intended that any sum in excess of such rates should be legally claimable. The absence of such an intention on the part of the Legislature cannot be made good by any minute of the Ministers. They, as well as the Governor, are bound by the laws of the land, and have no power to suspend, supersede, add to, or in any other manner vary the provisions of an Act of Parliament. As to the agreement itself, I cannot find anything in the Acts under which the Board was called into existence, which authorises it to enter into the first covenant. It undertakes to pay the Council £2,500 annually, in addition to the rates lawfully leviable under the then proposed Act in consideration of the Council having the exemption introduced into the Bill, but the Bill was introduced by the Government, and it was for the Parliament, and not for the Council or the Government, to decide what form that Bill should ultimately take. The Council could not, as of right, claim that there should be no exemption from its rating powers, and consequently the consent of the Council to any such exemption could not possibly be a valid consideration for the Board's promise, made in advance of the passing of the Act, for the annual payment of £2,500 in excess of what the Act would sanction. It cannot be said that any other consideration, such as the supply of water by the Council (was intended, for the annual payment is only to be made so long as the property of the Government is liable to be rated. I am of opinion, therefore, that the Board had no legal power or authority to enter into the agreement, and that it is now entitled to have the agreement set aside to this extent that no payments shall now or hereafter be demanded thereunder.

The next question which arises is whether the Board is entitled not only to set aside the agreement, but to claim that all payments already made thereunder shall be refunded. It was contended, on the authority of Collector of Customs v. Cape Central Railways (6 Jut., 403), that if the Government had been in question instead of the Board the Government would have been entitled to a complete restitutio in integrum, and consequently to a re-payment of all moneys paid under an invalid agreement. The case itself is certainly not an authority for this contention, but certain dicta in the judgment are relied upon as supporting it. It was there said, on the authority of Voet (49, 14, 2), that the fiscus is entitled to restitutio in integrum in the same manner as minors, but nothing was said by the Court, from which it could possibly be inferred that a body like the Harbour Board would have the same privileges in this respect as the fiscus and minors. Moreover, it is in the nature of a restitutio in integrum, as explained by Voet (4-1-21, 22, and 23), that the parties concerned are placed in the same position in which they would have been if the invalid transaction had never been entered into. The practice of this Court in regard to invalid contracts has certainly been to confine the relief to setting aside the contract where it would be manifestly unjust to set aside every payment made or act done under such contract. The annual payments made by the Board are completed transactions, and although the ostensible consideration mentioned in the agreement for the payments, was really no consideration at all, there can be no doubt that the Board derived considerable benefit from some portions of the agreement. In regard to water, for instance, the Council was not bound to supply the Board with water, whilst under the agreement the Board was entitled to receive, and did in fact, receive, during the period now in question, all water required by the Board and that at no higher price than was paid by householders. The Court cannot, from the materials before it, estimate the exact value to the Board of the benefits which it received under the agreement, and it is clear that if the agreement is now to be regarded as having been non-existent until the end of 1905, it would be wholly impossible to restore the parties to their original position. In the case of Port Elisabeth Divisional Council v. Uitenhage Divisional Council (Buch., R., for 1868, p. 221), two Divisional Councils had for three years acted under an arrangement by which the tolls of a bridge were equally divided between them. The sum thus paid by the defendant Council to the plaintiff Council amounted to £907. Afterwards the defendant Council disputed the right of the plaintiff Council to share in the tolls on the ground that the toll bar was wholly within the plaintiff Council's jurisdiction, but the Court found that the toll bar was within the defendant Council's jurisdiction. The plaintiff also instituted an action against the defendant to recover £480, the amount of a subsidy due under the Act 10 of 1864. The defendant admitted its liability to pay this sum, but claimed that, as the tolls had been illegally divided between the Councils, under a mutual mistake as to the law, the defendant was entitled to set off against the subsidy the amount thus illegally paid. The Court, however, held that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount of the subsidy without any deduction of the amount while had been overpaid to it. Connor, J., in his judgment, said: "The two Councils came to a particular arrangement, acted upon that arrangement, and received and paid the money upon the basis of that arrangement, and certainly it would be a strong measure to say that either of them would have a natural equity as opposed to that arrangement, for we must assume that the money was laid out for the proper purpose." In the present case the Council and the Board entered into an agreement, they acted upon that agreement, received mutual benefits upon the basis of that agreement, and the Council expended the moneys received by it under the belief that it was a valid and binding agreement. The Board itself continually relied upon that agreement in disputes between the two bodies, and it would be in the highest degree inequitable towards the Council and the ratepayers that money voluntarily paid by the one party to the other should now be ordered to be returned.

The plaintiff Council, by its declaration, claims the sum of £4,279 13s. 3d. as being rates unpaid on certain of the defendant Council's property during the years 1899 to 1905, inclusive together with fines due from delay in payment. The defendant admits the rates to be due to the extent of £751 13s. 7d., which does not include the fines, but claims to deduct this amount from the amounts alleged to have been overpaid. For the reasons already stated, I am of opinion that the deduction cannot be allowed, and I proceed to consider in detail the different properties in respect of which the rates are in dispute. The validity of these rates must be decided under Act 36 of 1891. There are certain stables off Ebenezer-road (marked 4 on the plan), which first appeared in the accounts as unfinished stores, afterwards as iron and brick stores, and finally as stables, cartage department. The horses which are kept in these stables are used for the cartage of goods, which certainly brings in a considerable revenue to the Board. Whilst they were used as stores the buildings were let from 1st July, 1899, to 31st December, 1901. I cannot agree with the plaintiff's counsel that because the buildings are used for horses which are employed in cartage work, the buildings can be said to produce a revenue in terms of the 4th section of the Act. I do consider, however, that the stables cannot fairly be considered as forming part of or being used for the purpose of harbour works. It is true that Mr. Robb, the manager of the defendant Board, says that besides being used for the cartage of goods, the horses are used "for works purposes in connection with the Board," but this vague statement is not sufficient to bring the value of the buildings within the exemption of the fourth clause of the Act. From the amount of the value must be deducted the sum of £1,000 as the value of the land adjacent. In respect of these and the other stables, as well as harness room and smithy, in the account, the claim of the Council will be allowed. As to the land in dispute without any buildings upon them on none of them do any permanent works or improvements appear to have been effected, and they are therefore exempt under sub-section (a) of section 4 of Act 36 of 1891. In regard to the iron building in Hospital-road, where the meat sold by the lessee of the location store to the natives is kept, I am of opinion that it is liable to be rated. The iron building is really an appurtenance to the stores which are leased. The rent payable for the leased portion has not been increased since the addition, but I consider that revenue may fairly be said to be derived from all these buildings as a whole. In regard to the building let to Van der Byl and Co., there can be no doubt that revenue is derived from it, but the Board contends that inasmuch as it was built upon reclaimed ground it is not liable to be rated. But it is not sufficient for the purposes of exemption within the fifth section of the Act to prove that the land has been reclaimed, for it must be land under the control of the Board. I am of opinion that as the building has been let and is in the actual occupation of lessees, it cannot be regarded as being under the control of the Harbour Board. It is a more difficult question to decide whether the offices at the foot of Adderley-street are exempt or not. These offices were used during the period covered by the action in connection with the work of the Harbour Board as offices for the General Manager, accounting and cartage departments, with the exception of certain rooms let as offices. The number of offices let seems to have gradually fallen off, until in 1904 only two, and in 1905 only one were so let. The attorneys of the Board, in a letter written by them to the Council on 7th November, 1903, admitted the liability of the Council to the payment of rates on such portions of the building as were let to tenants. The building stands on reclaimed land, and in so far as it is under the control of the Council it is certainly exempt from taxation. In my opinion the only portions of the building which should be held to be exempt are those which had not been let from time to time to tenants. Those portions thus let should be held to be liable. As to building marked 7, I am of opinion that it is exempt. The result is that the Court will give judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of the rates on the properties so found liable to be rated. On the other hand, the Court will order that the agreement of 1891 be set aside, and will declare that the plaintiff Council will not be entitled hereafter to claim payment of any moneys thereunder. Each of the parties having failed upon substantial portions of its claims, the Court will order that they pay their own costs.

Mr. Searle said that there was one point raised in the case which was not dealt with in his lordship's judgment, viz., the position of the location superintendent's office.

Having heard counsel further, De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court was of opinion that the location superintendent's office was exempt from rating.

A further question was raised as to the value at which the land adjacent to the stables off Ebenezer-road should be taken for the purposes of exemption, and after argument it was ordered, by consent, that the land should be taken as of the value of £1,000.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

WOOD V. OXENDALE AND CO. { 1906.
Nov. 2nd.
" 3rd.
" 14th.

Principal and agent—Breach of contract—Measure of damages.

Defendants had by letter, dated July 7th, 1906, appointed plaintiff as sole agent for the sale of their goods in Cape Colony, and stated that they had forwarded samples by the same mail. Plaintiff accordingly hired show rooms and made all preparations necessary for the carrying on of the business. On July 14th, defendants wrote, treating the contract as still incomplete, and on August 1st they entirely disavowed it. Only a few samples were received, and those not till September.

Held, that plaintiff was entitled to damages for breach of contract, notwithstanding that the contract had not been entered into for any fixed time.

Held further, that the measure of damages must be estimated by the expenses to which plaintiff had been put in connection with the work of his agency, together with a reasonable remuneration for his time and labour, but that the commission he might probably have earned had defendants adhered to their contract could not be taken into account.

This was an action to recover £2,500 damages for breach of contract, brought by the plaintiff, a merchant and general agent, of Cape Town, against the defendant, who traded as Oxendale and Co., wholesale warehousemen, of Northallerton, Yorkshire. The plaintiff had obtained leave to sue by edictal citation. By a cablegram from the defendant to the plaintiff on the 27th of June, 1906, confirmed by letter of the defendant of the 7th July, 1906, the defendant entered into a contract and appointed him agent for the Cape Colony on certain terms. By these terms it was provided that the plaintiff should receive as and for commission 10 per cent. on all orders sent to the defendant. Plaintiff said that the orders would have amounted to between £15,000 and £16,000 per annum, and his commission would have been £1,500 to £1,600 per annum. Immediately upon receipt of the cablegram, and induced by the contract, the plaintiff set about freeing himself from a certain contract in a partnership in the firm of B. Wood and Co., from which he obtained a release. The plaintiff, for the same reason, leased a certain show-room at the corner of Strand-street and Burg-street for a period of six months at £15 a month for the defendants' samples, and there were other expenses for advertising the goods. The defendant undertook to send on samples immediately after the 27th June, 1906, the samples necessary to the due discharge of his showing as agent. The defendant had failed and neglected to do so. The samples ought to have arrived about the middle of July, 1906. As they did not so arrive, the plaintiff wrote he would suffer great loss unless the samples were sent forthwith. On the 9th September, 1906, as they had not arrived, plaintiff cabled to the defendant that he would hold them liable for a breach of contract. For the loss of the summer trade the loss of the profits to be derived, advertising and fitting of the premises, he claimed £2,500 damages with costs.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the formal allegations, and they adperiences in the past in this respect, and we do not wish to repeat them. Bear in mind that you are not personally known to us." After having secured the services of the plaintiff and promised to enable him to begin business at once, they give out that they delayed doing so because they were reluctant to trust an unknown man. In the ordinary course of business, if the defendants had performed what they undertook to do, the plaintiff could have commenced work about the beginning of August. He waited until September 9, when it became evident that no serious attempt had been made by the defendants to carry out the contract, seeing that the samples then forwarded were not such as to suit the summer business, which was, in the contemplation of the parties, the only business the plaintiff could then carry on. In my opinion the agency entered into was not for any fixed and certain period, such, for example, as a particular season, and it could be terminated by notice, provided it was not determined in an untimely or unreasonable manner. Upon these facts I was inclined to the opinion that there had been a breach of contract by the defendants, in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to claim damages, whatever the measure of the damages might be, but a case of considerable importance was cited by Mr. Benjamin on behalf of the defendants which raised some doubt in my mind. It is the case of Joynton v. Hunt and Son (93 L.T.R., page 47), in which the plaintiff claimed damages for breach of contract by the defendants in respect of an agreement, the substance of which was contained in a letter written by the defendants to the following effect: "We will give 2½ per cent. commission on all business you do for us in London. You let us know to whom you show our samples, and if business results from the transaction we will forward your commission quarterly. This refers to orders executed." The breach complained of was the termination of the arrangement without notice. The Court of Appeal held that the defendants were entitled to terminate the agreement whenever they pleased, without being liable to make compensation to the plaintiff, on the ground that there was only an arrangement that the plaintiff might obtain orders for the defendant if he thought fit to do so, and that if he did obtain orders the defendants might accept them if they thought fit to do so, and that if business resulted commission should be paid; and neither party was bound to do anything. Though there are points of similarity between the case cited and the present case, there are also points of difference. In this case the defendants virtually promised to make the plaintiff their sole agent in a certain area, thereby undertaking to do no business except through his instrumentalities, and it cannot be said, as is the case of Joynton v. Hunt, that the plaintiff was not bound to do anything. The plaintiff is also entrusted with the safe-keeping and the sale of the samples, sent to him for the purposes of the business. In respect of this safe custody he must necessarily go to some expense. Then, again, the matter of advertising is placed in his hands. On the whole I come to the conclusion that in this case rights and liabilities come into existence through the action of the parties, which could not summarily be put an end to by the defendant without compensation to the plaintiff. To this case should, in my opinion, be applied the principles laid down in the case of Simpson v. Lamb (17 C. B., 615), where Jervis, C.J., said that "the authority of the agent was revocable, but this does not carry with an absolute right on the part of the principal to revoke without reinstating the agent where his position has been altered; or without paying for his labour and also any expense incurred in the course of his employment." In the present case the plaintiff was not prevented from carrying on the agency by revocation, but rather by default on the part of the defendants in not furnishing him with the means for carrying on the business. However, it seems to me that the principle as to the measure of damages will be the same. In my opinion the plaintiff was entitled to regard the contract as at an end, or to put an end to it, after waiting in vain for two months for the fulfilment of the conditions by the defendants, and he is now entitled to damages. But the damages, upon all the authorities, must not be measured by an estimate of the commission he might probably have earned, but by the labour actually devoted to, and the expense actually incurred in, the part performance of the agency. There is no reason to think that the defendant devoted all his time to this particular work, and there is nothing in the contract which prevented him from carrying on other business. I think the sum of £80, including the rent of the room for two months, will cover the loss actually suffered by the plaintiff. Judgment is given for the plaintiff for £80, with costs. The claim in re-convention is disposed of by holding that the defendant in re-convention was justified in putting an end to the arrangement, and judgment is given for him, with costs, on the claim in re-convention.

ginning of August. A week or a fortnight made a great difference. If the samples arrived in the middle of September the best part of the trade would be lost.

Frederick Dalton, partner in the firm of Dalton and Reid, corroborated the last witness as to how the plaintiff stood with the defendants in this class of business.

Benjamin J. Hill, sub-manager of Messrs. Jagger and Co., agreed with the previous witnesses as to the time when the samples should be sent out.

Mr. Burton said there were three points to be considered: (a) Whether there was a contract between the parties; (b) whether the breach of contract was the breach of an essential condition; (c) what damages should be awarded. It was clear that the contract was broken; it was admitted on the pleadings, and the breach was a breach of an essential condition. The whole basis of the contract was the sending of the samples.

Mr. Benjamin said the whole contract should be performed in the defendants' usual way of business, because the plaintiff approached the defendants and asked for their agency. The defendants did not keep their English summer goods in stock after September, so the plaintiff could not expect to get samples of their coming season's goods. Time in this case was not of the essence of the contract. Even if there was a breach of contract, the plaintiff could not recover damages for a longer period than a month or six weeks. The contract was terminable without notice at any time. He cited Bowstead on Agency (2nd edition, p. 433), and Joyson v. Hunt (93 L.T. 470). If contract were not terminable at a moment's notice, then the breach of contract was not one that entitled the plaintiff to rescind the contract. Counsel quoted: Addison on Contracts (1, 4, 8, p. 158); Anson on Contract (p. 303, 9th edition); and Anson (2, 1, 3).

Mr. Burton was heard in reply, and referred to Anson on Contract (Part V., Ch. 3).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 14th).

Maasdorp, J.: As the upshot of a correspondence ranging over upwards of two months, an agreement was concluded between the parties by letter of the defendants of the 7th of July, whereby the plaintiff was appointed agent for the sale of the defendants' goods in this colony. The defendants reserved the right to appoint their agents in parts of the Colony other than Cape Town and the suburbs, but undertook not to appoint any agent in Cape Town and the suburbs so long as the plaintiff was doing a reasonable amount of business. This agency was subject to the following terms and conditions: (1) 10 per cent. commission to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff on all orders sent by him, such commission to be remitted on the 1st of each month. (2) All parcels to be delivered direct to the customers, carriage paid, if the order is above £2 value; if below, carriage forward. (3) All parcels to be sent c.o.d., unless the cash is remitted with the order. Cash to be collected by the defendants' carrying agents. (4) The defendants give an undertaking that the goods will all be exact to sample, and that nothing will be substituted except by consent of the plaintiff or the customers. By letter of the 7th July, it was agreed that the samples sent, which will be entered up to the plaintiff personally, are to be disposed of when he receives the next lot of samples at the best price possible on behalf of the defendants, commission to be paid to plaintiff on such sales. The samples here referred to are described in a letter of the 9th of March as made-up goods, such as costumes, skirts, and blouses. It will appear from the correspondence that it was contemplated that business should begin at once, and in their letter of the 7th July, the defendants write that they are sending a parcel of their new lists and a box of patterns, and add: "With regard to a full range of samples, we will arrange to have a complete range ready by next mail, and will ship them in travellers' sample skips, made extra strong." Upon receipt of this letter, the plaintiff made preparations to start the agency business, and amongst other things, hired a showroom in Cape Town for £15 per month, which he considered absolutely necessary for the purpose of storing and exhibiting the samples he expected. The lease commenced on the 7th of August, by which time the samples should in the ordinary course have arrived, if despatched at the time promised by the defendants. In the opinion of several witnesses of experience in business at Cape Town the work of the agency could not be carried on without the use of a show-room, and the room in question was a suitable one, procured at a reasonable rent. The expenses incurred by the plaintiff in this respect would, of course, have come out of his commission if the business had gone through. Instead of forwarding the samples as promised the defendants wrote to the plaintiff on July 14, as if no concluded agreement had yet been arrived at, and after repeated remonstrances on the part of the plaintiff the defendants explain the delay in sending the samples by saying, in their letter of the 1st September, "It is only natural that we should wish to make the fullest investigations before engaging an agent to such an important agency as Cape Colony. We may say in passing that we have had most unfortunate ex-

The Welsh coal contracted for was agreed by the parties to be Merthyr coal.

III. Owing to strikes and other causes over which the plaintiffs had no control, and which fell within the exceptions in the aforesaid contract, to wit, congestion of work at and a strike at the Merthyr collieries whence the coal agreed upon was to be supplied, the plaintiffs were unable to despatch the coal in the order of shipment for which they had duly made provision, but they despatched them as regularly as the aforesaid causes permitted.

IV. The plaintiffs despatched for Cape Town and Port Elizabeth sailing ships between the months of February and October, 1902, conveying the quantity of coal agreed on, all of which was accepted by the Cape Government, and the plaintiffs have been paid the price thereof.

V. The said coal for the western system arrived in Table Bay respectively as follows: In May, June, July, August, September, October and December, 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 9,743, 9,110, 7,378, and 2,006 tons respectively, which coal was carried in 18 sailing ships.

VI. It was the duty of the Cape Government, or its servants and agents, the railway authorities, to take delivery of the said coal immediately on arrival at the aforesaid rate agreed upon, but the said Government in breach of its said contract, failed and neglected notwithstanding that the plaintiffs did all they were bound to do on such arrival, to take delivery as aforesaid.

VII. By reason of the premises the Cape Government became liable in demurrage at the aforesaid rate agreed on, and the plaintiffs have rendered an account to the said Government declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of the said 18 sailing ships, and of which the plaintiffs will refer to at the trial for the various items thereof, and the said Government has paid the plaintiffs the demurrage claimed upon 10 of the said sailing ships, but refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., which is the amount claimed and due in respect of the remaining eight sailing ships, and for which the defendant is liable.

VIII. (Struck out in terms of Order of Court, dated 31st July, 1905.)

IX. All things have happened, all conditions have been fulfilled, and all times have elapsed entitling the plaintiffs to payment by the said defendant of the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim:

(a) The sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. with interest on the various items thereof from the time each became due.

(b) Alternative relief.

(c) Costs of suit.

DEFENDANT'S FIRST PLEA AND CLAIM IN RECONVENTION.

I. For a plea the defendant says as follows:

1. He admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 2 he denies that it was agreed by the parties that the Welsh coal contracted for must be Merthyr coal. He says further that the terms of the agreement referred to in the said paragraph are contained in a certain letter addressed by the plaintiffs on the 7th August, 1901, to the Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope, and annexed hereto, and for the greater certainty as to the terms of the agreement he craves leave to refer to the said letter.

3. He denies paragraph 3, and says that the plaintiffs did not duly despatch the coal agreed upon in accordance with the terms of the said agreement.

4. He admits paragraph 4.

5. He admits that the coal referred to in paragraph 5 arrived in Table Bay in 18 sailing ships, and that the quantities arriving in May, June, July, October and December were respectively 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 7,378 and 2,006 tons, but he denies the remaining allegations contained in the said paragraph, and says that the quantity of the said coal which arrived in August was 18,853 tons, and that none of the said coal arrived in September.

6. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal to Cape Town in monthly shipments of quantities of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, 1902, and continuing in consecutive months until and including July, 1902, but they nevertheless failed and neglected, more especially in the months of February, March and April, by shipping deficient quantities, and in May and June, by shipping excessive quantities, duly to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal, and thus committed a breach of the said agreement, and became and are not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder.

7. By reason of the aforesaid breach of agreement by the plaintiffs, the coal despatched by them did not arrive in Table Bay in the quantities and at the time contemplated by the agreement and for which it was the duty of the Government to make provision, and the defendant was in consequence of the plaintiffs' breach of contract prevented from taking delivery of the said coal after its arrival as speedily as it would have been taken if duly despatched in manner contemplated by the said agreement, and he says specially that in consequence of the said breach of contract

Construction of contract of sale— Demurrage.

The plaintiffs, by letter dated from London, offered to supply the defendant with 5,400 tons of coal for Cape Town at a certain price per ton c.i.f. on monthly shipments for six months, and stipulated that the defendant was "to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay at the rate of 120 tons per day, or the defendant to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per nett registered ton per day." The coal was conveyed in ships chartered by the plaintiffs in unequal shipments, so that in the first two months less than 9,000 tons per month, and in the 4th and 5th months more than 9,000 tons were delivered and accepted. Under the charter parties the coal was to be received at the average rate of 120 tons per day, but the lay days were to commence 24 hours after notice of arrival of ship, and the rate of demurrage was to be 3d. per nett registered ton per day.

Held in an action for demurrage for the 4th and 5th months at 4d. per ton per day, that according to the true construction of the contract the defendant was liable only for the rate of demurrage payable by the plaintiffs themselves not exceeding, however, 4d. per ton per day.

Held further, that after accepting the cargoes of the ships which arrived in excessive quantities during the 4th and 5th months, the defendant was not relieved from paying the demurrage for which the plaintiffs were liable in respect of those ships, whatever damages the defendant might claim for failure to deliver the cargo in equal monthly shipments.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Buchanan, sitting as a Divisional Court, in an action brought by the present respondents against appellants to recover £10,788 14s. 4d. for demurrage of certain ships engaged in the carriage of Welsh coal.

The pleadings were as follows:—

PLAINTIFFS' FIRST DECLARATION.

I. The plaintiffs are a duly Incorporated Company carrying on business in Cape Town and elsewhere. The defendant in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as the Minister in charge of the railways of the Colony represents the Government of the Cape Colony hereinafter called the Cape Government.

II. In the month of August, 1901, and in London it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the Agent-General of the Cape of Good Hope duly authorised in that behalf, that the plaintiffs were to supply to the Cape Government 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c. i. f. and 60,000 tons for Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. per ton c. i. f. and on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town in February, 1902, and to Port Elizabeth in October, 1901; that the railway authorities of the Cape Government were to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table and Algoa Bay respectively at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers, and 250 tons per day for steamers, or the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per nett registered ton per day for sailers and 6d. per nett registered ton per day for steamers; that payment was to be made two-thirds in cash by the said Agent-General within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery; that in the event of Great Britain being at war other than with the Transvaal or other causes, including strikes, beyond the plaintiffs' control the plaintiffs' liability to cease. By the said railway authorities the parties intended the railway authorities of the Cape Government whose agents and servants they are, and the liability for demurrage contracted for was and is the liability of the Cape Government.

5. He admits that the coal referred to in paragraph 5 arrived in Table Bay in 18 sailing ships, and that the quantities arriving in May, June, July, October and December were respectively 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 7,378, and 2,006 tons, but he denies the remaining allegations contained in the said paragraph, and says that the quantity of the said coal which arrived in August was 18,853 tons and that none of the said coal arrived in September.

6. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal to Cape Town in monthly shipments of quantities of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, 1902, and continuing in consecutive months until and including July, 1902, but they nevertheless failed and neglected, more especially in the months of February, March and April, by shipping deficient quantities, and in May and June, by shipping excessive quantities, duly to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal, and thus committed a breach of the said agreement, and became and are not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder.

7. By reason of the aforesaid breach of the agreement by the plaintiffs, the coal despatched by them did not arrive in Table Bay in the quantities and at the times contemplated by the agreement and for which it was the duty of the Government to make provision, and the defendant was in consequence of the plaintiffs' breach of contract prevented from taking delivery of the said coal after its arrival as speedily as it would have been taken if duly despatched in manner contemplated by the said agreement, and he says specially that in consequence of the said breach of contract by the plaintiffs, the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase and to take delivery of other coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the coal which the plaintiffs should have duly despatched in the months of February, March and April, all of which was not contemplated by the parties to the said agreement.

7 (a) The ships referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration were all of them ships chartered by the plaintiffs. The rates of discharge and the rates of demurrage stipulated for in the charters were different from those mentioned in the said letter of August 7th, 1901. The liabilities of the Cape Government for demurrage (if any) were to the owners of the said ships respectively and not to the plaintiffs and were for amounts which depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government and not otherwise.

7. (b) If the plaintiffs suffered any loss or damage by the alleged failures of the Cape Government in taking delivery or by detention of the said ships the amount of such loss or damage (if any) was in respect of liabilities of the plaintiffs under the said charterparties and no particulars thereof have been rendered by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government or to the defendant. The payments already made by the Cape Government to the plaintiffs in respect of demurrage of the said ships exceed the whole amount of such loss or damage upon all the shipments.

8. The defendant denies paragraph 7 save in so far as he admits that the plaintiffs have rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain 16 ships, that the Government has paid to the plaintiffs sums amounting to £7,360 0s. 8d. in respect of demurrage, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof.

9. He denies paragraphs 8 and 9 save that particulars of the plaintiffs' claim have been supplied to the Cape Government, and that the said Government refuses to pay the said sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

II. For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:—

1. He craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea.

2. If the plaintiffs (now defendants) be held entitled in terms of the said agreement to claim the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof by way of demurrage or under paragraph 8 of the declaration, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that such sum has become due and payable by reason and in consequence of the default and breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs (now defendants) referred to in the said plea, and such sum represents damages for such default and breach of contract to which the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled.

Wherefore he prays for judgment in reconvention by way of damages for breach of contract for such sum, if any, as this honourable Court may adjudge to the plaintiff (now defendant) upon the claim in convention, together with other relief and costs of suit.

PLAINTIFFS' EXCEPTION, REPLICATION AND PLEA, AND EXCEPTION IN RECONVENTION.

Before replying to the defendant's plea the plaintiffs say that they take exception thereto on the following grounds:

(1) That in paragraph 2 thereof the defendant refers to a material document in defendant's possession on which defendant relies, but the defendant has failed in the said plea either to annex the said document thereto, or to set out the same therein or the material parts thereof.

(2) That in paragraph 6 defendant pleads the construction and interpretation of a certain material document, but has neglected and failed to annex the said document to defendant's plea, and/or to set out the same therein or material parts thereof.

(3) That in paragraph 7 (a) defendant had likewise failed and neglected to annex or set out the said document, being the letter of 7th August, 1901, or the material parts thereof, on the true intent and construction whereof the plaintiffs say it will be for this Honourable Court to decide.

(4) That by reason of the premises the defendant has failed in the said plea to set out defendant's defence with sufficient clearness or particularity and that the said plea is thereby and therein vague, embarrassing, inconsistent and bad in law, and that the plaintiffs are thereby materially prejudiced and delayed in their suit in so much that plaintiffs are thereby prevented from replying, pleading or excepting to the said plea.

Wherefore plaintiffs pray that the defendant's plea be ordered to be amended or struck out accordingly with costs, and that further time be given to plaintiffs to plead, reply or except to the plea, as and when amended: or that this Honourable Court grant such further or other relief as in the premises may seem meet.

And for a replication plaintiffs say that, subject to the above exceptions and saving admissions, plaintiffs deny the allegations in the plea contained and join issue with the defendant thereon.

Before pleading to the claim in reconvention the plaintiffs say that the second paragraph thereof is vague, embarrassing, inconsistent and bad in law, and pray that it may be struck out.

For a plea to the claim in reconvention the plaintiffs say that, saving admissions, they deny the allegations therein contained and join issue with the defendant thereon.

DEFENDANT'S REJOINDER AND REPLICATION IN RECONVENTION.

1. As to the exception taken by the plaintiffs to the plea, the defendant says that the said exception is bad in law and prays that it may be overruled with costs.

2. As to the replication and as to the plaintiffs' exception and plea in reconvention, the defendant says that the said exception in reconvention is bad in law, joins issue with the plaintiffs on the replication and plea in reconvention, and prays that the said exception may be overruled with costs, and otherwise repeats his former prayers.

The judgment of Buchanan, J.:

The plaintiff had for some time before the contract sued upon, supplied the Government with coal delivered at the different ports of the Colony. In some of the former agreements between the parties approximate monthly quantities were stipulated for and delivery was to be made, in some instances into railway trucks, and in others on the quay. The outbreak of war upset the normal conditions of our ports, and especially the state of Table Bay. In July, 1901, plaintiffs cabled from England to the Government here an offer to supply coal for a period of one year or of three years "c.i.f." acceptance on arrival, 120 tons by sailing vessels and 250 tons by steamers daily, monthly aggregate quantities about 10,000 to 20,000 tons to be delivered at the three Colonial ports. The Government intimated to the Agent-General a willingness to accept monthly shipments for six months, whereupon at the request of the Agent-General, the plaintiffs wrote him a letter of the 7th August, 1901, in which they offered to accept a six months' contract on the following detailed terms set forth in the letter: "(1) That we are to supply 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., and 60,000 tons for Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. per ton c.i.f. on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town on February, 1902, and to Port Elizabeth on October, 1901. (2) That the railway authorities are to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay and Algoa Bay respectively, at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers, and 250 tons per day by steamers, or the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers, and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers. (3) Payment to be made two-thirds in cash by you within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery. (4) In the event of this country being at war other than with the Transvaal, or other causes including strikes, beyond our control, our liability to cease." These terms were accepted by the Government, and plaintiffs' letter is annexed to the plea as being the contract between the parties. Before going further, it may be noticed that the case has been complicated by the fact that since this action was brought in this court, the defendants have instituted proceedings in England against the present plaintiffs, having reference to demurrage paid under the present as well as under the previous contracts. The correspondence between the parties refers to both cases and makes it difficult to prevent the admis-

5. He admits that the coal referred to in paragraph 5 arrived in Table Bay in 18 sailing ships, and that the quantities arriving in May, June, July, October and December were respectively 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 7,378, and 2,006 tons, but he denies the remaining allegations contained in the said paragraph, and says that the quantity of the said coal which arrived in August was 18,853 tons and that none of the said coal arrived in September.

6. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal to Cape Town in monthly shipments of quantities of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, 1902, and continuing in consecutive months until and including July, 1902, but they nevertheless failed and neglected, more especially in the months of February, March and April, by shipping deficient quantities, and in May and June, by shipping excessive quantities, duly to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal, and thus committed a breach of the said agreement, and became and are not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder.

7. By reason of the aforesaid breach of the agreement by the plaintiffs, the coal despatched by them did not arrive in Table Bay in the quantities and at the times contemplated by the agreement and for which it was the duty of the Government to make provision, and the defendant was in consequence of the plaintiffs' breach of contract prevented from taking delivery of the said coal after its arrival as speedily as it would have been taken if duly despatched in manner contemplated by the said agreement, and he says specially that in consequence of the said breach of contract by the plaintiffs, the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase and to take delivery of other coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the coal which the plaintiffs should have duly despatched in the months of February, March and April, all of which was not contemplated by the parties to the said agreement.

7 (a) The ships referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration were all of them ships chartered by the plaintiffs. The rates of discharge and the rates of demurrage stipulated for in the charters were different from those mentioned in the said letter of August 7th, 1901. The liabilities of the Cape Government for demurrage (if any) were to the owners of the said ships respectively and not to the plaintiffs and were for amounts which depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government and not otherwise.

7. (b) If the plaintiffs suffered any loss or damage by the alleged failures of the Cape Government in taking delivery or by detention of the said ships the amount of such loss or damage (if any) was in respect of liabilities of the plaintiffs under the said charterparties and no particulars thereof have been rendered by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government or to the defendant. The payments already made by the Cape Government to the plaintiffs in respect of demurrage of the said ships exceed the whole amount of such loss or damage upon all the shipments.

8. The defendant denies paragraph 7 save in so far as he admits that the plaintiffs have rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain 16 ships, that the Government has paid to the plaintiffs sums amounting to £7,360 0s. 8d. in respect of demurrage, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof.

9. He denies paragraphs 8 and 9 save that particulars of the plaintiffs' claim have been supplied to the Cape Government, and that the said Government refuses to pay the said sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

II. For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:—

1. He craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea.

2. If the plaintiffs (now defendants) be held entitled in terms of the said agreement to claim the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof by way of demurrage or under paragraph 8 of the declaration, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that such sum has become due and payable by reason and in consequence of the default and breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs (now defendants) referred to in the said plea, and such sum represents damages for such default and breach of contract to which the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled.

Wherefore he prays for judgment in reconvention by way of damages for breach of contract for such sum, if any, as this honourable Court may adjudge to the plaintiff (now defendant) upon the claim in convention, together with other relief and costs of suit.

PLAINTIFFS' EXCEPTION, REPLICATION AND PLEA, AND EXCEPTION IN RECONVENTION.

Before replying to the defendant's plea the plaintiffs say that they take exception thereto on the following grounds:

(1) That in paragraph 2 thereof the defendant refers to a material document in defendant's possession on which defendant relies, but the defendant has they bear on the issue is that in consequence of the delivery by others to the Government of coal, it is alleged that the defendants had fewer facilities at their disposal to take delivery from the plaintiffs of their coal as it arrived, and, therefore, should not have to pay the demurrage incurred by the slow discharge of the vessels. The plaintiffs' declaration would imply an admission that there had been some delay on their part as they rely on the fourth clause of the contract, and say that, owing to strikes and other causes over which they had no control, they had been unable to despatch the coal in the order of shipment for which they had made provision but had despatched it as regularly as such causes permitted. It does appear that there had been some difficulty at collieries, but the evidence does not show that these difficulties were insuperable, and I understand this part of the declaration is not now relied upon. There would have been more force in this first defence if the defendants had refused to receive the coal altogether and had relied on a breach of contract as founding a claim for damages or as justifying them in securing the quantity at plaintiffs' expense elsewhere. But they accepted each cargo as it came to hand. The witnesses for the defence have spent most of their time in building up hypothetical conjectures of what would have been the result if the ships had been despatched regularly, month by month from February. Taking the tables they have prepared and taking the actual length of passages made of the three vessels they conjecture would have been despatched in February one would have arrived in April and two in May. This, with the statements made in evidence would justify the assumption that the parties expected that May would be the first month in which the coals under the contract might reasonably have been expected to arrive. As a fact, nearly 6,000 tons were delivered in that month, and even with this smaller quantity the vessels could not be discharged within the lay days contracted for. So in June a little over 9,000 tons—the amount expected—could not in the instance of any one of the vessels be discharged without demurrage, and the same in July, and in the same way right on to the last of the cargoes received. These facts go far to show the unreliability of the result arrived at, founded on the theory of what would have happened had the coal been despatched in strict compliance with the letter of the contract, a theory built entirely on suppositions. Much virtue as there may be in an occasional "if," I am not prepared to take the series of "ifs" put forward as of sufficient force to establish as a fact that less demurrage would have been incurred had the vessels been sent off and more coal been delivered at earlier dates. The congested condition of this port was well known to the parties and may account for the stipulation for the delivery of the coal provided for in the way it was by the contract. Indefinite as the contract may be in other respects it is exact in stating the rate at which delivery was to be taken and what demurrage was to be paid for delay beyond the time stipulated for. As to the delivery of the coal the plaintiffs did all they undertook to perform as soon as they had put the coal on board and had despatched the vessels and had handed the necessary papers over to the defendants to entitle them to receive the coal. When the vessels arrived it was for the defendants to take delivery and if they did not do so within the time specified they contracted to pay demurrage. It was not in the power of the plaintiffs either to facilitate or to delay the discharge of the cargoes, that was a matter for the defendants to see to. In their hypothetical returns they show they could not even then have taken the discharge within the lay days, and this no doubt led them, on the 27th May, 1903, to offer to pay in settlement of the claim sued for the sum of £2,232 3s. 4d., calculated upon the basis of what they estimated would happen had the vessels been despatched at earlier dates. But with the condition of the port it is almost impossible to say what could have been done on days other than those on which the vessels arrived. The tender of the £2,232 3s. 4d. has not been pleaded, but the fact that it was made has not unnaturally been relied upon by the plaintiffs as an admission by the Government of liability for some demurrage at least. And another fallacy in the estimate is shown by the fact that even in the cases of the vessels upon which the Government had paid demurrage the amount ascertained by the actual working is greatly in excess of what by the hypothetical estimates would have been incurred. It is not clear to me why payment should be resisted of the amount actually incurred in respect of at least an approximate 9,000 tons per month. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the facts set forth do not discharge the defendants from liability for demurrage on the eight vessels sued for. I have some difficulty, however, in determining the actual amount for which judgment should be given. In their letter of June 3, 1903, the plaintiffs assume for the sake of argument, although they say the contract does not admit of such construction that if the Government only had to take delivery of about 9,000 tons per month as there were only three ships with approximately this amount arriving in July, and during August six vessels arriving, they offered not to claim any demurrage for three of these vessels, which arrived in sion of letters which refer to matters other than the present dispute. This subsequent action cannot be held to bar these proceedings, but it renders it all the more necessary to confine the decision of this case strictly to the issues raised on the pleadings. Without going into details on the various points raised in argument for the purposes of this case, I take it as proved that the letter of the 7th August, 1901, is the contract which bound the parties. The plaintiffs shipped the coal contracted for but not within the six months mentioned in the letter. This coal was sent out in eighteen sailing vessels. The time taken by most of these sailing vessels varied from nine to ten weeks, or thereabouts, though one vessel which arrived during the month of August made an exceptionally fast voyage of 52 days. The statement made by one of the defendant's witnesses shows that the Government expected the first of the shipments for Table Bay to arrive about May. The amount of coal received under this contract, the plea admits to have been as follows: May 5,992 tons, June 9,883 tons, July 9,787 tons, August 18,853 tons, October 7,378 tons, and December 2,006 tons. As a matter of fact the plaintiffs despatched only one vessel in February, carrying a little over 3,000 tons of coal, which vessel arrived in April; but a second vessel, which arrived in May with nearly 3,000 tons seems to have been taken together as making up the quantity of coal stated as having been delivered in May. It will be noticed that the contract is indefinite about the amount to be shipped monthly, but from the correspondence, it seems to me fair to assume that the parties understood it was to approximate 9,000 tons per month for the six months. Considerable discussion has taken place whether, under the contract, the coal should be shipped each month, or should arrive each month in quantities of about 9,000 tons, the latter view being assumed in a number of letters which passed between the parties. But Mr. Schreiner, for the defendants, laid little stress on either contention, the object of the Government being to secure a regular monthly supply. The quantity of coal which the plaintiffs contracted to supply proved clearly insufficient to meet the needs of the railway service and before any coal at all arrived by any of the plaintiff's vessels, the Government in April began to order a large additional quantity. In May they gave further orders and also purchased locally. They also purchased locally some 4,550 tons in June and 2,835 in September. These purchases and orders altogether amounted to about 33,000 tons. Some of the orders given in April and those in May, together with the local purchases in May and June, amounting in all to about 18,000 tons, the Government now assign as being coal acquired to supplement shortage caused through the delay in shipments under plaintiff's contract. The rest of the coal was to meet the additional requirements of the railway. This supply was secured at a lower price than the rate fixed in the contract with plaintiffs. The bills of lading of all the coal shipped by the plaintiffs were handed to defendants who took delivery of the coal from the vessels and duly paid for it. With the exception of the first arrival none of the other vessels despatched by plaintiffs were discharged after arrival within contract time and demurrage was claimed in respect of each ship. Eight vessels had sailed from England between the 31st May and the 25th June, three arriving in July and five in August. On these vessels the Government refused to pay demurrage. Another vessel, which had arrived in August, foundered when entering Table Bay, and the quantity of coal which she had on board was made up by an arrival in December. The Government paid to the plaintiffs the demurrage claimed on all the vessels which arrived before as well as after the eight just mentioned, amounting to the sum of £7,360. The claim of the plaintiffs for demurrage in respect of the eight vessels was resisted by the Government, and the plaintiffs in this action now seek to recover the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. in respect thereof. The plea contains averments which may be grouped under two separate defences and these averments also form the basis of a claim in reconvention for damages for breach of contract. The first line of defence may be summarised as follows: The defendants allege that according to the true and proper interpretation of the contract, the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder, as it was their duty to despatch the 54,000 tons of coal stipulated for in monthly shipments of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February and continuing in successive months until and including July; but in breach of their agreement they shipped deficient quantities in February, March, and April, and shipped excessive quantities in May and June whereby the defendants were prevented from taking delivery of the coal after its arrival as speedily as they would have taken it if it had been despatched in the manner contemplated by the agreement. There is a further allegation in this part of the plea that in consequence of the breach the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase, and to take delivery of coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the shipments in February, March, and April. As a price below contract rate was paid for this coal, no specific damage is claimed in respect of such purchases. The only way in which tract as set forth in the plea. It is noticeable that no special damages are laid, and the claim has been explained to me that if it is held that the plaintiffs are entitled to the demurrage set forth in the contract then their delay in despatching vessels in good time has resulted in loss to the Government in any sum which may be awarded to plaintiffs in so far as it exceeds the £2,232 5s. 4d. which only under the hypothetical returns would have become payable. This in effect, would be holding that the Government tender which has not been pleaded was a sufficient one which for the reasons stated I am not able to find. It is difficult to follow the argument but this claim in reconvention affords the opportunity of awarding as damages, say, £1,200, which I have estimated would be a fair amount to deduct from the demurrage on account of the 1,800 tons of coal arriving in August instead of 9,000 tons in August and September respectively. The result is that there will be judgment for the plaintiff for the sum claimed, less £1,200, or for £9,588 14s. 4d., and costs with interest at six per cent. a tempore morae. I think the date of default should be fixed as the 3rd June, 1903, when the final account was sent in and formal demand made for payment.

Postea.—Leave having been granted to amend the pleadings in view of appeal, the following amendments were made:

PLAINTIFFS' EXCEPTION, REPLICATION AND PLEA IN RECONVENTION.

Before replying to defendant's plea, plaintiffs' except thereto:

1. As to paragraph 7 (a) in that according to the true intent and construction of the annexed letter the Cape Government contracted liability direct with the plaintiffs and not with the owners of the said ships with whom he said Government had no privity of contract.

2. As to paragraph 7 (b) in that by the terms of the said letter the said Government undertook to pay demurrage at a specific rate on failure to take delivery at the agreed rates of discharge or as damages for detention of the said ships without any reference soever to the liabilities (if any) plaintiffs have or may be under in respect of the said charterparties.

3. By reason whereof the said paragraphs are irrelevant, embarrassing and bad in law.

Wherefore plaintiffs pray that the said paragraphs may be ordered to be struck out of the said plea with costs.

Subject to the above exception and for a replication, plaintiffs say that subject to the above exceptions and saving admissions plaintiffs deny the allegations in the plea contained and join issue with the defendant thereon.

Before pleading to the claim in reconvention the plaintiffs say that the second paragraph is vague, embarrassing, inconsistent and bad in law, and pray that it may be struck out.

For a plea to the claim in reconvention the plaintiffs say that, saving admissions, they deny the allegations therein contained and join issue with the defendant thereon.

The exception to par. 7 (a) allowed with costs, with leave to plaintiffs to amend their declaration by striking out the alternative claim in par. 8. Leave to defendant to amend his plea.

PLAINTIFF'S SECOND DECLARATION.

1. The plaintiffs are a duly incorporated company carrying on business in Cape Town and elsewhere. The defendant, in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as the Minister in charge of the Railways of the Colony, represents the Government of the Cape Colony hereinafter called the Cape Government.

2. In the month of August, 1901, and in London it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the Agent-General of the Cape of Good Hope duly authorised in that behalf, that the plaintiffs were to supply to the Cape Government 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f. and 60,000 tons for Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., and on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town in February, 1902, and to Port Elizabeth in October, 1901; that the railway authorities of the Cape Government were to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table and Algoa Bay respectively at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers, and 250 tons per day for steamers, or the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers; that payment was to be made two-thirds in cash by the said Agent-General within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery; that in the event of Great Britain being at war other than with the Transvaal or other causes, including strikes, beyond the plaintiffs' control the plaintiffs' liability to cease. By the said railway authorities the parties intended the railway authorities of the Cape Government, whose agents and servants they are, and the liability for demurrage contracted for was and is the liability of the Cape Government. The Welsh coal contracted for was agreed by the parties to be Merthyr coal.

3. Owing to strikes and other causes over which the plaintiffs had no control and which fell within the exceptions in August, until the 1st September, and consequently to reduce their claim by £309 3s. 8d. This offer was at first made without prejudice. They later, on September 7, repeated the offer without reservation. As the offer was not accepted the plaintiffs have reverted to their original position. But this offer may well be relied upon by the defendants as an admission that there was an excessive shipment of cargoes arriving in August, and that with the overcrowded state of the port the defendants are entitled to some consideration on that account. The averments of the declaration which was not proved may here also be brought in to aid the defendants. It is difficult to make any deduction from plaintiffs' claim for this over-despatch of vessels on strictly legal grounds, but it appears to me it would only be equitable to make some allowance for the double amount of coal which arrived in this one month. The plaintiffs' offer was based on a calculation allowing seven days, three days, and two days respectively on the three ships, which would place them in the position as if they had all three arrived on the 1st September. Sitting as a juror I do not consider the amount offered a sufficient reduction. If any reduction at all is to be made I think an allowance of about fifteen days on each vessel would be reasonable. This would come as I work it out to about £1,200. Probably, the more correct procedure and the one I shall adopt would be when we come to the claim in reconvention to allow this sum as damages for breach of contract. But, at any rate, in my opinion, this first defence does not bar the plaintiffs from recovering any demurrage in this action. I find I have omitted to notice the arguments founded on the difficulties caused by the discharge of coal from the other vessels. I do not think the plaintiffs should be held liable for any losses caused thereby. The purchase of a very large quantity of this coal cannot possibly be attributed to any default on the part of the plaintiffs, and moreover the Government would not be entitled to give preference to their own vessels when any arriving from the plaintiffs were awaiting discharge. The second defence pleaded is that no demurrage is payable to the plaintiffs because a new contract was entered into. The plea says that in order to carry out their contract, the plaintiffs chartered vessels at a rate of demurrage less than the contract provided for; that when these vessels are loaded the plaintiffs transferred to the Government the bills of lading, some of which expressly incorporated the conditions of the vessel charter parties, and that by this procedure new contracts were entered into between the plaintiffs, the defendants and the owners of the respective vessels, whereby it was agreed that the contracts for the carriage of the coal should be between the defendants and the shipowners, and that demurrage should be construed and determined in accordance with the terms of such bills of lading and charter parties, and not otherwise, and that the Government became liable to the shipowners and not otherwise, and the plea goes on to say that the plaintiffs have been paid by the Government in respect of the liability of the Government to the shipowners, a sum as large or larger than that represented by the said bills of lading and charter parties. No reason is given why, if there was no liability to the plaintiffs the Government should have paid what they owed the shipowners to the plaintiffs. This plea is also somewhat inconsistent with the first defence, for if new contracts for the payment of demurrage were entered into with the shipowners such contracts could not be affected by any delay on the part of the plaintiffs in despatching the vessels. And it is common cause that all these vessels earned demurrage. The plea, if it means anything, amounts to a defence of novation by which the obligations under the contract have been extinguished by new obligations, not only to the plaintiffs but to third persons. It is the foundation of a novation that it must be intended by both parties that a new contract is to be substituted for the old, and the evidence must clearly establish such a new contract. Here there were no negotiations or proposals made to cancel the old and enter into new contract nor is there anything to show the assent of the plaintiffs to such a course being requested or granted. The transference of the shipping documents were necessary to enable the Government to obtain delivery of the coal and was made for that purpose, not to create a new contract. It is moreover inconsistent with a novation that the Government should have paid the plaintiffs demurrage on some of the vessels at the rate fixed in the old contract. It was argued that at all events the Government should not pay more for demurrage than was stipulated for on the charter parties though at the same time it was contended that had the charter parties been at a higher rate the liability of the Government would then have been limited to the sum mentioned in the original contract. All this is inconsistent with the idea of a novation. This second defence does not require further consideration. In reconvention the defendants claim that should these pleas fail and the plaintiff held to be entitled to claim in terms of the original agreement the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof, then that an equal sum has become due and payable to the Government as damages for the default of the plaintiffs and their breach of con-

the plaintiffs should have duly despatched in the months of February, March, and April, all of which was not contemplated by the parties to the said agreement.

8. The defendant denies paragraph 7 save in so far as he admits that the plaintiffs have rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain eight ships, that the Government has voluntarily paid to the plaintiffs certain sums by way of demurrage in respect of the other ships, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof claimed for demurrage.

9. He denies paragraphs 8 and 9 save that particulars of the plaintiffs' claim have been supplied to the Cape Government and that the said Government refuses to pay the said sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

II. For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:

1. He craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea.

2. If the plaintiffs (now defendants) be held entitled in terms of the said agreement to claim the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof by way of demurrage or under paragraph 8 of the declaration, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that such sum has become due and payable by reason and in consequence of the default and breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs (now defendants) referred to in the said plea, and such sum represents damages for such default and breach of contract to which the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled.

Wherefore he prays for judgment in reconvention by way of damages for breach of contract for such sum, if any, as this Honourable Court may adjudge to the plaintiff (now defendant) upon the claim in convention, together with other relief and costs of suit.

The replication and plea in reconvention were general.

DEFENDANT'S RE-AMENDED PLEA AND CLAIM IN RECONVENTION.

I. For a plea the defendant says as follows:

1. He admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 2 he denies that it was agreed by the parties that the Welsh coal contracted for must be Merthyr coal. He says further that the terms of the agreement referred to in the said paragraph are contained in a certain letter addressed by the plaintiffs on the 7th August, 1901, to the Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope and annexed hereto. For the greater certainty as to the terms of the said agreement he craves leave to refer to the said letter.

3. He denies paragraph 3 and says that the plaintiffs did not duly despatch the coal agreed upon in accordance with the terms of the said agreement.

4. He admits paragraph 4.

5. He admits that the coal referred to in paragraph 5 arrived in Table Bay in 18 sailing ships, and that the quantities arriving in May, June, July, October and December were respectively 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 7,378 and 2,006 tons, but he denies the remaining allegations contained in the said paragraph, and says that the quantity of the said coal which arrived in August was 18,853 tons and that none of the said coal arrived in September.

6. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal to Cape Town in monthly shipments of quantities of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, 1902, and containing in consecutive months until and including July, 1902, but they nevertheless failed and neglected, more especially in the months of February, March and April, by shipping deficient quantities, and in May and June, by shipping excessive quantities, daily to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal, and thus committed a breach of the said agreement, and became and are not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder.

7. By reason of the aforesaid breach of agreement by the plaintiffs, the coal despatched by them did not arrive in Table Bay in the quantities and at the times contemplated by the agreement and for which it was the duty of the Government to make provision, and the defendant was in consequence of the plaintiffs' breach of contract prevented from taking delivery of the said coal after its arrival as speedily as it would have been taken if duly despatched in manner contemplated by the said agreement, and he says specially that in consequence of the said breach of contract by the plaintiffs, the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase and to take delivery of other coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the coal which the plaintiffs should have duly despatched in the months of February, March and April, all of which was not contemplated by the parties to the said agreement.

7. (a) The ships referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration were all of them ships chartered by the plaintiffs. The rates of discharge and the rates of demurrage stipulated for in the charters were different from those mentioned in the said letter of August 7th, 1901. The liabilities of the Cape Government for demurrage (if any) were to the owners of the said ships respectively and not to the plaintiffs and were for amounts which depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government and not otherwise.

7. (b) If the plaintiffs suffered any loss or damage by the alleged failures of the Cape Government in taking delivery or by the detention of the said ships the amount of such loss or damage (if any) was in respect of liabilities of the plaintiffs under the said charter parties and no particulars thereof have been rendered by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government or to the defendant. The payments already made by the Cape Government to the plaintiffs in respect of demurrage of the said ships exceed the whole amount of such loss or damage upon all the shipments.

8. The defendant denies paragraph 7 save in so far as he admits that the plaintiffs have rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain 16 ships, that the Government has paid to the plaintiffs sums amounting to £7,360 0s. 8d. in respect of demurrage, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof.

9. He denies paragraphs 8 and 9 save that particulars of the plaintiffs' claim have been supplied to the Cape Government and that the said Government refuses to pay the said sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

II. For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:—

1. He craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea.

2. If the plaintiffs (now defendants) be held entitled in terms of the said agreement to claim the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof by way of demurrage or under paragraph 8 of the declaration, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that such sum has become due and payable by reason and in consequence of the default and breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs (now defendants) referred to in the said plea, and such sum represents damages for such default and breach of contract to which the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled.

Wherefore he prays for judgment in reconvention by way of damages for breach of contract for such sum, if any, as this Honourable Court may adjudge to the plaintiff (now defendant) upon the claim in convention, together with other relief and costs of suit.

DEFENDANT'S FINAL PLEA AND CLAIM IN RECONVENTION.

I. For a plea the defendant says as follows:—

1. He admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 2 he denies that it was agreed by the parties that the Welsh coal contracted for must be Merthyr coal. He states further that the terms of the agreement referred to in the said paragraph are contained in a certain letter addressed by the plaintiffs on the 7th August, 1901, to the Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope, and for the greater certainty as to the terms of the agreement he craves leave to refer to the said letter when produced at the trial of this cause.

3. He denies paragraph 3 and says that the plaintiffs did not duly despatch the coal agreed upon in accordance with the terms of the said agreement.

4. He admits paragraph 4.

5. He admits that the coal referred to in paragraph 5 arrived in Table Bay in 18 sailing ships, and that the quantities arriving in May, June, July, October and December were respectively 5,992, 9,833, 9,787, 7,378 and 2,006 tons, but he denies the remaining allegations contained in the said paragraph, and says that the quantity of the said coal which arrived in August was 18,853 tons and and become and are not entitled to September.

6. It was the duty of the plaintiffs in terms of and according to the true and proper interpretation of the agreement referred to in paragraph 2 to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal to Cape Town in monthly shipments of quantities of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, 1902, and continuing in consecutive months until and including July, 1902, but they nevertheless failed and neglected, more especially in the months of February, March and April, by shipping deficient quantities, and in May and June, by shipping excessive quantities, duly to despatch the said 54,000 tons of coal, and thus committed a breach of the said agreement, and became and are not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder.

7. By reason of the aforesaid breach of agreement by the plaintiffs, the coal despatched by them did not arrive in Table Bay in the quantities and at the time contemplated by the agreement and for which it was the duty of the Government to make provision, and the defendant was in consequence of the plaintiffs' breach of contract prevented from taking delivery of the said coal after its arrival as speedily as it would have been taken if duly despatched in manner contemplated by the said agreement, and he says specially that in consequence of the said breach of contract by the plaintiffs, the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase and to take delivery of other coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the coal which the plaintiffs should have duly despatched in the months of February, March, and April, all of which was not contemplated.

plated by the parties to the said agreement.

7. (a) The plaintiffs in order to supply coal sold by them to the Government chartered certain vessels and in the charterparties entered into by them the rates of demurrage were different from and less than those mentioned in the said letter of August 7th, 1901; the defendant craves leave to refer to the terms of the said charterparties when produced at the trial.

7. (b) Thereafter the plaintiffs from time to time loaded the said ships with the coal sold by them to the Government and transferred the bills of lading for the coal to the defendant and new contracts subsequent to that of August 7th, 1901, were thereupon entered into as between plaintiffs, defendant and the owners of the respective vessels whereunder it was agreed that the contracts for the carriage of the coal should be between defendant and the said ship-owners, and that all incidents arising thereout such as demurrage and the like should be construed and determined in accordance with the terms of the bills of lading transferred as aforesaid and the charterparties, and not otherwise; and the Government became liable to the shipowner direct for demurrage due thereunder, and not otherwise; in the case of certain of the vessels concerned to wit the "Mackrihanish," "Prince Robert" and "Ballaculish," the bills of lading expressly incorporated the conditions of the charterparties; the defendant annexes hereto copies of the said bills of lading.

7. (c) The liabilities of defendant for demurrage (if any) from and after the respective dates of the transfer of the said bills of lading, became and were liabilities to the owners of the respective vessels and not liabilities to the plaintiffs, and such liabilities depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by plaintiffs to defendant, and upon the terms of the said charterparties.

7. (d) The defendant has already paid to the plaintiffs, in respect of his liability to the aforesaid shipowners, a sum as large or larger than than represented by the rates of demurrage specified in the bills of lading and the charterparties, for the days during which the said vessels were detained.

8. The defendant denies paragraphs 7 and 9 save in so far as he admits that the plaintiffs have rendered to the Government an account declaring their claim for demurrage in respect of certain 16 ships, that the Government has paid to the plaintiffs sums amounting to £7,360 Os. 8d. in respect of demurrage, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. or any part thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

II. For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:—

1. He craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the foregoing plea.

2. If the plaintiffs (now defendants) be held entitled in terms of the said agreement to claim the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that such sum has become due and payable by reason and in consequence of the default and breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs (now defendants) referred to in the said plea, and such sum represents damages for such default and breach of contract to which the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled.

Wherefore he prays for judgment in reconvention by way of damages for breach of contract for such sum, if any, as this Honourable Court may adjudge to the plaintiff (now defendant) upon the claim in convention, together with other relief and costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C., and Mr. Burton, was for the plaintiff; Sir Henry Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close and Mr. Struben) was for the respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the matter very largely depended upon the construction which the Court would place upon a letter (page 16 of the record) addressed by the plaintiffs to the Agent-General, in London, of the Cape of Good Hope, under date August 7, 1901, in the following terms: "We have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 2nd inst., enclosing us copy of cable received by you from the Hon. the Commissioner of Public Works, in which our terms and prices as cabled out by you for the supply of coal has been accepted. You ask us for a copy of a tender, evidently under a misapprehension, as the only offer we made was the cable just referred to, and although that was for a 12 months' supply at the rate named, we are willing to accept in our turn the six months' supply on the following detailed terms: (1) That we are to supply 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., and 60,000 tons for Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. per ton c.i.f. on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town on February, 1902, and to Port Elizabeth on October, 1901; (2) that the railway authorities are to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay and Algoa Bay respectively, at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers, and 250 tons per day by steamers, or by the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers; (3) payment to be made two-thirds in cash by you within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery; (4) in the event of this country being at war other than with the Transvaal, or other causes, including strikes, beyond our control, our liability to cease."

The Divisional Court gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, less £1,200 awarded to defendants for plaintiffs' breach of contract, and costs, with interest, at 6 per cent., a tempore morae.

The essence of the contract was that Houlder Brothers should make due shipment. Five out of eight ships did not do so. The Government took the coal on the understanding that there had been due shipment, and if there had not been the Government was not liable for demurrage, even if they accepted the coal. Fourpence per ton was a maximum charge for demurrage. Houlder Brothers may never have had to pay anything for demurrage, then how can they claim from the Government. As to the meaning of demurrage, see Carver's Carriage by Sea, McLachlan on Shipping, and Benjamin on Sales (p. 574). We are liable only for the demurrage actually paid by Houlder Brothers. The letter as to lay days (p. 203 of the record) is immaterial.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the term "demurrage" ever used save as between owner and shipper?]

I cannot find a case in which a third person has been held liable for demurrage. Demurrage may have a strict meaning, as stipulated for in bills of lading, or a looser meaning as damages for detention. We contend for the stricter sense.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose that there were no Charter party, and nothing was said about demurrage in the bills of lading, what then about demurrage?]

In such case there would be no demurrage.

[Hopley J.: I always thought that if the bills of lading were silent as to demurrage it would be estimated on an equitable basis.]

No, I submit not. One must construe a Charter party very strictly.

See The Marga (20 S.C.R., 485). The Government must pay to Houlder Brothers whatever they had to pay for demurrage, but no more. "Liable for demurrage" and "will pay demurrage" are two different things. Had they shipped the coal in their own vessels, and we had agreed to pay demurrage, that would have been a very different question. Mr. Fuller's letter of May 27th, 1903, contains no tender. As to demurrage, see the accounts relating to the various vessels, which is compiled from the Charter parties.

[Counsel proceeded to argue further on the facts, and on the correspondence which had passed between the parties.]

Sir H. Juta cited Carver on Carriage

by Sea (p. 689), and continued: No objection was ever taken by the Government to our interpretation of the contract. In the case of all other ships they paid in accordance with this interpretation (see evidence of Sinclair in cross-examination). As to the pleadings, see their original plea (section 7). Then they amended their plea, and we accepted to paragraphs 7a and 7b. The judge below upheld the exception (15 C.T.R., 320). The defendants again amended their plea and relied on a new contract. That is defendants' last plea, and there we have nothing about the old contract of August 7th. It has been said that we should have called for accounts, but their plea says nothing about accounts (see par. 6). As to bills of lading, see paragraphs 7c and 7d. The defence has nothing to do with accounts. The contract is perfectly clear, the phrase "shall be liable for demurrage" is perfectly clear, and "at fourpence" is also perfectly clear. It is a common term, and "at" never means "not exceeding." The Government never stipulated anything as to demurrage, and the first reference to it occurs in the letter of August 7th. Notice must always be given to the consignee that the ship is ready to discharge, so nothing hangs of the letter of July 31st, 1902. We may have made a profit on the fourpence per ton, but we might have made a loss.

[Hopley, J.: Possibly, having a good coal contract on, you were willing to take a risk in order to keep it.]

There is no evidence as to that. Then does the contract mean that we were to ship certain quantities, or that we were bound to deliver 9,000 tons a month? See Agent-General's call for tenders of June 13th, 1901, our cable of July 6th, 1901, and the acceptance of our tender, August 1st. The first mention of shipments monthly comes from the Government. The Government evidently wanted coal in Cape Town. They did not care about despatch. They wanted regular delivery, or they might have had an impracticable quantity thrown on their hands at one time and none at another. See Sinclair's evidence (16 C.T.R., 104). In answer to our letter of May 6th, 1902, promising to despatch 20,000 tons in May, the Government does not object to receive that quantity, and does not allege breach of contract. The General Manager, in his letter of June 4th, 1902, does not complain of tardy shipments, but of delivery. So also in the letter of July 16th, 1902.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You do not appeal on the question of damages. You admit £1,200 to be sufficient.]

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that they would like to hear counsel on the question of whether £1,200 was a sufficient measure of damages to allow the defendants.

Sir H. Juta said that the Government having accepted coal shipped by the plaintiffs, they could not have treated this non-shipping or non-delivery as a breach. At any rate, not a breach going to the essence of the contract. All that one could say in regard to the damage was that it must be something which the Government had sustained by reason of the ships not being berthed, as they might have been berthed had they arrive in some way or other. But this was all hypothetical. The only damage that they could say they had sustained was that the ships, had they arrived in some other way than they did arrive, might have been berthed somewhat sooner. From the very outset the Government failed to berth these ships on their arrival, and ships carrying coal under other contracts were given berths in preference. The damages awarded by the learned Judge to the Government arose out of the fact that certain of the vessels made an exceptionally quick passage, and arrived unusually early.

Mr. Schreiner in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 27th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal against a judgment of a Divisional Court, awarding to the plaintiffs the sum of £9,588 14s. 4d. as and for demurrage due by the defendant, as Commissioner for Public Works, in respect of eight sailing vessels chartered by the plaintiffs to carry coal to Table Bay for the Colonial Government. The contract, out of which the claim arises, was contained in a letter, dated the 7th of August, 1901, and addressed by the plaintiffs to the Agent-General in London. The material portions of the letter are as follows: "That we are to supply 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f. . . . on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town on February, 1902. That the railway authorities are to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay . . . at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers and 250 tons by steamers, or the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers. Payment to be made two-thirds in cash by you within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery." It would appear that it was the practice of the plaintiffs, in carrying out the contract, to charter ships for the conveyance of the coal and to transfer the bills of lading to the defendant. It would further appear that in many cases the rates of demurrage fixed by the charter party were less than the rate of demurrage agreed upon in the contract, and one of the questions raised in this case is whether, by reason of the transfer of bills of lading, which embody the conditions of the charter parties, new contracts were made superseding the demurrage payable under the contract. The learned Judge in the Court below held that there was no novation of the original contract, and in this view I fully agree with him. But according to the statements of counsel on appeal another and more important question was raised before him upon which he has expressed no opinion in the reasons supplied by him. That question is whether under the contract itself the plaintiffs are entitled to charge the defendant with a higher rate of demurrage than the rate for which they were liable to the shipowners. Probably the reason why the learned Judge was silent on the question is because it is not specifically raised in the pleadings but if, according to the true construction of the contract, the only demurrage owing by the defendant is that which became payable to the shipowners, it is impossible for this Court to avoid an expression of opinion upon the question. The plaintiffs' claim is based upon the contract and, before the Court can decide upon the claim, it must definitely decide upon the meaning of the contract. It was a contract, not between a shipowner and charterer or consignee, but between vendor and purchaser. It stipulated that the defendant should "be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers," and if the other party to the contract had been the shipowner the liability for demurrage would clearly have been incurred towards such shipowner. But the contract is for the supply of coal to the defendant, and it would be a most unnatural use of the word "demurrage" to apply it to the damages payable by the purchaser of the coal for his delay in accepting delivery thereof. The more reasonable construction of the contract would, in my opinion, be to confine the defendant's liability for demurrage to the amounts payable by the plaintiffs themselves not exceeding 4d. per net registered ton. The price fixed in the contract was to cover cost, insurance and freight and, whatever rate of liability the plaintiffs might incur for demurrage, the defendant was not to be liable for more than 4d. per ton per day. I am bound to say that this question was never distinctly raised between the parties in the course of the long correspondence which has been put in, but this may have been due to the defendant not being aware of the fact that the plaintiffs were themselves liable for a lower rate of demurrage than that which they charged against the defendant. It is worthy of remark that the defendant did not admit the contention of the plaintiffs that the lay days should commence from the date of the arrival of the ships as stipulated by the contract of August 7, 1901. According to the charter parties entered into by the plaintiffs with the shipowners the lay days were to commence twenty-four hours, and in one case forty-eight hours, after notice of arrival. On the 30th of September, 1902, the plaintiffs wrote to the Agent-General: "It appears to us the railway wants all the benefits of a contract, but decline to implement same when the terms operate to their disadvantage." On the 25th of November, 1902, the plaintiffs wrote: "Whilst our contract stipulates for days to commence immediately on arrival, on which we base our claim, you wish to, or it may be the G.M.R. wishes to advantage himself of more favourable terms between ourselves and the owners by charter party. It might have been the other way about, and I venture to suggest it only needs you to point this out to make matters pleasant." The writer, however, added a postscript as follows: "I find we, in making our claim, have allowed them twenty-four hours, not adhering to the strict wording as above." In his answer of 28th November the Agent-General insists upon the defendant's right to a notice of the vessel's readiness to discharge, but he adds: "I don't think the charter party is involved in the matter, and quite admit (as far as I am individually concerned) that this document is a separate agreement between you and the ship." This expression of the Agent-General's individual opinion cannot of course affect the true construction of the contract. On the 2nd of December the plaintiffs wrote: "You will see we do not adhere to the strict reading of our agreement with you, to commence immediately on arrival. Our object in making it a condition of our contract that days should commence on arrival was the knowledge we had which was universal of the difficulty of getting into dock and, in addition, at times the captain being unable to get ashore to give notice." The object of the stipulation was to protect the plaintiffs fully against any liability which they might incur to the shipowner, and so long as they were thus protected they did not seek to take advantage of what they considered their right under the contract. But the object of fixing the higher rate of demurrage also was to secure themselves in case the rates of demurrage payable in Table Bay should be raised. In their correspondence in regard to demurrage payable under previous contracts with the Government, they had taken great credit for charging only the rate of demurrage which they had "themselves paid, but the terms of those contracts were different from the terms of the contract now in question. It is admitted that in regard to the eight ships now in question, the plaintiffs have incurring a liability at the rate of 3d. per ton per day, and not at the rate of 4d., as limited in the contract. I am of opinion that an account should be taken of the amounts for which the plaintiffs have rendered themselves liable to the shipowners under the charter parties, and that, if the defendant is not relieved from liability on other grounds, judgment should be given for the amount not exceeding, however, the limit fixed in the contract of August 7, 1901.

It has been contended, however, on behalf of the defendant that, as there has been a failure on the part of the plaintiffs to deliver the coal in equal monthly shipments, he is relieved from the obligation to pay demurrage. The total quantity of coal contracted for was sent by eighteen sailing ships, the first of which arrived in Table Bay in April, 1902, and the last in December, 1902. During the month of April, 1902, only 3,000 tons were received, during May about 3,000, during June 9,833, during July 9,787, during August 18,853, during October 7,378, and during December 2,006 tons. The defendant paid demurrage in respect of the ships which arrived during April, May, June, October and December, but objected to paying demurrage on the eight ships which arrived during July and August, on the ground, as I understand his case, that an excessive quantity arrived during the two latter months, thus contributing to the delay in the discharge of the coal from these ships. But the short deliveries had been accepted by the Government in April and May with the knowledge that if the full 54,000 tons were to be delivered in six months there must of necessity be a delivery of more than 9,000 during some of the subsequent months. Moreover, the coal which arrived by the eight vessels in July and August, 1902, was accepted by the Government without a protest, on this side at all events, against such excessive delivery. It is true that in his communications with the plaintiffs in England the Agent-General drew attention to the fact that if the ships arrive too closely one upon the other there was grave danger of considerable demurrage being payable. On the 16th of July, 1902, the General Manager of Railways here wrote to the Agent-General, saying that "the question will naturally arise as to whether the contractors shall not be called upon to make good all such expenses incurred." On the 11th of August the Agent-General wrote to the plaintiffs as follows: "I now send you copy of a letter from the General Manager, who therein points out that your shipment of no less than 23,619 tons of coal between the 31st day of May and 14th June will probably entail the payment of a considerable sum for demurrage, which would have been avoided had you shipped the monthly quantities provided for in the contract, for which you must, in consequence, be prepared to be held liable." Notwithstanding these letters, the coal was accepted here, and the utmost that can be said is that the Government reserved to itself the right to claim damages from the plaintiffs for their failure to send the coal in equal monthly shipments. That is a different thing, however, from claiming to be relieved from the payment of demurrage altogether during the two months when coal was delivered and accepted in excessive quantities. I am clearly of opinion that to the extent to which the plaintiffs have become liable for demurrage in respect of the eight ships now in question they are entitled to recover the amount from the defendant.

The defendant, recognising that he might fail in being relieved from the payment of demurrage on the grounds just stated, filed a claim in reconvention for the amount of the plaintiffs' claim as damages for their breach of contract. Upon this claim in reconvention the Court below has awarded the sum of £1,200 as damages, to be deducted from the amount awarded to the plaintiffs, on account of the 18,000 tons of coal arriving in August instead of 9,000 tons in August and September respectively. The plaintiffs have not appealed against this part of the judgment, but the defendant objects to the amount of damages as being insufficient. Without going into details, I may say generally that the award does not appear to me to err on the side of insufficiency. The evidence does not satisfy me that if 9,000 tons had arrived in July and the same quantity in August, the liability for demurrage of the plaintiffs, and consequently of the defendant, would have been reduced by more than £1,200 and the defendant's appeal against the judgment on the claim in reconvention must fail. The result is that the Court will amend the judgment by directing an account to be taken of the liability for demurrage incurred by the plaintiffs under the charter parties in respect of the eight ships in question, not exceeding in any case the sum of 4d. per net registered ton per diem, and giving judgment for the amount thus found, less the sum of £1,200. The effect of the amendment will be to effect a considerable reduction in the amount awarded to the plaintiffs, and they will, therefore, bear the costs of appeal.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BURCHELL V ESTATE { 1906.
BURCHELL. { Nov. 6th.

Mr. Burton mentioned the case of Burchell v. Estate Burchell, which is set down for hearing to-morrow (Wednesday). He said it was quite clear that the case could not be heard. An action had been brought against the executors of the estate Burchell to set aside the will under which the executors had been administering the estate for about ten or eleven years. The defendants had been barred from pleading and an application had been standing in the roll for some days in which defendants applied for removal of the bar and payment of money to enable the executors to defend the will. That application, it was suggested, should be heard to-morrow, because the action obviously could not be heard.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for plaintiff in the action) said that his clients were anxious to come to trial this term.

Maasdorp, J., asked why the plaintiffs could not put defendant to terms at once, and consent to the action standing over.

Mr. Burton pointed out that the executors applied for money to be paid for the defence of the action. The money in the estate had been placed in the hands of a certain trust company in Port Elizabeth to administer for the executors, who were, therefore, without funds. One of the parties to the action would be this trust company, which declined to pay the money unless by an order of Court.

Mr. Buchanan: Our position is that defendants have been unduly delaying the plea.

Maasdorp, J., said that the application would be heard to-morrow (Wednesday).

DE VRIES V. LUYT BROTHERS.

BOTES V. LUYT BROTHERS.

These actions were consolidated for the purpose of the hearing.

In the first case Hermanus A. de Vries sued the defendants for £90 rent, and in the second Antonie J. Botes, attorney, sued the defendants for £35 11s. 6d. for services rendered in and about the collection of certain insurance money.

The plaintiff, De Vries, in his declaration, said that he resided on the farm Bloemfontein, district of Fraserburg, which was his property, and the defendants carried on business in partnership on the said farm. On the 12th March, 1904, he let to defendants certain portion of the farm, with certain buildings thereon, for a period of five years at £80 per year. Defendants had paid the first year's rent to the 31st March, 1905, but although they had been in occupation since, they neglected and refused to pay rent from the 31st March, 1905, to 31st March, 1906. Wherefore plaintiff claimed £80.

Defendants, in their plea, said that they did not admit the words "which is his property." They further said that plaintiff was a clerk at Fraserburg in the employ of Mr. Botes, attorney. They admitted having entered into the lease, but said that they were given a right to buy the property in question, and that in March, 1905, plaintiff sold to L. M. Luyt the ground leased, with the premises thereon, the terms of purchase being that defendants should take over £600 of the bond then existing on the farm, and should pay the balance of £400 in cash. Thereafter in May a fire occurred in the shop and buildings occupied by defendants, and plaintiff thereupon agreed to let the purchase price remain in abeyance until the insurance money had been paid. Thereafter they employed one A. J. Botes, attorney, to collect the insurance money, and in January, 1906, he received a sum of £409 7s. 2d., which sum the said Botes, acting on the alleged instructions of the plaintiff, paid to the plaintiff. The said payment was wrongfully made to plaintiff, but defendants were willing to treat it as a payment on account of the purchase price of the property. Defendants were subject to the above, ready and willing to do all things necessary to take transfer of the property. In reconvention defendants said that by reason of the plaintiff's wrongful conduct and negligence, they had been hampered in their business, and had suffered damage to the extent of £200. They also claimed that plaintiff should be ordered forthwith to sign all necessary documents for transfer of the property to them, and tendered £400 in cash, or to have the money already in the hands of plaintiff so treated, and to enter into a mortgage bond for the balance of £600.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that negotiations had taken place for the purchase of the property, but said that it was arranged in March, 1905, with L. M. Luyt, that the purchase price should be £1,000 in cash, and that certain expenses should be paid by plaintiff. In January, 1906, further negotiations took place between the parties, as a result of which the defendants notified plaintiff that they had finally decided not to purchase the property. As to the insurance money, plaintiff said that the money was paid in respect of the damage caused to the buildings in pursuance of an arrangement between the parties.

The plaintiff Botes, in his declaration, said that he was employed by the defendants to collect certain moneys due from the Equitable Fire Insurance Co., and he claimed £35 11s. 6d. by way of commission at 2½ per cent. on the amount recovered, plus necessary expenses.

Defendants, in their plea, again went into the question of their right of option over the premises, and said that, although a sum of £763 1s. 5d. was paid in satisfaction of their claim against the insurance company, they had only received £354 odd, and plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully retained the balance of the £409 odd. They admitted only liability for commission, and necessary expenses of the collection of the money. Defendants claimed in reconvention an account, debate, and payment of any balance found to be due to them.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said that the sum of £409 odd was paid by the insurance company as and for the re-erection of the buildings destroyed by fire, which were the property of De Vries.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for plaintiffs. Mr. Close (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendants.

Hermanus A. de Vries (plaintiff in the first case) said that he had been assisting Mr. Botes as a clerk since the 20th April last, but, prior to that, he was residing on his farm. In March, 1904, he entered into a lease with L. M. Luyt, acting on behalf of the partnership. A special agreement was made as to rebuilding in case of fire, because witness was anxious that he should be protected against loss. Defendants undertook either to rebuild the premises, or to pay any loss that might be suffered. He gave the defendants a right of purchase under the lease. At the end of March, 1905, L. M. Luyt asked him to sell the portion that he had let to Luyt Bros. Witness, being asked what he wanted for half the farm, said £1,250 cash. Luyt offered £850. Witness told him he had better go and sleep. In the following month, Luyt saw him again, and after some negotiations he said that he would take £1,000 cash, but the defendants must pay all expenses excepting of cancellation of the bond, and they were also to give him three months and nine days' notice to enable him to make arrangements with the bond-holders, the S.A. Mutual. A few weeks afterwards both the brothers called upon him at his home and Mr. Luyt asked him to repeat the terms on which he would be prepared to sell. Witness repeated the terms, and L. M. Luyt said, "When I see my way clear I will give you notice." On or about the 12th May, 1905, a fire occurred on the premises occupied by the defendants, and the building and stock were damaged, and witness received no further communication from defendants as to purchasing the property. In December, 1905, L. M. Luyt said that he was going to Cape Town to see about the insurance money, and until that time they had ignored him. Before leaving for Cape Town, L. M. Luyt asked him if he would leave the matter of the option in abeyance. Witness agreed to do so. When the proposals were made in March and April, 1905, the defendants mentioned an extra portion of ground, and the £1,000 named by witness was to include both the leased portion and this extra portion. There was certain correspondence in April, 1906, in regard to the proposed sale, and a meeting took place. L. M. Luyt asked him in January, 1906, to drop £90 sterling, which would be due as rent in April. Eventually Luyt said that witness was putting obstacles in his way, and that he would drop the whole thing. In April a written proposal was received from Luyt Brothers "as per agreement of sale." Witness instituted an action for rent in the Magistrate's Court, and an exception taken by the defendants that the case was beyond his jurisdiction, there being a dispute as to ownership of ground, was upheld.

Cross-examined: Witness would not deny that the meeting at which the arrangement as to terms of purchase was finally come to may have taken place in March. He had looked upon the whole matter as a bogus transaction. By that he meant that he was sitting there on the farm himself and it was a little pastime. He had never agreed with the defendants that they should take over part of the bond; he had always told the defendants that his terms were cash. It was not true that shortly after the fire, R. M. Luyt called and told him that he was unable to carry out the agreement because of the loss he had sustained by the fire. He did not inform the Luyts at the sale of the old zinc that he was willing to let the matter remain in abeyance. Witness instructed Mr. Botes to watch his interests in connection with the lease and the damage. Mr. Botes had not paid over the sum of £409, as far as he knew. Mr. Botes had helped him off and on from time to time, and he might have paid the money to his (witness's) credit. A verbal offer was made by Mr. Botes in January last to the defendants to rebuild the property out of the money. Witness took up the attitude that he was entitled to retain the sum of £409 until the property was rebuilt or good security was given for its due restoration. Botes had held his power of attorney since 1904.

Christian D. Mocke, of Loxton, formerly of Fraserburg district, said that during the month of January, this year, L. M. Luyt had told him that the purchase of the farm from De Vries was "off."

Antonie Johannes Botes, attorney, described the work which he had to do in the collection of the defendant's claim against the insurance company. The amount paid over by Maxwell and Earp from the insurance company was £763 1s. 5d. Of this sum £409 7s. 2d. was paid to witness's credit in the Standard Bank, Cape Town. Witness had not actually paid over the money to De Vries. Witness also spoke to an arrangement made between himself and De Vries on the 9th January last in consequence of which a note was drawn up setting out the conditions under which witness could sell to defendants the portion of the farm in question. L. M. Luyt called, and a lot of argument ensued, and finally Luyt broke off the negotiations entirely, and said that he would have nothing more to do with the matter. There was a good deal of discussion about the claim, as the insurance company disputed the defendants' insurable interest in the building.

Cross-examined: Defendants had known all along that witness had also been acting for De Vries. He noticed later on that the interests of De Vries and Luyt Brothers conflicted. He denied that he had charged Luyt Brothers with the expenses of trips to Cape Town which he had made on behalf of De Vries. Witness charged £10 for each trip to Cape Town that he made in the interests of Luyt Brothers. Witness had always taken up the position that Luyt could have the money which he held if they would give good security for the re-erection of the building, or he would be prepared to pay out the money as the work proceeded. It was the duty of Luyt under the lease to restore the buildings to their position at the time of letting. He admitted that he had made certain payments, amounting to within £100, on behalf of De Vries out of the funds of £409 odd received to reinstate the building.

Mr. Burton closed his case, subject to the right to call, if necessary, Mr. Richardson, as representing the insurance company.

Louwrens Martinus Luyt (one of the defendants) said that he and his brother had saved money with a view of buying a farm where they could settle down. In the lease with the plaintiff a right of pre-emption was granted. They insured the buildings for £650, and the merchandise and furniture for £650. Towards the end of the first year they were so satisfied with the trading that they had done that they wanted to buy the property. They had negotiations in March, 1905, as to the purchase of the property. At the first interview there was a difference of about £400 as to the purchase price between plaintiff and witness. At the second inter-arranged with the plaintiff that he should take over the ground they had leased, and also a portion of ground to the north, purchase price to be raised by £600 on bond and £400 in cash. Witness suffered a loss of about £500 by the fire. It was not true that witness ignored the plaintiff from the fire until the time when he left for Cape Town to obtain the insurance money. He made an arrangement with the plaintiff some little time after the fire to wait until he (witness) had arranged matters in connection with the insurance. Plaintiff promised to wait and help him. De Vries had allowed him to have the diagram of the farm for the purpose of raising a loan towards the purchase price. Witness did not learn until December last that Botes was acting on behalf of De Vries in the matter. He also spoke to the efforts which were made to recover the insurance money, and denied that there was any call upon Botes to make the journeys to town on his behalf. He denied that in January, 1906, he broke off the agreement, and said that difficulties about a survey were raised by plaintiff. Witness had been willing to allow Botes to deduct the amount due to him from the sum of £409 which he (Botes) had in his hands. He had never authorised Botes to pay over the money to De Vries. No offer had been made by plaintiff to witness to allow him to draw out the money if he would provide sureties. He had never abandoned the sale, and he had never taken up the position that he could hold the money for De Vries. In the fire claim, in referring to the property, he used the words, "which belongs to Mr. De Vries, for which we are responsible to him." He did not understand the terms properly at the time.

Cross-examined: When witness entered into the agreement to purchase the farm in March, 1905, he had £550 in his safe. He had not got a banking account. The money was in notes and gold. He was not present when the fire took place in May, 1906. The safe had been screwed open. He had not recovered the money. At that time he owed Maxwell and Earp over £500, and he owed Kramer about £100. He had other creditors, amounting to about £50. Even with these liabilities, he had intended to pay £400 in cash towards the purchase price of the farm.

Re-examined: Witness had about £40 in the hands of Mr. Dyason at the time of the fire. In the previous December he had about £600 worth of stock. He considered that at the time of the transaction he was worth about £800 over and above his debts. Witness had suffered £300 damages by reason of De Vries' failure to give him transfer, and his detention of the money so as to prevent him from re-building the premises.

Petrus M. Luyt, one of the defendants in the case, stated he had been carrying on partnership with his brother. Formerly he carried on business at Britstown, and he came to the farm Bloemfontein with a considerable sum of money. Witness and his brother set aside £400 to purchase property, and they took over the farm. In March, 1906, his brother entered into negotiations with Mr. De Vries to purchase the property. Twice in March his brother went to see De Vries, and when witness heard the price he was satisfied with the partnership arrangement. In April he went with his brother to De Vries to make some condition about the agreement. In consequence of what his brother told him, he went to see De Vries, and asked would witness be taken in also as buyer. The conditions of the purchase were discussed and the price was fixed at £1,000, £400 to be paid in cash, and £600 to be arranged on a bond. Witness's brother said at that time he could not pay the surveying expenses. Mr. De Vries wanted a servitude on the dam, and offered to pay a shilling a year, but nothing definite as far as he could remember was arranged as to this. De Vries said it was not necessary to draw up a koop-brief, as his word was his bond. At the time of the fire there was £555 in the safe. The time of payment was allowed to stand over by Mr. De Vries, pending the recovery of the money. The documents were drawn up by Botes in English, and more or less he told witness what they contained. The matter was left in Botes's hands. During that time witness did not know that Botes was protecting the interest of De Vries in the matter. De Vries never threatened an action if witness did not proceed with the rebuilding of the property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness stated in an affidavit that he believed the money had been burnt by the fire, but now he was under the impression that it had been taken away.

Further evidence having been given for the defence, and counsel heard in argument, Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff, De Vries, claims from the defendant the sum of £90 for rent due under a lease of certain land and house for the period running from the 1st April, 1905, to the 1st April, 1906. The lease actually commenced on the 1st April, 1904, and for the first year the rent was paid. The defendant now pleads no rent is due for the second year, because in March and April, 1905, he actually purchased this property from the plaintiff, and consequently the lease lapsed and all liabilities and obligations between the parties will rest upon the terms of the sale. The burden of proving that the sale was concluded rests upon the defendants in this case, and they have attempted to prove it by their own evidence. In considering the parole evidence given we find that the only witnesses supporting the defendant's case are the defendants themselves. On the other hand, we have the evidence also of two interested parties, the two plaintiffs, but they are supported to some extent by other witnesses. It is alleged on the part of the defendants that an agreement of sale was entered into in March, 1906. This is denied by the plaintiff, De Vries, and the only parties that are said to have been present when this transaction took place were the two defendants and De Vries. Here there is a direct conflict of evidence, and if upon their evidence the Court had any difficulty in deciding between the parties; the defendants, upon whom rests the burden of proof must fail. But there is evidence of a subsequent transaction between the parties, which is of very great importance. That is with reference to what took place in January, 1906. Then they have an interview, at which were present only one of the defendants, Louwrens, and the two plaintiffs. The two plaintiffs state that Louwrens met them on that occasion in order to carry through and conclude certain negotiations which had previously taken place, and to complete a contract of sale. The plaintiffs say during that discussion De Vries claimed that before anything else should be done he should receive his rent for the past year, and then the matter of the sale could be considered, and upon that difficulty being raised with another difficulty of the survey expense, Louwrens broke off all further negotiations, and said he would have nothing further to do with the transaction. Here, as I say, again you have only the interested parties, but as to the nature of this transaction we have a witness with whom Louwrens had a conversation both before and after the meeting. Before the meeting he informed his neighbour, Mocke, that he had been on his way to buy this farm, and on his return he said the matter was off, and that no sale had taken place. I see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of Mr. Mocke in this case, and it is, therefore, to some extent a corroboration of the evidence of the plaintiff. But, now there is some light thrown on the matter by another circumstance, and that is as to what happened according to the evidence of Mr. Earp at the meeting in Cape Town. Mr. Earp says undoubtedly the question was raised as to whether De Vries was not entitled to the insurance money. There was a dispute about the money about to be paid out by the insurance company, and it was said at the time that the difference might be put right upon their return home. What could that difference mean if there had been a sale? There could have been no difference, because if there was a sale it was merely a matter of receiving the money and paying the money over to Mr. De Vries if the sale had been completed, and I think the difference was the difference Mr. Botes speaks of as to which of the two was to receive the insurance money, and the right to the insurance money could only be an open question if the sale had not taken place. The only persons entitled to the money if the sale had gone through were the two defendants. I regard Mr. Botes's evidence as an important corroboration of the position taken up by the plaintiff, De Vries, that there was a dispute as to the rights of the parties to the insurance money under the terms of their agreement of lease without reference to any sale. The parole evidence in this case is in favour of the plaintiff, but when we refer to the documents I think the omission of certain features in these documents is conclusive proof to my mind that no sale ever took place. As to the insurable interest, I must say it is to some extent a matter of obscurity which every layman could not grasp at once, but they must have known that the insurance office wanted to know what right they had to these houses. I think the direct answer would be if a sale had taken place, that the property was now the property of the defendants, because of a sale, and that the information which the insurance office would have obtained would have been that at the time when the policy was executed there was an insurable interest under the lease, and at the time when the fire took place there was an insurable interest of an extended character, and that the interest then was that they were actual owners of the property. Mr. Botes rendered certain services, and gave certain information. He knew about the lease and the circumstances of the parties, and it is quite clear at that time he had no interest which would influence him either in favour of De Vries or the defendant, whatever he might have now, and at that time he set about giving the necessary information. He, as an attorney, certainly would know the nature of an insurable interest, and in the information supplied by him to the Insurance Company he makes no mention of the sale. I come to the conclusion that no sale ever took place. There were negotiations which never came to a contract. Under the circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to £90 as rent, with costs. As to the case of Botes, he claims the sum of £35 as remuneration for work done. It is admitted he is entitled to some remuneration, but it is said he claims more than he ought to, because in addition to the 2½ per cent. on the moneys he was collecting from the insurance offices, he claims for two trips to Cape Town. I think, however, he is entitled to his £35. As to the £400, I think it was paid over to De Vries with the consent of the defendants, and Botes consequently is no longer responsible for it. There will be judgment for De Vries in the sum of £80, with costs, and for Botes in the sum of £35, with costs, the plaintiffs declared necessary witnesses.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte SYRKIN. { 1906.
Nov. 6th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an interdict restraining Mondel Weinberg and Reuben Weinberg, trading as Weinberg Brothers, from using and alienating certain stock-in-trade pledged to the petitioner. Petitioner advanced Weinberg Brothers £300 on the security of certain machinery, stock-in-trade, and outstanding debts; the outstanding debts had not been made over, and the stock-in-trade was in a building leased by the petitioner, who had left respondents in possession of the premises during the day-time.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on Thursday (November 8th), calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from collecting any of the outstanding debts pledged to the applicant, or for using any stock-in-trade so pledged by the applicant on 1st October, 1906, the rule to act as an interim interdict and to be served forthwith.

FEIN AND COHEN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Dr. Greer asked leave to mention a matter of urgency in the case of Jack Fein and Rebecca Cohen, who had been deported by the respondents under the Immigration Laws of the Colony. Counsel said notice had been given to the Attorney-General's office.

[Hopley, J.: Is it a case of undesirables wanting to land?]

Mr. Howel Jones: I am not ready to go on with the case. The affidavits have only just been put into my hands. There can be no urgency about the matter, as the applicants are on the high seas, and the order of the Court could have no effect.

Dr. Greer: There is a very important principle involved in this matter. Persons domiciled in this country, one for six years and the other for seven years, were arrested yesterday morning, taken before the Magistrate, refused the advantage of any professional advice, and the inquiry was conducted in secret.

[Hopley, J.: But all these allegations may possibly have an answer. What order do you want?]

Dr. Greer: In the first place, the authorities had notice of this motion before these people were deported.

[Hopley, J.: Supposing they did wrong, what is the practical thing you have before the Court?]

Dr. Greer: We did not know they had been taken out of the country. It may be gross contempt of Court on the part of the officials.

[Hopley, J.: Meantime, is there any urgency in the matter?]

Dr. Greer: I would ask that it be set down for Friday.

[Hopley, J.: Calling on them to do what?]

Dr. Greer: To restore these people.

[Hopley, J.: We have not got a fleet to follow them.]

Dr. Greer: Here are persons—

[Hopley, J.: Where are the persons?]

Dr. Greer: They are not here at present, but they have been illegally seized and sent away, while warning had been sent not to do so. Is it to be said that the rights of citizens are to be done away with in this manner?

[Hopley, J.: Of course this is not a political meeting. I want to know what good I can do to meet you. We do not own the seas beyond the three miles limit. Where are we now if the people are on the high seas? I do not see the urgency in the matter.]

Dr. Greer: I would like to ask that the notice of motion be allowed to stand, calling on the respondents to show cause why an order should not issue from the Court for the release and discharge from custody of the applicants.

[Hopley, J.: Supposing they were to confess judgment, and say, let them be released?]

Dr. Greer: They are in custody on board.

[Hopley, J.: Seeing the names, I must confess I am not enthusiastic about getting them back into this country.]

Dr. Greer: It is rather the principle one wants to assert. I take it that the persons who are responsible would see that these people are returned if the Court were to make the order.

[Hopley, J.: Put it down in the ordinary course. It is not a matter of urgency.]

Dr. Greer: Speaking from memory, there was a similar application in Pretoria, and the Court ordered the officials who were concerned in the removal to have the people returned to the jurisdiction of the Court, and I think in that case there was a punishment inflicted for contempt of Court.

[Hopley, J.: It would be just as well to produce that case. If Mr. Jones is correct that these people are on the high seas, I do not see the urgency.]

Dr. Greer: I would ask that the notice of motion stand.

Mr. Jones: I have no objection to this application being heard. I may say that the Government has a complete answer to the allegations made by my learned friend. The only objection I have is that there is no urgency in the matter at all.

[Hopley, J.: As there is really no urgency, and Mr. Jones complains that he is not ready, the matter can stand over until it can be properly heard and determined. Put it down for Thursday.]

Dr. Greer said that he might explain his position by stating that when he came into court he was under the impression it was a matter of urgency.

LEPORT V. LEPORT.

Mr. Sutton, for the plaintiff, said that this case came before the Chief Justice on the 16th October last, and as there was an informality in the service, his lordship took the evidence de bene esse, and ordered a further process to be served, which had now been done. The action was for restitution of conjugal rights.

Hopley, J., said the matter had better be postponed sine die, to be heard by the Chief Justice.

VAN DER MERWE V. KRAMER AND ANOTHER.

This was an action for the return of a cart, harness, and mules, or their value, £75, and £30 damages for wrongful seizure by the second defendant, at the instance of the first defendant.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff resided in the division of Sutherland, the first defendant was a merchant of Cape Town, and the second defendant was sued in his capacity as Deputy Sheriff for the district of Sutherland. On the 12th July the first defendant obtained judgment in the Supreme Court against one Moritz Braude for £73 15s. 6d., with costs. About the 17th July the first defendant took out a writ in execution of a judgment, and the second defendant proceeded to levy execution, and unlawfully seized a cart, harness, and mules, the property of the plaintiff. The plaintiff demanded restoration, but the second defendant, acting on the authority of the first defendant, refused to restore the same. Plaintiff had sustained damages in the sum of £30, and claimed the return of the cart, harness, and mules, or their value, £75. The plea set out that the defendant was not aware of the place of residence of the plaintiff. He denied that the attachment by the second defendant was unlawful, and that the cart, harness, and mules were the property of the plaintiff. They were the property of Braude.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Lewis) was for the first defendant, and the second defendant did not plead.

Carl A. van der Merwe, plaintiff, stated he had known Moritz Braude for some time, and had dealings with him in feathers. In September last year he met Braude, who asked witness to lend £50 on interest. At that time witness was surety to the Standard Bank for £100. Witness lent him the £50, and Braude gave his cart and mules as security. Braude failed to settle the debt on the day fixed, and asked an extension. Witness insisted on a settlement, and Braude said he must take the cart and mules according to the contract. Subsequently witness hired the cart and harness to Braude. If the Sheriff had not seized the cart, harness, and mules he would have allowed Braude to continue hiring them.

Jacobus Nel Louw, in the employment of the plaintiff, stated that he saw Braude's cart and mules in the yard of the plaintiff.

Moritz Braude, a hawker, of Sutherland, stated that he gave the plaintiff the cart and mules as security for the £50. Witness subsequently hired the mules from the plaintiff. He did not enter into a pledge with the plaintiff at the time Cramer was pressing him. He never had receipts for the hire of the cart and mules.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Jacobus A. van der Merwe, brother of the plaintiff, stated that he saw Braude hand the mules over to the plaintiff.

Mr. Upington said he did not know of a single case where such a contract had been upheld. Over and over again attempts had been made to set up a contract of this description. There was no distinction in law between the position of a man who subsequently went insolvent on a transaction of this kind and a man who was attempting to evade the claim of a judgment creditor. On the face of it, it was a most suspicious transaction. Had the Court received clear and convincing proof of the bona fides? Who were the persons who produced that proof? Everyone of them were interested parties. If agreements of this kind could be entered into to the detriment of a third party seeking justice, then a most inequitable state of affairs would exist.

Without calling upon Mr. Gardiner,

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff claims mules, a cart, and harness, which he says were his property, and which he has been deprived of by the defendant, acting through the second defendant, the Deputy Sheriff in the district of Sutherland. This property used to belong to a man called Braude, who is a witness in this case. He was a trader in the Sutherland district, a hawker, and a purchaser of feathers, and no doubt other produce. He has been there a good many years, and he has got to know the plaintiff and his family. They seem to be substantial farmers in the district. He has bought not only the plaintiff's feathers, but those of his brother, and of the rest of the family. They have accommodated him with money from time to time, and they have had considerable dealings in a small way with him. It would appear before September, 1905, Mr. Kramer, the first defendant had a claim, and I presume it was for goods supplied. He is a merchant in this town, and the claim was for a considerable sum of money against Braude. He filed a declaration, and sued him on the 19th September. It is in evidence they had actually written for the pleadings to be filed on pain of bar, and one does not know on the 19th September if this news got to Braude or not. He was at that time up at Sutherland, but he said—I think, under a misapprehension—he was in Cape Town. He clearly explained that he had not reached Cape Town until ten days after that. On the 19th September he probably wanted money. He certainly wanted to plead to this action, and I understand on that date he entered into the transaction which it is thought to impeach by the defence. The transaction was reduced to writing by an attorney of this Court, and witnessed by a clerk in his office. It purports to be an agreement to sell all these goods through Braude to the plaintiff for the sum of £50, and Braude acknowledges by the document to have received the sum of £50, and then there is the further agreement: "If Braude repay to Van der Merwe the sum of £50 before, or not later, than the 19th November next Van der Merwe shall give back the aforesaid goods. If not they will be regarded as his lawful property." Of course, this is a sort of transaction which, as Mr. Upington rightly says, is always narrowly scrutinised and looked at with a suspicious eye by anyone who has got to look at it. It clearly was only up to the 19th November, a document which could have been construed as a pledge for the repayment of £50 in the course of two months. But the transaction does not stop there. Before I go further, I am asked to believe that the whole thing was a sham and was invented by Braude simply for the purpose of defeating Mr. Kramer. I cannot hold anything of the sort was the case. It is true that Mr. Kramer had summoned Braude, and he (Braude) was by no means on his last legs. The mere fact that he came to Cape Town and got Kramer to withdraw the proceedings shows he was not at his wit's ends, and ever since then he has been carrying on business in a fairly considerable way, and seems to have no difficulty in getting bills discounted. What really took place, in my opinion, was that he wanted £50, and he had to get it somewhere, and I believe the money was paid over in Louw's office to him in cash, as he acknowledges in this document. One cannot suppose these substantial farmers are lowering themselves to this extent simply to defeat the claims of a man they have never seen. I believe they did give the £50, and I think this document given to Mr. Van der Merwe is no more than a pledge for the mules, cart, and harness. His Lordship, after reviewing the evidence, said there was nothing in the transaction which made it impossible for the Court to find it was a genuine one, and there would be judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant to return the cart, mules, and harness, or £50, with and £3 as damages and costs, and costs of the interdict proceedings to follow the result.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

LE PORT V. LE PORT. { 1906.
Nov. 7th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights brought by Catharina Le Port, who resides at Oudtsboorn, against her husband, Hendrik Le Port, whose whereabouts are unknown.

Mr. Sutton (for plaintiff) said that an informality which had occurred in the service originally had been cured, and that due service had now been given.

Evidence had previously been taken.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th January, failing which to show cause on the 1st February why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and plaintiff declared entitled to custody of the child, same service as directed in regard to service of citation.

RUMSEY V. RUMSEY.

This was an action brought by Constance E. Rumsey, lately of Johannesburg, against her husband, Raymond Lenox Rumsey, of Graaff-Reinet, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Defendant claimed in reconvention an order of restitution, or, in the alternative, a divorce.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the defendant (plaintiff in reconvention), and informed the Court that the plaintiff in convention had withdrawn from the action.

Formal evidence having been given, a decree of restitution was granted, plaintiff in convention to return to defendant on or before the 30th November, failing which, to show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and plaintiff be declared to have forfeited benefits under the ante-nuptial contract, personal service to be effected.

DUNDAS V. BEUKES.

This was an action brought by Henry Dundas, of Christiana, Transvaal, against Jacobus Beukes, A.son, late of Rietfontein, British Bechuanaland for transfer of certain farm.

Mr. M. Bisset (for plaintiff) said that defendant had been sued by edictal citation, and had been duly barred.

Henry Dundas (the plaintiff) said that he bought the farm Kyky on the Nossop River from defendant in 1894, while he was trading, and paid for it in kind, the purchase price being £200. Defendant had failed to give him transfer of the farm. The present proceedings had been delayed for various reasons. He believed defendant was at present in German South-west Africa. Witness had paid over £200 to the Government on account of quitrent arrears, stamps, etc., and a case commenced by the Government against Beukes in respect of the farm.

Order granted as prayed, with costs.

BELL V. ESTATE DOUGLASS. { 1906.
Nov. 7th.
" 12th.

Declaration—Exceptions—Non-joinder—Partners.

The declaration alleged that B. and C. were partners in a joint venture, that under a written agreement D. acquired a share in the joint venture, that B. disbursed certain amounts on behalf of C. and D. and claimed on the death of D. that his executors should pay to B. one-third share of such disbursements.

Held, that as the death of D. put an end to the partnership, the executors of D. were entitled to claim a final settlement of all partnership accounts, and that, as no reason appeared on the face of the declaration why C. was not joined either as plaintiff or defendant, the suit at the instance of B. alone should be stayed until C. was joined.

This was an argument upon certain exceptions taken by the defendants in the action, the executors of the estate of the late Hon. Arthur Douglass (a former Commissioner of Works) to the declaration of the plaintiff.

Plaintiff in his declaration, said in paragraphs 2 and 3:

2. Prior to September, 1896, the plaintiff, and one John Linden, Bradfield, acquired certain rights to water and a site for electric power works on the farm Glen Grey Reserve, on the White Kei River, near Queenstown aforesaid, and had proceeded to establish works, construct buildings and acquire rights in furtherance of a scheme (known as the Glen Grey Power Works), for supplying electric lighting and energy and otherwise promoting industrial enterprise in the vicinity; and a sum exceeding £2,000 had been expended on the undertaking.

3. Thereafter the said Douglass purchased a third share in the said venture or undertaking, and the further prosecution thereof for £780 under an agreement dated 3rd September, 1896, to which plaintiff craves leave to refer at the trial. The said purchase included a share in a certain corn mill, the interest in which belonged to plaintiff alone prior to the said purchase by the said Douglass.

Plaintiff went on to say that, as manager of the undertaking, he personally paid out certain sums. In January, 1899, Mr. Douglass wished to have an account of expenses, and thereafter plaintiff rendered an account, and one H. O. Lloyd, authorised by power of attorney from Mr. Douglass, duly audited the accounts, which showed a balance of £610, excess of the amount advanced by plaintiff on behalf of the said Douglass over the sums paid in by the latter. This amount plaintiff claimed. Plaintiff further said that from September, 1896, to August, 1899, he acted as manager, on behalf of the said Douglass, Bradfield, and himself, and thought £1000 was a fair and reasonable remuneration for his services. The said Douglass had been, and the defendants now were, liable to him for one-third portion of the said sum, viz., £333 6s. 8d., which amount also plaintiff claimed.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for the excipients; Mr. McGregor was for respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. Schreiner said the defendants took the exception that, as a written agreement was referred to in the declaration and not annexed thereto, the declaration was vague and embarrassing; and they took the further exception that the transaction being a partnership one, the other partners should have been joined. In support of the first exception, he quoted Houlder Bros. v. Colonial Government (22 S.C., 211). The defendants were embarrassed by not knowing the terms of the written agreement. In support of the second exception counsel quoted Pinaar v. Ratray (12 S.C., 38), Dicey's "Parties to Actions," Lindley on Partnership (page 462). The case was a partnership account one, and all the partners should be joined.

Mr. McGregor said he should leave the question of practice raised in the first exception to the Court, but pointed out the case quoted was distinguishable from the present one. The document was not so material that the plaintiff was obliged to annex it to his declaration. He quoted Odgers on Pleading. As to the second exception, the plaintiff's claim was not based on partnership but on specific allegations dehors the partnership, and the plaintiff had to stand or fall by his declaration. This exception was really a plea in abatement, and, in such a case, the defendants should move to have Bradfield joined as a partner. He quoted French v. Stirring (2 C.B.N.S., 357) and also Lindley on Partnership.

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said that a partner could only be sued alone if the cause of action was so distinct from the partnership as not to involve the consideration of partnership accounts. No distinction had been laid down between English and Roman-Dutch Law in such a case as this, and it was clear that in English law all the partners would have to be joined.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But cannot a partner be sued alone, as in this case, for his pro rata share of a partnership debt?]

That point has not been decided here, but it is just and equitable that the English rule should prevail.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I don't see what prejudice one partner would suffer, under such circumstances, if sued alone.]

The other partner may in a separate action avail himself of a defence of which the defendants may not have known, and it may be a good defence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I can understand that in a final settlement of accounts much may be said for the English rule.]

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Mr. McGregor applied for the case to be set down for hearing this term, on the ground that the plaintiff was about to proceed to East Africa.

After hearing Mr. Schreiner, the Chief Justice said that he would set down the case for hearing after delivering judgment on the exceptions.

Postea (November 12th).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the declaration alleges that prior to September, 1896, the plaintiff and one John Linden Bradfield acquired certain rights to water and a site for electric power works on the farm Glen Grey Reserve, on the White Kei River, near Queen's Town aforesaid, and had proceeded to establish works, construct buildings, and acquire rights in furtherance of a scheme (known as the Glen Grey Power Works) for supplying electric lighting and energy, and otherwise promoting industrial enterprise in the vicinity; and a sum exceeding £2,000 had been expended on the undertaking. Thereafter the said Douglass purchased a third share in the said venture or undertaking, and the further prosecution thereof for £780, under an agreement dated 3rd September, 1896, to which plaintiff craves leave to refer at the trial. Thereafter the said undertaking was proceeded with for account, among others, of the said Douglass, and rights were acquired, works constructed, and moneys duly expended for the above purposes, and in furtherance of the said undertaking and the prosecution thereof. There are further allegations which need not be referred to. The final allegation is that during a certain period mentioned in the declaration the plaintiff acted as manager of the undertaking on behalf of the said Douglass, the said Bradfield and himself, and expended much time and labour thereon, and that the sum of £1,000 is a fair and reasonable remuneration, and that the said Douglass and the defendants (the executors of his estate) are now liable to pay one-third share. To this declaration the defendants have excepted as follows: "(1) That no copy of the agreement dated 3rd September, 1896, referred to in paragraph 3 of the declaration, was annexed thereto, which document would disclose the nature of the undertaking and the contract between plaintiff and the said Douglass and one J. L. Bradfield." I may at once dispose of this exception by saying that, in my opinion, it is not a valid exception. If the allegation as to Douglass purchasing a third share of the undertaking had been one relied upon by the plaintiff in this case, as material, then, no doubt, it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to set out the agreement, which is mentioned incidentally as an unimportant part of the transaction, and it does not appear to me that anything depends upon the terms of that agreement. The case of Houlder Bros. v. Colonial Government (22 S.C.R., 211) has been relied upon, but that case was very different. In that case the defendant relied upon the construction of a particular agreement as his defence to the action, and the Court, on exception, held that it was necessary that that agreement should be set out, seeing that it formed a material portion of the defendant's plea. It does not appear from the declaration in the present case that the agreement mentioned here is a material part of the case, and, therefore, the first exception, in my opinion, should not be allowed. Then the second exception is as follows: "The said Bradfield was a partner with the plaintiff and the late Arthur Douglass in the undertaking, the subject of this action, which partnership is not alleged in the declaration to be terminated, yet the said Bradfield has not been joined as a party to this action." In my opinion this is a much more substantial exception than the first. It is clear from the declaration itself that a partnership did exist between the three—Bradford, plaintiff, and Douglass. Douglass has died. The consequence is that there is a dissolution, the plaintiff alone sues in respect of payments made by him on behalf of the partnership, and as it appears to me that there had been a practical dissolution of the partnership by the death of Douglass, it was necessary that all the accounts of the partnership should be entered into, and if one of the partners sues another for payment, it is in the interests of all concerned that all the partners should be before the Court for the purpose of stating a final account between them. Without deciding, however, what the practice of the Court would be under circumstances where there has been no dissolution of partnership, I certainly am of opinion that where there is a death of one of the partners and a dissolution of partnership, as a matter of practice it is necessary where all the partners are within the jurisdiction that they should all be before the Court for the purpose of a final settlement of all the accounts between the parties. It appears to me, therefore, that the last exception is a good one, and that the action must be stayed until Bradfield is joined either as co-plaintiff or co-defendant in this suit. As to the costs of this exception, I have arrived at the conclusion which I have stated merely because, prima facie, it appeared to me that it is necessary that the parties should all be joined. It is possible, however, that at the trial it may appear that the joinder is not necessary, that the account could be fairly stated between the plaintiff and the executors of Douglass without drawing Bradfield into the case, and it may well appear, therefore, at the final result that costs should not be allowed to the defendant. The Court will, therefore, allow the second exception, and stay further proceedings until Bradfield is joined either as co-plaintiff or co-defendant, but the costs of the exception will stand over.

Mr. McGregor (for plaintiff in the action) said that, pursuant to the judgment on the second exception, he would ask now that the plaintiff have leave to amend the summons and join Bradfield.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As co-plaintiff or co-defendant.]

Mr. McGregor: That I am unable to say.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You can have your choice.]

Mr. McGregor said he thought that if plaintiff had leave to amend the summons by joining Bradfield as a co-defendant that would be sufficient.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You can get a general leave to join him as co-plaintiff or co-defendant.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BURCHELL V. ESTATE } 1906.
BURCHELL. { Nov. 7th.

This was an application for leave to an executor to purge his default, and for an order on a trust company in Port Elizabeth to pay £350 out of the estate to defend the action.

The application arose out of a will which had been filed. The question was as to whether the will was formally executed. One of the applicants wished the will to be set aside. Mrs. Watson was one of the executors, and was prepared to admit that the will was not formally executed as required by law.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that James E. L. Burchell, attained full age, and was the eldest son of the deceased testator. The defendants were appointed executors under a certain document purporting to be will of the testator in April, 1889. The applicant had been administering the will, with Mrs. Watson, for 17 years. Now the present plaintiff, one of the respondents, had brought the action to have the will set aside on the ground of improper execution. Applicant now applied for leave to purge the default. There were a great many witnesses at Johannesburg and other distant places.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant; Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the plaintiff in the action, James Edwin Llewellyn Burchell; Mr. Benjamin was for Annie Watson, one of the defendants.

Counsel hoped to file a plea within a fortnight, and he pointed out that the matter could not be heard this term. It was the duty of the executor to defend the will on reasonable information.

Mr. Buchanan: The will has been challenged on these grounds: (a) That the man was suffering from a gunshot wound, and was not mentally capable of making a will; (b) that he had not given instructions for this will; (c) that, as a matter of fact, the witnesses had not signed as the ordinance stipulated they should.

Mr. Burton: The application is also for funds, and an order against John D. Simmons to pay the applicant the sum of £350 out of the estate for costs in defending the suit.

Mr. Benjamin said the present applicant was only a nominal party to the suit. The defendants should supply the executor with funds.

Mr. Buchanan said it would be premature to allow any funds out of the estate until the defence was disclosed.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicant is defendant in an action as executor in the estate. He is sued as executor, and he has to consider whether there is a good defence to the action. He has to act upon his own good judgment and upon advice which he received from his legal advisers, and if upon that he is of opinion that he has a good defence, he is entitled to defend, and he is entitled to use the funds of the estate for the purpose of defence. If, ultimately, it should appear that he has taken up an untenable position, and that he is defending an action where he ought to have known there was no defence, then, when that stage of the case arrives, the Court will decide whether the funds he has used out of the estate shall be paid out of his own pocket. It is quite true in certain cases an executor, as a defendant, may be in such a position that the Court may conclude that ultimately such an order would be futile, because he is a man of straw. The Court should protect the estate in some way, but there is no such position in this case. There is no attempt to show he is a man of straw. As executor, he is entitled to the funds of the estate, together with the co-executors. For some reason or other the co-executor is of opinion that there is no defence, and the applicant, in this case, has alleged, through his counsel, that there is a good ground of defence. Now, the applicant has to consider whether, after inquiry, he cannot discover that the defence would be untenable, and in that case, of course, he would find it to his interest not to proceed with the defence, because, as I have already observed, if he takes up an untenable position the burden of the costs may ultimately fall upon himself. The Court now grants leave to purge the default, the plea to be filed on or before 21st inst., or defendant to be barred from pleading, the parties to go to trial by the first Wednesday of next term, and the Aegis Company ordered to pay the sum of £350 out of the funds of the estate to the attorneys. The question of costs of the present application can stand over. After all this discussion, the defendant will now have a further opportunity to reconsider his position.

HIRSCHHOORN V. SCHRODER } 1906.
AND ANOTHER. } Nov. 7th.
" 8th.

Spoliation—Title to property—
Sale under conditions—Passing of dominium.

One L. had received from the German Government 41 oxen and two wagons, having subscribed the following undertaking: "I am prepared to buy from the Government 40 oxen and two wagons to ride transport with the same for the Government. I am prepared to pay the purchase price to the Government. This purchase price, which is to be exactly computed by the Controller of the Depot at K., I bind myself to pay within two years in this way, that each time one-half at least of the transport I earn shall be retained from me in liquidation." With the consent of the German authorities, L. crossed the border on the road to Uppington to ride transport from thence to a certain place in German territory. He carried with him a letter addressed to certain agents of the German Government, stating, inter alia, that the wagons, &c., were coming back with loads and still remained the property of that Government. When he had crossed into the Colony and was on his way to U., he met plaintiff, to whom he showed this letter, but who, nevertheless, purchased the oxen, &c., from L. at about half their real value, in spite of the warnings of others. The cattle were afterwards seized by the defendants.

Held in an action for spoliation against them, that the contract between the German Government and L. not having been a completed contract of sale and no property in the oxen, &c., having passed to L., he could not pass property in them to plaintiff, more especially as the latter did not appear to have been a bona fide purchaser.

This was an action brought by Hermann Hirschhorn, a speculator, of Geelboschdraai, division of Gordonia, against Ernest Schoder and Jan Willem van Coppenhagen, attorneys and auctioneers, of Upington, for the restoration of certain cattle, or payment of £455, their value, and for £420, damages for alleged wrongful seizure and detention of the said cattle.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on or about the 13th January, 1906, and at Upington, defendants, or their servants, acting under their authority, wrongfully and unlawfully deprived plaintiff of the possession of certain 35 oxen, the lawful property of the plaintiff, and at the time in his lawful and peaceful possession, and in spite of the plaintiff's protest, the defendants had refused to restore the said cattle to the plaintiff, and still detained the same. Wherefore plaintiff claimed (a) the restoration of the said cattle, or payment of the sum of £455, their value; (b) the sum of £420 as damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the wrongful and unlawful seizure and detention of the said cattle as aforesaid; (c) interest a tempore morae; (d) alternative relief, and (e) costs of the suit.

Defendants, in their plea, said that plaintiff had no fixed abode. They were and had been at all times material to this suit the duly authorised agents at Upington of the Imperial German Government. In or about October, 1905, one Pieter Johannes Louw, a transport rider, obtained certain 40 oxen, with wagon and gear, from the said Government, under an agreement providing that he should pay the purchase price within two years, that he should during that period them, and the said Government should, during that period, deduct from time to time in discharge of the purchase price at least half of the freight earned by him; 35 of the said oxen, or oxen which he had been allowed to substitute for some of the 35, with the wagons and gear were brought by the said Louw to Upington, and on or about the 10th January, 1906, the said Louw, acting wrongfully and unlawfully, and in breach of the agreement, purported to enter into an agreement of sale of the said oxen to the plaintiff. Defendants went on to allege that when plaintiff took delivery of the oxen, he knew that the same were claimed as being the property of the German Government, and that he did not act bona fide in and arrest the said transaction. They further said that the transaction between plaintiff and Louw was entered into in order to defraud the Government, and that plaintiff was not entitled to any benefits arising from the fraud. Defendants admitted that on or about the 12th January, acting for the German Government, they took possession of certain oxen then running on the Upington commonage, but said that six of the said oxen were afterwards taken possession of by one H. Sarzin, acting for plaintiff. They claimed that they were justified in refusing to give up the cattle, of which they had had possession, and prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that he purchased the said oxen from Louw who had obtained them from the German Government. He said that the six oxen taken possession of by Sarzin were not included in the number in respect of which the present suit was instituted. Otherwise he joined issue.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer) for defendants.

Victor Johannes Louw said that from October to December last year he rode transport for the German Government. Before the 3rd October, 1905, he was in the employ of the German Government. He took over certain two wagons with oxen and gear complete from the German authorities, and got a document from them. He did not know what the purchase price worked out at. He paid over some money on the wagons and oxen, in all about £32. He regarded the wagons and oxen as his own. Subsequently he met Hirschhorn at Swartputs about December, and he came to an agreement with the latter for the purchase of the wagons and oxen, the price being £425. Plaintiff paid him a little over £200 on account. Later on criminal proceedings were instituted against witness, and a preparatory examination was taken, but the Crown Prosecutor decided not to proceed. In all his dealings with the plaintiff witness had represented the wagons, oxen, and gear as his own property. There was no fraud about the transaction. Witness had received the full purchase price from plaintiff, except for one promissory note, for about £80.

Herrman Hirschhorn (the plaintiff) said that he was a trader and speculator residing at Springputs. He met Louw at Swartputs in December last, and entered into an agreement to purchase the property. He denied the allegation of fraud, and said that he bought the property bona fide from Louw. After the purchase he heard from Hugo and Stern that the wagons and oxen belonged to the German Government, but Louw told witness that he need not be afraid, as the oxen, wagons, and gear were his own bona fide property.

Witness was cross-examined at some length.

Re-examined: Witness only received a warning at the time from Hugo and Stern that the property belonged to the German Government. He did not know when that defendants were the agents of the German Government.

[Hopley, J.: How many warnings would you like?]

Witness said that he received no warnings from Schroder and Van Copenhagen. He had simply regarded Hugo and Stern as persons who wanted to buy the property.

Gertrude Flatthers, a sworn translator, gave evidence as to the meaning of a certain portion of the document, handed to Louw, by the German authorities.

Richard F. W. Stern, formerly an articled clerk with Mr. Tilney, at Upington, spoke to a transaction which he had in January last with Hirschhorn in reference to a promissory note which witness discounted.

Albert van Wyk, a labourer, formerly employed by the plaintiff, also gave evidence.

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case.

Ernest Schroder (one of the defendants) said that on the 1st December, 1905, his firm received written authority from the German Government to take possession of live-stock belonging to the Government. A certain amount of stock had been found within the Colonial borders in the possession of different people, and there had been considerable trouble in connection therewith. On the 10th January witness learnt that Louw had come to Upington with his wagons. In consequence of a report made to him by Mr. Stern, witness went to Louw's wagons on the Market-square. He saw Louw on the following day, and asked him why he was not loading up and returning to German territory. Louw said that his oxen were too poor. The oxen were, Louw added, in the veld. Witness told him that he had heard that he (Louw) was attempting to sell the wagons and oxen. Louw said that he was not. Witness told him that he must be very careful, or he would get into trouble, as the wagons and oxen were the property of the German Government. The document given by the authorities to Louw was produced, and a translation was obtained. Louw said that he knew all about it. The man was in a bad state. He had a black eye, and his face was swollen, and he seemed to be recovering from the effects of drink. Ultimately Louw said he was sorry he had sold the wagons and oxen. Witness informed him that he would report the matter to the German Government. Witness sent out a herd, who took possession of the oxen, 30 in all. Witness had never had more than 30 of these oxen in his possession. Notices were posted all about the district that witness's firm were the agents of the German Government for the purpose of looking after stray cattle. When he was getting the oxen away from somebody else's premises, six of them were recaptured. He afterwards got one back. The 25 oxen with which he was left had to be very closely herded, because attempts were constantly being made to re-take the cattle. Witness could not obtain the wagons as the hind wheels had been removed. A number of the oxen died, and he eventually sent the balance of 16 over the border. Later on Louw called at his office, and made a statement, in which he said that he was approached by Hirschhorn, who asked him to sell the wagons and oxen, and said that he had nothing to fear from the German Government. He (Louw) got under the influence of drink, and parted with the property to Hirschhorn. Witness wrote out the statement at Louw's dictation.

Cross-examined: Witness did not get Louw to sign the statement, because he thought nothing of it. Witness had heard Louw say to-day that the statement he made was all lies. He had not taken legal steps in regard to the wagons and other oxen, but that was not because he was not sure that the German Government had the right to recover the property. Witness thought he had done quite enough on behalf of his clients in recovering what he had done.

Wilhelm Stern, merchant, Upington, said that after Louw's wagons had come in he met Hirschhorn on the 9th January. Hirschhorn told him that he wanted to buy the wagons and oxen. Witness told Hirschhorn that he should not buy the property, as it belonged to the German Government. Plaintiff said that he would not buy the oxen and wagons under the circumstances. He was sure that Hirschhorn told him that he wanted to buy the oxen, and not that he had bought the oxen. Witness informed Mr. Van Copenhagen the same day of the conversation he had had with Hirschhorn.

Stephanus Malan, of Upington, stated he was there last January when the wagons came in. Witness was present when Hischhorn came to the office to speak to Mr. Hugo. Mr. Hugo told Mr. Hischhorn that he believed the wagons belonged to the German Government. Hischhorn's attention was drawn to the notice when he asked Mr. Hugo's advice as to the purchase of the wagons.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Hugo told Hischhorn that the wagons were the property of the German Government. Witness believed that there was a written notice sent from one of the German officials that the wagons belonged to the German Government.

Kurt Kramm, who represented the contractors to the German Government, and who had held a commission in the German army, stated that he acted as a sort of intermediary between the German authorities and the transport riders. He was perfectly convinced the wagons did not belong to the transport riders. He was certain a letter was sent to Stern and Hugo warning them as to the ownership of the property. The wagons were all of one pattern. The system of exchange within German territory was, if a rider came to a Government depot and convinced an officer that the oxen were too poor, he would give him new ones.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: If a driver exchanged poor oxen for new ones outside German territory and reported it, he did not think there would be any objection. This was the first time the oxen were sent into British territory. In the course of the operations the Hottentots captured cattle from the German Government, and probably the Hottentots sold them, but not to the German Government. The cattle, of course, got into circulation, but he regarded them as stolen, although taken in war.

Richard Engst, lieutenant in the employ of the German Government, stated he had charge of the commissariat department in October last year. Louw was first of all a driver in the employ of the German Government. Under the contract two wagons and teams were handed over to Louw in October. A record was kept in the books of what was paid off. At each depot where the driver called he drew half the money for the trip, and the remaining half went towards paying off the wagon. Louw signed the contract in witness's presence, and witness explained the meaning of it, and he was convinced Louw understood the terms of the contract. If a driver's wagon broke down he could have it repaired at the Government's depots, and if he chose to exchange it for a better one he would be debited with the difference. He could not say whether Louw's oxen were branded or not.

Further evidence having been given for the defendant, and counsel heard in argument, Hopley, J.: The plaintiff comes into court as the owner of 35 oxen, which, he says, he has been deprived of by the defendant, and claims their restoration and damages for their spoliation, which he says he has suffered at the hands of the defendants. It lies, therefore, upon the plaintiff to clearly make out his title to this property, and his whole case rests upon an alleged contract of sale between him and one Louw, which he says was bona fide, at all events, upon his part, Louw having at that time possession of these animals at the town of Upington.

Louw had received these animals and some others, 41 of them in all, from the German Government, together with two wagons and gear complete, under a certain contract. It is contended in the first place on behalf of the plaintiff that that contract, followed by the delivery of the goods to Louw, at once invested him with full dominion over this property. The plaintiff, in fact, must go as far as that, and must make out that portion of the case, otherwise his own title is defective, for he can hold no larger rights in the matter than Louw himself held. As between Louw and the Imperial German Government, their rights must be determined by the wording of this document. The law, as proved by Baron von Humboldt, prevailing in German South-West Africa, where the contract was made, and by the light of which it should be interpreted, is, so far as I can see, precisely the same as the law of this country, and therefore we are not in any difficulty in regard to the construction of a foreign law. The whole difficulty really arises in this case as to the construction of this document, which is drawn in a foreign language, and evidently by somebody who was not very much conversant with legal terms or the effect of legal phraseology. It is quite possible that the person who drew the contract may have thought that he clearly conveyed that the property did not pass (as it would have been perfectly legal for him to stipulate in such a contract) until the last payment had been made. Unfortunately it is not clearly to that effect, and one has to gather whether it is, in fact, an out-and-out sale on credit, or whether it is a contract of such a nature that such an effect cannot be given to it. It is, I think, clear in this case that we must take, not only the wording of the contract, but also all the circumstances of the parties thereto, into consideration, and that we should construe the contract by the light of such circumstances in so far as they will assist in arriving at its true meaning. The first question that one has to consider about the contract is whether it is a final contract of sale or whether it is—as it is worded—merely an inchoate running agreement which was never completed or never reached the final point which it was intended to attain. It must be observed that the words at the beginning of the contract are not: "I hereby purchase from the Government," but "I am prepared" (the word used is "bereit") "to buy from the Government 40 oxen and two wagons." Possibly these words might have been construed to mean "I hereby buy," in view of the fact that the property was delivered to Louw at the time; but they are not the only words in the first sentence of the contract. Not only does he profess his willingness to buy from the Government 40 oxen and two wagons, but the contract immediately goes on to say what he has to do with them—"to ride transport with the same for the Government." Therefore, in this contract, which must govern the rights of the plaintiff, a contract which he saw without a possibility of being deceived by Louw, because, being a German subject, he could read it in the original—there is a profession of willingness to purchase these oxen and wagons from the Government, and to ride transport with them for that Government. The contract then goes on to fix the purchase price. Louw agrees that he is prepared to pay—because the word "bereit" must govern the whole of the contract—"the original purchase price of the Government—that is, the amount charged by Messrs. Hesselmann and Company for these two wagons, together with team, which were delivered here on the 28th September, 1905." At that time Louw did not know the purchase price exactly, but it was ascertainable, and so, to that extent, the requirements of the contract of sale would be met. The purchase price which was ascertainable had been fixed, though Louw himself was absolutely ignorant of the matter—he did not know whether he was paying £500 or £1,000 for the wagons and oxen. He, however, agreed to pay the cost price to the Imperial German Government. The contract then goes on: "This purchase price, which is to be exactly computed by the Controller of the Southern Military Depot at Keetmanshoop, I bind myself to pay" (the translation has it "repay," but the original word is "bezahlen," to pay) "within two years in this way, that each time at least one-half of the transport I earn shall be retained from me in liquidation."

It is impossible to say that this contract is purely a contract of sale on credit. It is a sale with a stipulation that certain things shall be done with the articles proposed to be sold, which cannot be done without those articles. The whole of the contract taken together does not simply mean, "I hereby sell to you two wagons and 40 oxen," but "I hereby sell to you two wagons and 40 oxen on the condition that you shall ride transport with them for me, and that you will pay me a certain amount, which will be hereafter ascertained, by the earnings with these very oxen and wagons."

His having received these oxen and wagons does not make Louw's title any stronger, because it is obvious that under that portion of the contract which deals with the services to be rendered, it was necessary that he should receive them, and all that the note or receipt at the foot of the contract means is that he has received them—as anyone reading the whole of the contract must find—for the purpose of carrying out the contract of transport-riding, which he had agreed to perform.

This contract is dated October 3, 1905, and less than three months after that, when three trips had been made by Louw, and when he had paid the amount of £32 towards the purchase price of the oxen and wagons, he and other transport riders lying at their station of Dagnab, idle for lack of work, in the German territory were offered the work of going to Upington to fetch loads for Dagnab. Louw was, therefore, going outside the German territory. Whilst he was within the German borders he admits that it would never have occurred to him to sell, or try to sell, or dare to suggest that he was in a position to sell these oxen and wagons to anybody.

When he was sent across the border the people who sent him sent a letter to the firm to whom he was going, which contained a statement to the effect that the wagons and oxen had not passed to Louw. A similar letter, which has not been produced, is said to have been sent to their agent at Upington. I quite agree with Mr. Burton in his argument that if the property had actually passed the opinions of these people need not be taken into consideration. Still, it is a fact, which is material, that they did tell their agent that the wagons were coming back with loads, and that the property remained in the Government. It is material because this was pointed out to the plaintiff, and thereafter he acted with his eyes open.

About half-way to Upington, at a place called Zwartput, the plaintiff foregathered with Louw, and the other carriers, and eventually, having a spare horse, he lent it to Louw to ride with him to Upington. Louw says that on the way they did not talk in the least about the ownership of the wagons, or anything of that sort, but it is impossible to believe that a man like the plaintiff, who was a speculator, who would be always looking out for a means of making money, and who took such a curious and prominent action in regard to these matters so shortly afterwards, did not have an eye upon the possibilities which might arise from the fact that Louw had these oxen and wagons outside the German territory, where he might feel free to deal with them without fear of immediate consequences.

They went to Upington, and for the first few days Louw was sober enough, but just before the wagons arrived, on or about the 9th January, the hotel-keeper noticed that the plaintiff was very often with Louw, and was plying him with liquor. On the day of the arrival of the wagons, or perhaps the day before, they were closeted together in the sitting-room at the hotel, with the door closed, and the plaintiff was ordering liquor very freely.

The plaintiff seems to have had his doubts as to whether it would be safe to trade with Louw in the matter of this property, and he consulted two or three people in Upington as to whether it would be prudent to purchase these wagons and oxen. It is argued on his behalf that because he did this it conclusively shows his bona fides. I do not think that this conduct of his bears that construction in the least. If he bought these things from Louw it would, of course, in a little place like Upington, become an open secret at once. Everyone would know about it, and the fact of having spoken about it beforehand would strengthen his position rather than the reverse. If he had tried to conceal the matter it would have been an exceedingly suspicious circumstance, and, therefore, it was his policy to be as open as possible about it.

I find, as a fact, that in the course of taking such advice, and before he purchased, it was clearly put to the plaintiff that the German authorities still considered that these oxen and wagons were their property. Stern, Hugo, and Malan each warned him. He was told that they had letters with regard to those oxen and wagons from the German authorities to the effect that they considered them their property. The plaintiff spoke to the hotel-keeper, who used somewhat strong language about the transaction, and said that it was a well-known fact as to how those carriers held their oxen, and that if he bought he would be buying stolen goods.

In spite of this, he took the document which had been shown to him—written in a language which he understood—and went to consult his attorney. He could see from this document, together with the receipts for £32, the double nature of the contract, expressing, as it does, a willingness to purchase at a price to be fixed some time or other, and to work for as much as two years with these cattle, riding transport for the German Government. He could see that the payments had to be made in a certain manner within these two years as one of the conditions of the contract.

In spite of the knowledge that this was not properly a contract of sale, but rather one of service with these very oxen and wagons, and in spite of the warnings that these were looked upon by the German Government as their property, and in spite of the good advice which he had received on the subject, he preferred to get an affidavit from the man whom he was plying with liquor at the time, declaring, as no doubt he might be expected to declare under the circumstances, if he was ready to fall in with this colourable transaction, that the property was his own.

Upon these documents a jury might find that Louw was not really guilty of theft when he sold to the plaintiff, but when it comes to a civil matter it is right for the Judge to look into all the circumstances, and say whether such a document as I have before me can support such a transaction. In my opinion that document does not possess such strength and does not support the sale, and for that reason alone the plaintiff's action must fail.

But supposing that I were wrong in that view, and that this case were to go further, the question arises as to whether this was a bona fide transaction, or whether it was not either a bogus one or of such a colourable nature that the Court ought not to give effect to it. I take the latter view. I think that the plaintiff got hold of Louw—a dishonest carrier who had been trusted by the German Government out of their sight for a few days, so dishonest that he took the first opportunity of turning this property into money. It may be that the idea was put into his head by the plaintiff, which is quite likely, or it may have been his own original idea. At any rate, they put their heads together as to how to make money out of this property. Then something, which is called a sale, took place between them, and a certain amount of money passed from one to the other. Louw professes to have sold for £425, and the plaintiff professes to have bought for that sum from Louw. If the matter rested on their evidence alone I certainly would not have believed a word of the whole transaction, because I do not think that their evidence is worthy of any credence whatever, but they bring documents to prove the matter. There is this thing, called a receipt for £425. I believe that of that amount an order for £100 worth of goods was handed by plaintiff to Louw, and also that there was a promissory note, which was afterwards converted into a cheque for £110, which was received by Louw. Something is said about a horse having passed to Louw, but of that I have had no clear proof. Still, we will assume that £220 in money and goods was received by Louw. That is just about one-half of the amount at which these goods were valued for the purposes of the sale. I certainly am not convinced that the promissory note for £80 was a bona fide part of the transaction. It never has been paid, and still remains with the plaintiff. As to the £115, I am not in the least satisfied that more than a very few pounds at the outside ever reached Louw's pocket.

The result is that although this is sworn to as a transaction of sale, and supported by documents, the transaction may very well have been brought to pass in words to this effect: "Hand me over these oxen and wagons; they are worth about £425; give me a receipt for £425, and I will pay you about half, and take the property and make what I can out of it." That is my view of what really did happen—at any rate, it is quite possible.

I find that these two men put their heads together fraudulently to get this property and, to use a strong word, swindle the German Government out of it. Louw was to get a couple of hundred pounds, or perhaps a little more, whilst the other man was to get the wagons and oxen, out of which he expected to make a very handsome profit. I am convinced that some transaction of this nature was arranged, and that there was no bona fide transaction of sale. There is, in my opinion, nothing to support the plaintiff's claim to dominium in the property, and his action must fail. Judgment for the defendants, with costs.

Mr. Buchanan said that he had not had time to look up the authorities, but he submitted that this was a liquidated demand for the return of specific sums.

[Maasdorp, J.: You are entitled to judgment, but the question is as to the forfeiture, which surely is a matter of damages?]

Mr. Buchanan said he understood that the forfeiture of an executor's commission had been granted without evidence being led. Under the circumstances he should simply apply for judgment for the sum of £40.

Judgment entered for £40, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

CRAFFORD V. LE ROUX. { 1906.
{ Nov. 8th.

Discovery order—Sufficiency of affidavit of discovery.

This was an application for an order calling upon respondent to file and deliver a better and more sufficient affidavit, of discovery of all books, documents, etc., relating to a suit between the parties for rent of a farm at Elands' Vlei, in the Ladismith district, and, failing his compliance, an attachment of his person.

Applicant's affidavit stated that two affidavits had been made by the respondent and his attorneys, of discovery of an agreement between respondent and one Nel, and a letter written by the attorneys. Applicant said that there were numerous other documents undisclosed on affidavit.

Respondent's answering affidavit stated that the whole of the documents, etc., in his possession, custody, or power relating to the matter in question had been discovered. There might, it was said, be certain documents in the possession of one H. W. Becker, but he was not acting for either party.

Replying affidavits were read on behalf of applicant, to the effect that Becker was now acting, or had acted since the suit was commenced, for the respondent, and that he had a number of documents.

Dr. Greer was for applicant (plaintiff in the action); Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Dr. Greer explained that the applicant was suing the respondent for rent of a certain farm. The defence was that respondent was sub-lessee of one Nel, and that he was liable only to Nel, to whom he had paid the rent.

Mr. De Villiers said that Beoker was really the "bone of contention." He had formerly been acting for Nel.

Dr. Greer said their allegation was that there were cheques in existence which showed the defendant had paid the rent direct to the plaintiff, and that he had never been treated by plaintiff as sub-lessee of Nel. It was, therefore, most material to plaintiff's case that she should have discovery of these cheques.

Maasdorp, J., asked Dr. Greer if he could give him any authority for the practice of the Court in an application of this kind.

Dr. Greer said he was not aware that there had been a case in which this particular point was raised.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that there was no authority for such an application as this. He cited Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co. (35 Q.B. Div., 556). It could not be shown on a contentious affidavit that an affidavit of discovery was insufficient. He cited Mylchreest v. European Diamond Mining Co. (2 Appeal Cases, 78).

Dr. Greer submitted that the case of Mylchreest v. European Diamond Mining Company was clearly distinguishable from the present case. The respondent, he contended, had not met the allegations in the applicant's affidavits, and the applicant was entitled to relief.

Maasdorp, J.: The applicant has not succeeded in showing that the affidavit filed by the respondent is incorrect. It is stated that certain documents were written. That may be absolutely true, but those documents may never have been in possession of the defendant. It is said that certain cheques were drawn by the respondent. Those cheques may never have been returned to the respondent. So, upon the merits of the case, there is nothing now absolutely to prove to the Court that the statements contained in the respondent's affidavits are incorrect. Consequently, those affidavits, for the present, stand, and the application will be refused on that ground. But it seems to me that there is authority for saying that this is not the proper course to adopt, when an order for discovery has been made, in order to enable the applicant to obtain relief. It has been held upon a similar application that an affidavit of discovery must be regarded as conclusive, and there seems to be no reason why the Court should regard the rule there laid down as inapplicable to the present case. The application must, therefore, be refused. Some difficulty exists as to the question of costs, for although the respondent may be entitled to costs on the ground that the applicant has adopted the wrong procedure in the matter, still it might ultimately appear at the trial that the respondent was really in possession of further documents. But it seems to me that in that case the Court might deal with the question in awarding costs at the trial. However that may be, the application must be refused with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE STUMKE.

Mr. Gutsche moved, on the petition of the executors, for the amendment of a certain deed of transfer of land at Uitenhage. The errors in the description of the property had gone on for a considerable number of years. The Registrar of Deeds, in his report, said he thought relief should be given, but not in the form asked for. He suggested that applicants should proceed by way of transfer of the remaining extent under the Derelict Lands Act, and have the existing deed declared of no effect and reissued.

Maasdorp, J., in refusing the application, said that applicants should apply to a judge in chambers for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act.

Ex parte VILJOEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule to be made absolute, recognising the appointment of respondent, who is resident in the Orange River Colony, as sole trustee in the estate of D. G. van der Walt.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte GRANT.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Petitioner stated that her husband had been in Johannesburg, but she had been unable to learn his address. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify in favour of the application, and he, therefore, applied for a rule nisi to issue.

Rule framed calling upon respondent to show cause on the 1st February, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Star" (Johannesburg).

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE JOHNSON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for amendment of the name of insolvent in the insolvency records in the Master's Office. The estate was sequestrated in the name by which insolvent was commonly known, viz., Pieter Johnson, and land had been transferred to him in his correct name. Pieter Hendrik Johnson. The present application was necessary to facilitate transfer of the ground in the insolvent estate.

Order granted.

Ex parte HENNESSY AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the apportionment by the Civil Commissioner of certain quit rent land at Retreat, in the Cape Division, in terms of Act 7 of 1856. The quit rent payable on the ground was stated to be £7 0s. 6d. per annum. Certain of the co-owners of the lot could not be found, and others would not interest themselves in an apportionment, which should be made by the Civil Commissioner. Counsel said that the matter really came under the Act 10 of 1875, it was there directed that notice should be given to the various co-owners, and that was impossible, inasmuch as certain of the co-owners could not be found.

Maasdorp, J., said that the Civil Commissioner would proceed in the ordinary way, and the only thing for this court to do was to order the usual proceedings. The Civil Commissioner would be authorised to proceed to the apportionment upon proof that personal notice had been served, or notice by one publication the "Gazette" and the "Cape Times," on such parties as could not personally be served, as required by terms of section 1 of Act 10, 1875. The other proceedings would be in the ordinary course.

Ex parte HUMAN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for amendment of petitioner's name in certain bonds.

Order in terms of recommendation of Registrar of Deeds.

WATKINS V. MATHEW AND ANOTHER.

This was an application for an order calling upon respondent to hand over certain property attached under an order of Court.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent) said that the parties had come to an arrangement, and he had to apply for an order in terms of consent paper.

Order in terms of consent.

Ex parte LEZARD AND WIFE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the petitioners to register a certain ante-nuptial contract, excluding community of goods. The matter had previously been before the Chief Justice, who had ordered the application to stand over pending a further affidavit as to the intention of the parties before the marriage. Counsel now read a further affidavit by petitioners, in which they said that their intention was to enter into a contract excluding community, their belief being that a post-nuptial contract would have the same effect as a contract entered into before the marriage.

Leave granted to register as an ante-nuptial contract, the contract executed between the parties, excluding community of goods, the rights of creditors prior to the registration being reserved.

Maasdorp, J., observed that it might be necessary to make a further application to the Court in regard to the form of the contract.

WEIGHT AND ANOTHER V. KELLY (N.O.) AND OTHERS.

This was an application calling upon respondent to restore certain property.

Mr. McGregor applied for a postponement of the matter until the last day of term. Applicants were connected with the Somerset West Lodge of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, under the Grand Surrey Banner, and one of the respondents was president of the Grand Council of the R.A.O.B., under the South African Banner. Applicants said that negotiations for a settlement had been futile, and a postponement was necessary in order to file replying affidavits.

Mr. Uppington (for respondents) opposed the postponement, and said that already the matter had been repeatedly postponed at the request of the applicants.

Maasdorp, J.: I think the matter certainly has been dragging on for some little while, but there does not seem to be any urgency in it even now, and, as it stated that the affidavits are absolutely material, and reasons are given why they do not put them in sooner—and that is that negotiations were pending between the parties—I think the Court will allow the case to stand over, question of costs caused by postponement to be mentioned again. The application will stand over until the last day of term. Applicants must file their affidavits on or before Tuesday next.

On the application of Mr. Uppington, respondent was given leave to formally annex to his affidavit the rules of the Order.

ATTWELL V. BOTHA.

Insolvent Ordinance (6 of 1843), Sec. 127—Deficiency in estate—Assets of insolvent—Execution.

This was an application brought by Robert George Attwell, of Lady Grey, division of Aliwal North, upon notice to Jacobus Nicholas Botha to show cause why an execution should not issue in respect of £300 to satisfy in part a deficiency in respondent's insolvent estate amounting to £1,191 7s. 3d.

Mr. De Villiers said that Beoker was really the "bone of contention." He had formerly been acting for Nel.

Dr. Greer said their allegation was that there were cheques in existence which showed the defendant had paid the rent direct to the plaintiff, and that he had never been treated by plaintiff as sub-lessee of Nel. It was, therefore, most material to plaintiff's case that she should have discovery of these cheques.

Maasdorp, J., in refusing the application, said that applicants should apply to a judge in chambers for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act.

Ex parte VILJOEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule to be made absolute, recognising the appointment of respondent, who is resident in the Orange River Colony, as sole trustee in the estate of D. G. van der Walt.

cant once a month. Respondent, who resides at Wynberg, is brother-in-law to Mrs. Field. Applicant said that on going to the house of Field to see the children, he found that the mother had gone away to Port Elizabeth, and left the children in the charge of respondent. Mrs. Bentley denied that she had ever parted with custody of the children, and said that she only left them temporarily under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Field. Applicant said that the children were not being properly looked after, and that he found them in a "dilapidated and careless state." This Mrs. Field denied. The respondent denied that he had been given, or had had, custody of the children.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for applicant; Dr. Greer for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that the mother got custody of the children, and then she went away to Port Elizabeth. When she got wind of this application, apparently, she immediately came back. The whole idea of the deed of separation was that she was to look after these two young children, but, instead of that, she placed them under somebody else's care, and went off holiday-making. It was in the interests of the children that they should be handed over and placed in a boarding establishment, where applicant was prepared to pay for their maintenance and education.

Without calling upon Dr. Greer, Maasdorp, J.: It is quite clear in this case that the children are in the custody of the mother, and if the father wishes to recover that custody, he must take proceedings against the mother, and in those proceedings the respective rights of father and mother will be considered. The children are not at all in the custody of Field, and consequently Field has not the disposal of the children. The custody is in the mother, and she has a perfect right, having control of the children, to place them temporarily where she may think proper, and if she should be in the wrong, then proceedings can be taken against her. Any person who takes these children from her possession simply holds the custody for her. Under the circumstances, the application must be refused, with costs.

CUNDILL V. PICKERING AND CO. AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Russell moved, on the application of Thomas George Cundill, of the Barkly West Division, for an order upon respondents for delivery of certain consignment of furniture to Kimberley Railway Station. There was no appearance for the respondents, though an affidavit had been filed by the first-named respondent (Edward Pickering, of Port Elizabeth), who said that he was simply acting as the agent in the matter of Davis, Turner and Co., of London.

From the affidavits, it appeared that there was outstanding between the applicant and the second-named respondents a claim for £147 odd, for what were described as "London charges." The furniture was contained in about sixteen packing-cases, and had arrived from England per the Cluny Castle, and had since been stored at Port Elizabeth. There the property was kept, it was alleged, in protection of Davis, Turner and Co.'s lien. Applicant was willing to pay about £50 in settlement of the "London charges," but he said he had not been supplied with details, and he was not in a position to scrutinise the claim of Davis, Turner and Co. A further question was raised as to the charges for storage at Port Elizabeth since the early part of the year.

An order was granted directing Pickering to deliver the furniture to the applicant, upon applicant depositing in court a sum of £150, pending settlement of the disputes between the parties by proceedings to be instituted by the second-named respondents before the end of April, question of costs to stand over.

In re CLARK AND CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., presented the liquidators' report, and applied for the usual order as to the same lying for inspection. Counsel suggested that the report should lie for a period of six weeks, in view of the fact that there were liquidations of the company both in Natal and the Transvaal, as well as in this colony, and that publication should be ordered in the same manner as when the previous order was made by the Court in this matter.

An order was made accordingly, report to lie for a period of six weeks, and publication to be made in the same manner as previously.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte ISAACS. { 1906.
Nov. 8th.

Dr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency for an order to attach certain goods belonging to Ahmed Behkoomia, who, it was alleged, had removed them with a view of defeating his creditors.

Hopley, J., granted an order for the Sheriff to attach the goods, and hold them pending a further order of Court.

Applicant's case was that the respondent surrendered his estate on the 31st July, 1904, and that he (Mr. Attwell) was appointed sole trustee. Petitioner himself was a creditor against the estate to the amount of £311 9s. 10d. The claims against the estate were £1,676 2s. 9d., and there was a deficiency of £1,191 7s. 3d. The account and plan of distribution had been filed and confirmed. Respondent had not obtained his certificate from his trustee, and he had not been rehabilitated. He had assets valued at about £300, consisting of sheep, goats, cattle, and horses and cart.

Respondent stated that he had acquired certain property out of his own earnings since his insolvency. He had applied to the trustee for a certificate, but Mr. Attwell informed him that it was not necessary, and that he could do any work he liked. He had acquired a quantity of stock, etc., from work, or from proceeds which he had earned as a result of a road-repairing contract that he had had under the Divisional Council, and certain building operations that he had carried out. Respondent, however, said that he was now without a good deal of the stock that he had held, and that he now had a very small amount of property.

Applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that insolvent had not received a certificate, nor had he (Mr. Attwell) given him verbal permission to transact business in his own name, or acquire property. Reliable information had come to his notice that a quantity of stock had been disposed of since the present proceedings were commenced.

Respondent filed further affidavits denying this allegation.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Van der Byl was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that the application was brought under section 127 of the Insolvent Ordinance, by means of which any assets acquired after the account in the insolvent estate had been confirmed and before the rehabilitation may, upon notice to the insolvent, be placed under execution. The question in this case was whether respondent had assets capable of satisfying in whole or in part the deficiency in the estate. The mistake which appeared to have been made by the other side seemed to be that section 49 of the Ordinance would protect any personal earnings of insolvent after the account had been filed, and before rehabilitation of insolvent. In Bartholomew v. Stableford (17, Supreme Court Reports, 84), it was clearly laid down that protection only applied to any earnings of insolvent or property purchased therewith between the time of surrender and the confirmation of the account, but did not extend beyond. According to his own showing, respondent seemed to have property of the value of about £212.

Mr. Van der Byl said that the matter seemed to narrow itself down to a question of what means respondent possessed. The Court, he submitted, would not grant an order unless there were reasonable grounds for believing that there were assets belonging to respondent sufficient to pay an appreciable dividend to creditors. It was unfortunate that he was not able to read certain affidavits made by respondent, in consequence of his learned friend objecting that copies had not been served upon applicant. He submitted that applicant had not shown that respondent was in possession of assets of a value of more than £45. He cited Greeff's Trustee v. Fourie's Exor. and Greeff (16 S.C.R. 576.)

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that under section 127 of the Insolvent Ordinance, it is provided that the Court shall order a writ of execution to be issued upon being satisfied that a certain deficiency does exist, and there are reasonable grounds for believing that there are assets belonging to the insolvent capable of satisfying the same, wholly or in part. Now, it is apparent that a deficiency does exist, and, although there is some conflict upon the affidavits that have been put in as to whether the respondent actually possesses certain assets, I am satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he does. Upon his own showing, although these assets may not be as valuable as they are stated by the applicant to be, still, he does possess some property, and I am satisfied that there are good reasons for believing that the assets are more valuable than the respondent is prepared to admit. The order will, therefore, be granted with costs, and, as it also appears that there are certain moneys in the possession of George F. Botha due to the respondent, the Court will declare such moneys as are now in his possession owing to the respondent to be executable. It may be that he has not got all the moneys that he had at the time he made the affidavit, but whatever he may have is declared executable.

BENTLEY V. FIELD.

This was an application, upon notice to respondent, to show cause why he should not be ordered forthwith to deliver and hand over to the applicant certain two boys, aged eight and five years respectively, of whom the applicant is the father and lawful guardian.

It appeared from the affidavits that the applicant and his wife had entered into a deed of separation, in which it was provided inter alia that the mother should have the custody of the two boys, with right of access to the appliby the plaintiff, as is shown upon the aforesaid certificates.

6. In terms of the said contract, the work in connection with the sewage pump well at the power station, according to the specifications, plans, drawings, etc., amounted to £200, as shown in the schedule of quantities, but difficulties have arisen in carrying out the said work in accordance with the contract the defendant and his Engineer altered the plans of the said work, and instructed the construction of a screening chamber, and of further piping connecting the same to the pump well and adjacent manhole, thereby materially increasing the amount of work to be done and causing delay, and thereupon they agreed with the plaintiff that for the execution and performance of the said work in accordance with the new plans, he should be paid upon the prices contained in the said schedule of labour prices.

7. In terms of the said contract the work in connection with the syphon across the mouth of the Muizenberg Vlei, according to the specifications, plans, drawings, etc., amounted to £161, as shown in the schedule of quantities, but after the plaintiff had executed a portion of the said work in accordance therewith, for which he was allowed £50 in the said certificates, the execution thereof, in accordance with the contract, was found by the defendant and his Engineer to be impracticable and thereupon they did during the progress of the said works cause new plans for the said syphon to be prepared, thereby materially increasing the amount of work to be done and causing delay, and thereupon it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should execute the work in accordance with the new plans at the labour schedule prices.

8. In terms of the said contract the work in connection with the storm-water manholes and retaining walls according to the specifications, plans, drawings, etc., amounted to £386 7s. 7d. as shown in the schedule of quantities, but after the commencement of the said work the defendant and his engineer caused amended plans to be prepared, thereby materially increasing the said work and causing delay, and thereupon it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should execute the work in accordance with the amended plans at the said labour schedule prices.

9. At the same time that the new plans for the syphon, in paragraph 7 set forth, were being framed, the defendant caused plans to be prepared for the construction of a bridge and weir at the mouth of the said vlei, and on the 26th of May, 1905, it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should execute and perform the said work upon certain conditions in accordance with the labour schedule prices. The said contract formed no part of the contract in paragraph 2 thereof set forth, and of the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2 to 8 hereof.

10. On the 15th of May, 1905, in accordance with a resolution of the defendant Council, a contract was entered into between the parties by which it was agreed that the plaintiff should complete the house drainage connections as from the main sewer to the kerb, the charges to be in accordance with the said priced schedule of quantities, and that the connections at the rear of the work already done, i.e., on the line of the main sewers then constructed, were to be charged at the same schedule prices plus 10 per cent. for extra work. This said contract formed no part of the contract in paragraph 2 hereof set forth, or of the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2 to 8 hereof.

11. On the 6th of October, 1905, it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should execute certain branch mains work in accordance with a schedule of prices then agreed upon. The plaintiff made all preparations for executing the said work at certain cost, but received notice from the defendant not to start work under this contract until he received notice from defendant. The said contract formed no part of the contract in paragraph 2 hereof set forth, or of the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2 to 8 hereof. The plaintiff has always been ready and willing to perform his contract, and was so in the month of January, 1906.

12. For the purpose of carrying out the three contracts in paragraphs 9, 10, and 11 hereof set forth, the plaintiff procured certain plant and material in addition to the plant and material procured for carrying out the matters and things in paragraphs 2 to 7 hereof set forth.

13. In accordance with paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, certificates were issued by the said engineer to the plaintiff for £16,144 11s. 4d., less £1,000 for retention money, and the plaintiff was paid accordingly, and the defendant still holds the £1,000. The last certificate granted by the said Bennett was granted in October, 1905, and shortly thereafter the said engineer obtained leave of absence, and one W. Olive was appointed acting engineer. Subsequent to the execution of the work allowed for in the said certificate of October, the plaintiff has done work and labour and supplied materials to the value of £1,974 15s. 10d., in accordance with the said contract, which sum has not been paid to him.

14. The work done and materials supplied by the plaintiff (a) in terms of paragraph 6 hereof amounts to £2,680 1s. 4d., of which defendant has paid £1,006 19s. 6d., leaving a balance and a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why the said goods should not be included in his schedules and handed over for the benefit of his creditors, should he surrender his estate as insolvent, and to show cause why the applicant should not have his costs, the rule returnable on the 14th inst.

Municipal Council—Drainage contractor—Disputed quantities—Variation of contract prices by Municipal engineer.

This was an action brought by James Collie, contractor, Cape Town, against the Kalk Bay Municipality to recover certain sums alleged to be due upon the main drainage contract, and damages for breach of contract.

PLAINTIFF'S DECLARATION.

1 The plaintiff is a contractor residing at Cape Town; the defendant is the Kalk Bay Municipality.

2. On October 5, 1904, a contract was entered into between the parties whereby the plaintiff, for the sum of £13,156 6s. 4d., undertook to execute certain drainage works for the defendant at Kalk Bay and Muizenberg, upon and subject to certain conditions and schedule of quantities, as shown upon certain plans, sections, and drawings, and described in certain specifications, and it was agreed thereby that the engineer of the defendant did not guarantee the quantities of the several works to be correct, that the contract was based upon the said schedule of quantities, and that any difference there might be in actual work would either be added to the contract amount or deducted therefrom, and that the prices contained in the priced schedule of quantities (which is distinct from the schedule of quantities, and forms part of the said contract) would be the basis for calculating the cost of any extras or deductions which might occur in carrying out the contract, and by section 77 of the specification it was provided that in the case of extra work beyond that included in the specification any increase or diminution in the quantity of work or material therein specified or provided should be added to or deducted from the amount of the contract agreeably to the said schedule of prices or as otherwise specified. The said contract also contained a schedule of labour prices, hereinafter referred to, and in the interpretation clause the engineer was stated to mean Thomas Bennett. The work was to be completed within 12 months from the date of the order of the Engineer to commence work, and the plaintiff was to be paid for his work in monthly instalments upon the certificate of the Engineer at the rate of 80 per cent. upon the gross value of the work executed until the retention money amounted to £1,000, after which the certificates were to be paid in full.

3. On October 4, 1904, the said Engineer gave the plaintiff notice to begin on October 11, 1904, and the plaintiff then commenced work, and thereafter duly proceeded with the said work until the defendant broke the said contract, and certain other contracts hereinafter set forth, and took possession of the works thereunder with all materials and plant, and ejected the plaintiff and his workmen as hereinafter set forth.

4. The progress of the works was delayed by reason of certain causes for which the plaintiff was not responsible, but which arose through the acts or defaults of the defendant or his Engineer, by which it became and was wholly impossible to complete the said works within the aforesaid 12 months, as is hereinafter set forth.

5. Shortly after the plaintiff began the said works, the measurements, depths, size of pipes, etc., as contained in the schedule of quantities, were found to be incorrect, and they were found to be so from time to time during all the progress of the works, the actual work being found to be very much greater and entailing a large amount of extra and additional work, all of which was recognised and admitted by the defendant and his Engineer, and certificates for the said larger amount of work were granted from time to time to the plaintiff by the said Engineer in accordance with the said contract, and the said priced schedule of quantities, and paid by the defendant. From time to time the progress of the works, the plans, and drawings were altered, varied, or amended by the defendant and his Engineer, and large quantities of extra and additional work was, in consequence thereof, directed to be performed trary, he greatly delayed the said work, and broke the conditions of the said contract, and in consequence thereof the defendants on or about January 19, 1906, took possession of the works thereunder, as they were entitled to do under Nos. 18, 20, 31, and 33 of the conditions, and obtained an order from this Honourable Court on January 17, 1906, restraining the plaintiff from removing any of his plant, and the said rule was made absolute on February 2. The defendants crave leave to refer to the records of this Honourable Court for the circumstances of the said taking over. Save as above, they deny paragraph 3.

4. As to paragraph 4, they deny that the delay in the completion of the work was due to any cause for which they are responsible, but they admit that the plaintiff was unable with the workmen employed by him to complete the said work within the time he had agreed to do, and they admit that they did not take steps, as in terms of the conditions they were empowered to do, to enforce penalties against him for delay, but they allowed him to go on with the work after the expiry of the contract time. Save as above, they deny paragraph 4.

5. As to paragraph 5, the defendants deny that the measurements as contained in the schedule of quantities were incorrect or were from time to time found to be so, or that they recognised and admitted this. They refer to No. 32 of the conditions, under which they have power to authorise the construction of additional works, and to alter the method of the construction of works if found desirable. They admit that a certain amount of additional work was done by the plaintiff as directed, and especially with regard to house drainage connections from the main sewer to the curb, but for all such work the plaintiff has been fully paid, as hereinafter set forth. They admit that the section from (a) to (b) (on plan) on the main road was slightly altered, and that one manhole was omitted and the work commenced from man-hole No. 2 (on plan). They admit that the plans were altered in order to readjust the lines and provide for extensions from manholes, where branches were carried to the curb. They admit that from time to time certificates for larger amounts were granted by the said Bennett, engineer to the Council, than plaintiff was legally entitled to under the said contract, and they say that the said Bennett, in violation of his duties and acting beyond his authority without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, granted certificates for work done under the contract, and not according to the schedule of prices provided for in the contract, and also granted certificates for work not done at all. The said certificates were not, and are not, binding on the defendants; in any event, the said certificates are only payments on account, and there has been no final settlement of accounts between the parties, and the defendants are entitled to have a true and proper account taken of the work done by the plaintiff and of the value thereof, as provided by the contract and conditions and schedule of quantities. Save as above, they deny paragraph 5.

6. As to paragraph 6, they refer to page 15 of the annexure C for the schedule of prices in connection with this work. They admit that some additional work was done, but they say that the plaintiff has been paid for the same, and that he admitted and agreed on or about the 19th October, 1905, that any claim for work in connection with the above was settled. The whole of the said work was done under the contract A, and not otherwise, and payment had to be made therefor in accordance with the conditions B of the contract and the schedule of quantities C. Save as above, they deny all the allegations in paragraph 6, and say that the engineer, if he purported to make such an agreement as is alleged, had no power to make an agreement for payment at prices other than those provided for in the conditions, and in the schedule of quantities which could bind defendants; that he acted in violation of his duty and without defendants' knowledge or consent.

7. As to paragraph 7, they refer to page 7 of the annexure C for the schedule of prices in connection with this work. They admit that portion of the work was constructed by plaintiff prior to June 10, 1905, and at the said date the works constructed were carried away owing to a heavy fall of rain and consequent flooding, and it was decided not to proceed with it further. For the work done by plaintiff it was agreed to allow him a sum of £272 15s. 8d. in full settlement, and on or about October 19, 1905, he agreed to accept this in full and final settlement, and he has been paid this in account with defendants. Save as above, they deny all the allegations in paragraph 7, and say that the engineer, if he purported to make such an agreement as is alleged, had no power to make an agreement for payment at prices other than those provided in the conditions and schedule of quantities which could bind the defendants; that he acted in violation of his duty, and without defendants' knowledge or consent.

8. As to paragraph 8, they admit that provision was made for the sum of £386 7s. 1d., but save as above, they deny the said paragraph, and say that if the engineer made the agreement alleged he acted in violation of his duties, ultra vires, and without the defendants' knowledge or consent, and that such agreement is not binding on defendants.

9. As to paragraph 9, they admit that plans were caused to be prepared as due of £1,673 17s.; (b) in terms of paragraphs 7 and 9 amounts to £1,383 9s. 4d., of which the defendant has paid £272 15s. 8d., leaving a balance due of £1,111 3s. 8d.; (c) in terms of paragraph 8 amounts to £827 18s. 6d., which remains due; and (d) in terms of paragraph 10 amounts to £1,653 7s. 7d., of which defendant has paid £1,309 16s., leaving a balance due of £343 11s. 7d., or £3,956 10s. 9d. in all, which, together with the aforesaid amount of £1,974 15s. 10d., leaves a balance of £5,931 6s. 7d. still due and unpaid.

15. After the appointment of the said Olive, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully broke the aforesaid contracts and refused to pay the plaintiff any part of the sums of money which were due to him on the various said contracts and to which he was entitled, and in or about January, 1906, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully broke the contract and agreements referred to in paragraphs 2 to 8 inclusive hereof, and took possession of the said works and the material and plant thereon and used in connection therewith, and refused to allow the plaintiff to complete the same, and ordered the plaintiff and his workmen to leave the said works and refused to allow them to return, and the defendant did on or about the same date wrongfully and unlawfully break the contract in paragraph 10 hereof set forth and refused to pay the plaintiff what was due and refused and still refuses to allow him to complete the said house connections although the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his part of the said contract, and took possession of the said works and the plant and material procured and used in connection therewith and ejected the plaintiff and his workmen from the said work, and has been and still is executing the work through himself or others and the defendant did on or about the same date wrongfully and unlawfully break the contracts in paragraphs 9 and 11 hereof set forth, and has refused and still refuses to allow the plaintiff to construct the said branch mains work and the said bridge and weir, although the plaintiff was and is ready and willing to perform his part of the said contracts, and took possession of the plant and material procured and used in connection therewith, by reason of all of which the plaintiff has sustained damage.

16. There is due to the plaintiff the aforesaid sum of £5,931 6s. 7d., and the plaintiff has by reason of the aforesaid breaches of the said contracts sustained damage by way of loss of profit of £2,750, and the plaintiff is entitled further to the aforesaid sum of £1,000, originally retained as retention money, and still in the possession of the defendant, and the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage in the sum of £300 by the wrongful and unlawful seizure and retention of his plant and material, all of which is still held by the defendant, and which the defendant refused and still refuses to deliver up.

17. All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff to payment of the said sums, but the defendant refuses to make such payment.

Wherefore plaintiff claims judgment for: (a) The sum of £5,931 6s. 7d. and the sum of £1,000; (b) the sums of £2,750 and £300 as and for damages; (c) interest a tempore morae; (d) costs of suit.

DEFENDANTS' PLEA AND CLAIM IN RECONVENTION.

1. The defendants admit paragraph 1. and say that the Municipality is constituted under Act 4 of 1882, and that additional powers were granted under Act 26 of 1897.

2. As to paragraph 2, they admit that on October 5, 1904, a contract with the plaintiff was entered into, and they crave leave to refer to the contract itself, the specification of works and conditions, and to the schedule of quantities signed on the said date, and to the plans, sections, and drawings described therein, which were initialled by the plaintiff and defendants. They admit that they did not guarantee the correctness of the quantities for the several works specified, but say that it was the duty of the plaintiff to verify same, if he thought fit to do so, before commencing operations, and they annex hereto copies of: (a) the contract; (b) the specification and conditions; (c) the schedule of quantities. They refer to No. 1 of the conditions, as to the meaning of "Engineer," and to No. 11 as to quantities; they also refer to No. 36 of the conditions as to payment and to No. 28. In terms of No. 12 of the conditions, the contractor agreed to deliver to the engineer a true-priced copy of the schedule of quantities, similar to those upon which the estimate is based, and the annexure "C" is a copy thereof. It was provided in No. 12 that the prices so given were to provide for every contingency which might be met with. They admit that the work had to be completed within twelve months from notice to commence, and they refer to No. 7 of the conditions. Save as above, they deny paragraph 2, and they say that the said annexures constitute the contract existing between the plaintiff and the Municipality, which was duly entered into in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 104 of Act 45 of 1882.

3. As to paragraph 3, they admit that notice was given on the 4th October, and work commenced on the 11th October. They admit that plaintiff proceeded thereafter with the work, but deny that he did so duly; on the contrary, he greatly delayed the said work, and broke the conditions of the said contract, and in consequence thereof the defendants on or about January 18, 1906, took possession of the works thereunder, as they were entitled to do under Nos. 18, 20, 31, and 33 of the conditions, and obtained an order from this Honourable Court on January 17, 1906, restraining the plaintiff from removing any of his plant, and the said rule was made absolute on February 2. The defendants crave leave to refer to the records of this Honourable Court for the circumstances of the said taking over. Save as above, they deny paragraph 3.

4. As to paragraph 4, they deny that the delay in the completion of the work was due to any cause for which they are responsible, but they admit that the plaintiff was unable with the workmen employed by him to complete the said work within the time he had agreed to do, and they admit that they did not take steps, as in terms of the conditions they were empowered to do, to enforce penalties against him for delay, but they allowed him to go on with the work after the expiry of the contract time. Save as above, they deny paragraph 4.

5. As to paragraph 5, the defendants deny that the measurements as contained in the schedule of quantities were incorrect or were from time to time found to be so, or that they recognised and admitted this. They refer to No. 22 of the conditions, under which they have power to authorise the construction of additional works, and to alter the method of the construction of works if found desirable. They admit that a certain amount of additional work was done by the plaintiff as directed, and especially with regard to house drainage connections from the main sewer to the curb, but for all such work the plaintiff has been fully paid, as hereinafter set forth. They admit that the section from (a) to (b) (on plan) on the main road was slightly altered, and that one manhole was omitted and the work commenced from man-hole No. 2 (on plan). They admit that the plans were altered in order to readjust the lines and provide for extensions from manholes, where branches were carried to the curb. They admit that from time to time certificates for larger amounts were granted by the said Bennett, engineer to the Council, than plaintiff was legally entitled to under the said contract, and they say that the said Bennett, in violation of his duties and acting beyond his authority without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, granted certificates for work done under the contract, and not according to the schedule of prices provided for in the contract, and also granted certificates for work not done at all. The said certificates were not, and are not, binding on the defendants; in any event, the said certificates are only payments on account, and there has been no final settlement of accounts between the parties, and the defendants are entitled to have a true and proper account taken of the work done by the plaintiff and of the value thereof, as provided by the contract and conditions and schedule of quantities. Save as above, they deny paragraph 5.

6. As to paragraph 6, they refer to page 15 of the annexure C for the schedule of prices in connection with this work. They admit that some additional work was done, but they say that the plaintiff has been paid for the same, and that he admitted and agreed on or about the 18th October, 1905, that any claim for work in connection with the above was settled. The whole of the said work was done under the contract A. and not otherwise, and payment had to be made therefor in accordance with the conditions B of the contract and the schedule of quantities C. Save as above, they deny all the allegations in paragraph 6, and say that the engineer, if he purported to make such an agreement as is alleged, had no power to make an agreement for payment at prices other than those provided for in the conditions, and in the schedule of quantities which could bind defendants; that he acted in violation of his duty and without defendants' knowledge or consent.

7. As to paragraph 7, they refer to page 7 of the annexure C for the schedule of prices in connection with this work. They admit that portion of the work was constructed by plaintiff prior to June 10, 1905, and at the said date the works constructed were carried away owing to a heavy fall of rain and consequent flooding, and it was decided not to proceed with it further. For the work done by plaintiff it was agreed to allow him a sum of £272 15s. 8d. in full settlement, and on or about October 19, 1905, he agreed to accept this in full and final settlement, and he has been paid this in account with defendants. Save as above, they deny all the allegations in paragraph 7, and say that the engineer, if he purported to make such an agreement as is alleged, had no power to make an agreement for payment at prices other than those provided in the conditions and schedule of quantities which could bind the defendants; that he acted in violation of his duty, and without defendants' knowledge or consent.

8. As to paragraph 8, they admit that provision was made for the sum of £386 7s. 1d., but save as above, they deny the said paragraph, and say that if the engineer made the agreement alleged he acted in violation of his duties, ultra vires, and without the defendants' knowledge or consent, and that such agreement is not binding on defendants.

9. As to paragraph 9, they admit that plans were caused to be prepared as alleged, but they deny that any contract was entered into as alleged, and refer to section 104 of Act 45, 1882, whereunder all contracts with the defendants must be in writing signed by the chairman or by councillors acting under a resolution; no such contract was ever executed. They deny that any work upon the bridge or weir was executed by plaintiff, and say that after the aforementioned flooding of June 13, 1905, it was decided that this work should not be constructed, but that they have paid plaintiff a sum of £149 6s. for a weir-gate purchased by him; the said payment was made as additional work under contract A.

10. As to paragraph 10, they deny that any contract was entered into as alleged, and again refer to section 104 of Act 45, 1882. They admit that certain work has been done by the plaintiff in regard to house drainage connections, and say that plaintiff was instructed to do this as additional work under the contract A, and that he has been paid for all the said works. Save as above, they deny paragraph 10.

11. As to paragraph 11, they deny that any such agreement was entered into as alleged and again refer to section 104 of Act 45, 1882. No contract as therein provided was ever executed. No work on branch mains under any such agreement or otherwise has been executed by plaintiff; and they deny that in the month of January, 1906, plaintiff was ready and willing to perform the said work. Save as above, they deny paragraph 11.

12. As to paragraph 12, they have no knowledge of the allegations therein, and do not admit the same, but say that they are not responsible for any acts which plaintiff may have done as alleged.

13. As to paragraph 13, they admit that certificates to the amount of £16,144 11s. 4d. and more, less £1,000 retention money, have been issued by the said Bennett, and that plaintiff has been paid an amount of £18,263 16s. 2d. They deny that the said certificates represented the true sums due to plaintiff. They admit that the said Bennett obtained leave of absence and that one W. Olive was appointed acting engineer, and that the last certificate was granted in October, 1905. They admit that the plaintiff did some work after the granting of the last certificate, but deny that the value of work done or materials supplied is the sum of £1,974 15s. 10d., and they say that the aforesaid amount of £18,263 16s. 2d. which has been paid to plaintiff is far more than he is entitled to claim from defendants, and far exceeds the value of the work done or materials supplied. All work which was done or materials which were supplied were under the contract "A," and as to the excess this was paid in error of the true facts. Save as above, they deny paragraph 13.

14. As to paragraph 14, they deny that the sums set forth therein are the correct amounts due to plaintiff or that any amounts are now due to him, and they crave leave to refer to a schedule marked "D" herewith annexed which correctly sets forth the position of the accounts between the parties, and shows that the plaintiff is indebted to the defendants in the sum of £11,236 4s. 6d.

15. As to paragraph 15, they deny that they wrongfully and unlawfully broke the contract between themselves and plaintiff and withheld from him any sum of money due to him. They admit that they refused to allow plaintiff to continue the work, and ordered him to leave the works, and took possession thereof, and are now completing the works themselves. They say that they were justified in taking the steps that they did owing to the continuous breaches of the conditions of the contract by plaintiff and his neglect and refusal to carry on the work in a proper and efficient manner, without delay, and with a sufficient number of workmen; and they crave leave to refer to the particulars set forth in the aforesaid application to this Honourable Court in February, 1906. Save as above, they deny paragraph 15.

16. As to paragraph 16, they deny all the allegations therein save that they refuse to deliver up the said plant and materials, which they are entitled to retain in accordance with the conditions of the contract until the completion of the work. They admit that they refuse to pay the £1,000 retention money on the ground that the plaintiff has been already overpaid by a large sum in respect of work done by him upon the said contract. The defendants did not discover until after the departure of the said Bennett on leave of absence that the payments made were in excess of what plaintiff was legally entitled to, and that the said Bennett had been acting illegally, in violation of his duty, and ultra vires as aforesaid.

17. They deny all the allegations in paragraph 17.

Wherefore they pray that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendants (now plaintiffs in reconvention) say:

18. They crave leave to refer to the matters above pleaded.

19. They refer to schedule "D," showing that the amount of £3,250 has been overpaid to the plaintiff.

20. The plaintiff in reconvention supplied material to the defendant in reconvention from October up to December 31, 1905, to an amount of £349 15s. 2d. for the purposes of the contract, and to an amount of £185 8s. 10d. for house connections from May 17 to October 31, 1905, and these sums they are now entitled to recover from him.

21. Since the date when the plaintiff in reconvention took over the work themselves in January, 1906, they have expended on work and labour under the said contract the sum of £1,839 13s. 6d., and this sum they are entitled in accordance with condition No. 33 to recover from the defendant in reconvention. In order to complete the said work the plaintiffs in reconvention will have to expend an additional sum of £3,000, which they are entitled to recover from defendant in reconvention.

22. In addition, the plaintiffs in reconvention have paid up to the present certain sums amounting in all to £111 6s. 6d. as and for damages sustained owing to the negligent and imperfect manner in which the defendant in reconvention carried out the said work, which they are entitled to recover in terms of clause 70 of the specification.

23. The plaintiffs in reconvention are further entitled to recover the sum of £2,500 as and for damages sustained owing to the negligent and improper manner in which the defendant in reconvention carried out the said work, and owing to his breach of contract in not carrying out the same to completion within the specified time.

24. The total claim of the plaintiff in reconvention amounts to the sum of £11,236 4s. 6d., as will more fully appear from the schedule "D" annexed.

25. All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiffs in reconvention to recover the sum of £11,236 4s. 6d. from the defendant in reconvention.

The plaintiffs in reconvention claim:
(a) The sum of £11,236 4s. 6d. (b) Interest a tempore morae. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Watermeyer) for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton and Mr. D. Buchanan) for defendants.

Mr. Upington opened the case in an address, in the course of which he said that the execution of the contract proceeded amicably until the Municipal Engineer (Mr. Bennett) went to England in November, 1905, and Mr. Olive, who acted during his absence, came upon the scene. Mr. Olive did not seem to be so much concerned with the inspection of the work that the contractor was doing, as in going over work that had been passed by Mr. Bennett, and the result was that a series of disagreements occurred between the contractor and Mr. Olive. Certificates were not granted, and in the end the plaintiff was placed in such an awkward position through lack of funds that he could not continue the operations at anything like a good rate, and eventually he was turned off the work, and he was also interdicted from removing his plant from the site.

James Collie (the plaintiff) said that in August, 1904, he read notices for tenders for the main drainage scheme, extending from the south side of Kalk Bay through St. James's to Muizenberg, across the vley mouth to the sandhills. For the purpose of tendering, witness was furnished with a copy of the quantities annexed to the plea in this case. His tender of £13,000 odd, which was based on those quantities, was accepted by the Council. The quantities purported to show one as he walked along the road the amount of excavation to be done. Witness had some knowledge of the condition of things at Muizenberg from an experience extending over ten or eleven years. The work was commenced under his supervision about the 11th October, 1904, and they proceeded towards Fish Hoek. The depths of excavation that had to be done were totally different from those shown in the quantities. Witness, from the first, claimed on account of the discrepancies to be paid according to the schedule of prices. Mr. Bennett recognised his claim, and up to the time of his departure for Home he granted certificates to witness.

[Hopley, J.: Then Bennett must have been admitting that he was quite wrong in his survey?]

Witness: He could not do anything else. Continuing, witness said that the further they went the greater the variations seemed to be. The quantities again did not agree with the plans. He instanced certain discrepancies on sections 24 to 31. What was shown at 4 ft. had to be excavated down to 14 ft., 4 ft. 5 in. to 18 ft. 5 in., $\frac{5}{8}$ ft. to 19 ft. 5 in., and 6 ft. 5 in. to 15 ft.

[Hopley, J.: Then Bennett could not have been very good at taking levels?]

Witness: I do not know whether it is the fault of taking levels or arranging the data from the levels taken. Proceeding, witness said that after he had tendered on the quantities, plans were supplied to him, from which he had to work showing that he had to go to different depths from those shown in the quantities. Sections 24 to 32 occupied about seven or eight months, owing to the exceptional nature of the work. Near St. James's Station they had to tunnel through solid rock for some distance to the hill. It was the worst rock he had ever had to contend with. In the schedule increased prices were shown for rock work, and these prices he was prepared to accept for tunnelling. Witness had lost money on the work he had done in those sections even on the schedule prices. The work for which he had been paid under Bennett's certificates had been done under his (witness's) own personal supervision. It was the most conscientious job that he had ever had in his fingers. The work was passed and approved by the engineer, and also by the Councillors. Certificates were granted by the officials of the Council upon their measurements, but never upon any measurement made by witness. Before the work was commenced, Mr. Bennett decided to alter the direction of the sewer, and instead of having it on the seaside, and crossing the road here and there, to keep it entirely on the land side. Witness did not make any additional charge, except for variations from the figures laid down in the quantities. He had considered that if the figures given in the quantities were inaccurate, then he could fall back upon the schedule of prices. A sewage well was to be constructed near the vley mouth on the Muizenberg beach, at the Power Station. It was specified that the depth should be 15 feet. His tender was £200. The plan originally furnished to him showed a cylinder 16 feet deep. Mr. Evans, the assistant engineer, supplied him with the levels. They began to put the cylinder down in sections. They observed, however, that they had to excavate 3 feet 6 inches deeper than originally intended. Down to 16 feet they had no difficulty. Then they began to get lots of water. At 17 feet they were stopped. They had a great deal of trouble. Mr. Bennett instructed them to continue the excavation. They had to build a gantry in order to raise the cast iron cylinder that they had put down, but then the timbers gave way, and they had to adopt other methods. The inside of the cylinder was sheet piled, making a sort of coffer dam. Next morning the piles were shot into the air, and the cylinder was a complete wreck. It was supposed that some underground water drained into the well. The well was eventually made 1 foot 2 inches below the original depth, and the work was completed in ten days. The cylinder was piled on the outside. The work was done under the instructions of the engineer. While engaged on the well, he was instructed to build a screening chamber. Witness's claim for these works was £2,680, and he had been paid £1,006. The first foundation of concrete that they laid down in the screening chamber disappeared in the quicksands. Eventually they got a foundation that managed to stay. The only thing to have done would, in his opinion, have been to pile over the whole area. In the original quantities it was provided that a syphon should be built to carry the sewage across the vley mouth. The syphon, according to the plan, was to be supported on a concrete base. After some correspondence, it was arranged that witness should be paid the schedule of labour prices for carrying out the work. Witness procured plant, and did an enormous amount of work. Alterations of the plan were necessary, and a coffer dam had to be built, with the result that the Muizenberg vley dammed up, and in the end the temporary works were washed away. After this, nothing further was done, except in the way of making the bridge passable. In regard to the syphon bridge and weir, witness claimed £1,382, and had been paid £272 towards this sum. In connection with the drainage scheme, he carried out certain stormwater sewers. The intake was removed further up the mountain, and certain additional work had to be done. He charged £327 18s. 6d. in respect of the extra work he had to do. He was stopped from completing this work, a letter being received from Mr. Olive. As to the house connections, there had been trouble over the condition of the road, and the Council, he believed, approached him in regard to making up the house connections, the idea being to get the Divisional Council to make up the road as far as possible. The engineer, in a letter to witness, said that the charges were to be according to the schedule of prices. Witness's account for making the house connections was £1,653, and there was still a balance due to him of £343 11s. 7d. In regard to the laying of the branch mains, witness agreed to do the work in accordance with the engineer's prices. He purchased additional plant and took on extra labour. He estimated that he would have made a profit of £2,000 on this work. No effective work was done on his contract. Witness was given a schedule by the Municipal Engineer. The Council offered the work to him on this schedule, and he accepted it. As indicating the discrepancies in the particulars furnished to him, witness stated that on sections 49-72 the length of pipe line was shown in the quantities to be 167 yards, whilst the actual line was 2,000 feet, thus showing an error of 500 yards. In August, 1905, witness wrote to the Council pointing out the difficulties he had had under contract No. 1, Fish Hook to St. James's, and asking for an indemnity against further losses. In this letter he said that he had had to encounter what was apparently an almost interminable reef. Correspondence ensued, and witness supplied particulars as requested by the Council. The Council failed to pay certain certificates granted by the engineer, and placed him in some difficulty in carrying on the work. Witness had asked for a special allowance over and above the schedule prices. The Council in September, 1905, said that they were not prepared to depart from the terms of the contract, but on the completion of the work they would consider his proposition as to an allowance on account of the special difficulties he had had to contend with. Witness attended a meeting of the Drainage Committee on the 12th October, and a further meeting on the 19th. He agreed at the latter meeting to accept £3,117 6s. 2d. in settlement of his claims, on the understanding that they would assist him as they promised, later on. Being a public body, the Council were not prepared to put the matter in writing. In November Mr. Bennett went to England, the last certificate which he granted being dated the 31st October. Mr. Olive took over from the Municipal Engineer early in November. Witness spoke to certificates having been given for all the work which he had done up to the 31st October, except as to certain extras. On November 10th he obtained an amended certificate from Mr. Olive for £2,250 for work done in Mr. Bennett's time. Mr. Olive wrote asking him to clean out certain of the sewers, so that he could inspect them. Witness had constructed those sewers under the direction of Mr. Bennett, who had passed the work. He also had some difficulty in getting plans to work by, and he had to write to Mr. Olive. On the 22nd November, witness received a letter from the Council directing him for the present not to do any work apart from contract No. 1. Early in December he was stopped from doing work in connection with the intake, which was an extra under contract No. 1. Witness became much pressed for funds, having had no payment for over a month, and eventually on the 19th December he wrote saying that he would be compelled to close down for lack of funds. However, he had a conversation with the Mayor, and he went on with the work, but on the 21st December he received a letter from the Municipal Clerk stating that the Acting Engineer had informed the Council that he (plaintiff) was already overpaid for the work done. On the 22nd December Mr. Olive wrote complaining of the rate of progress. Time after time witness wrote asking for details of the alleged over-payment, but not a single detail was supplied until about a fortnight ago. It became impossible for him to carry on the work at anything like a good rate, and on January 19, 1906, the contract was taken out of his hands on the ground that he was not proceeding at a proper rate with the work. Had he received the monthly payments he would have been able to complete the contract. He had done the worst part of the work. His plant was seized. He had no other plant, and he had been unable to do any work since he was ejected. Witness had prepared a statement showing the amount of work done since the Council had taken over the contract. Mr. Scowen was Mayor during the execution of the contract.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness had carried out several other contracts. He had not done any large works of this kind in Cape Town. Witness had done plumbing work in Cape Town. Prior to this contract he had not carried out any large drainage contract. He had carried out waterworks at Caledon. Prior to entering into the contract no trial holes were made under his instructions, but he understood that trial holes had been made. Trial holes were also made afterwards under his instructions. From the quantities witness understood that the whole of the section was of the average depth mentioned, not that certain portions of the section only were of the depth mentioned.

Witness said that the quantities showed the depths in rotation.

Mr. Searle: Anyone acquainted with such contracts will tell you that the way to read the quantities is the one I am explaining to you. The other way would be perfectly hopeless, and it would be perfectly impossible to lay any sewer on the suggestion you make.

Witness: Oh, no; not in the least.

Further cross-examined: There were greater depths to which the excavation had to be taken than the maximum depths shown in the quantities. The readings on the quantities, he took it, were consecutive, and hence he said that he had gone down to a greater depth than was shown on the quantities. If they took the schedules entirely for the work he had done, then he would admit that he had received some thousands of pounds more than he was entitled to. He had received on sections £7,513 17s. 3d., against his own valuation of £8,206 16s. 8d. He admitted that in the certificates there were two allowances for work which he had not done, but he added that he had pointed out these errors to Mr. Bennett. There were errors both for and against witness; in one case £170 against him. He had not had an opportunity of pointing out the errors to the Council. Witness had found errors in the addition in certain of the certificates, due to copying from the original notes. On certificate No. 9, there was an error of £100 in his favour. His estimate of the value of the work was nearly £700 more than he had been paid, and this would be sufficient to cover any errors in his favour. Witness had on no occasion supplied Mr. Bennett with particulars of the measurement for the purposes of his certificates.

Plaintiff stated that he measured up and formed an estimate of what he was entitled to, and the engineer would measure afterwards. Witness's measurements generally corresponded with those of the engineer. In the June certificate there was between £500 and £600 for a section which he had never touched. In framing his estimate he adopted both schedules, although to a great extent he had worked on the second schedule. The Municipality had certainly not the hardest part of the work, only the easiest sections remained to be done.

At this stage it was agreed to refer several of the disputed accounts to Mr. Close or Mr. Gibson.

Continuing under cross-examination, the plaintiff said he had been paid £163 for the manhole. The time sheets and the vouchers were handed by witness to Mr. Bennett. All the vouchers in connection with the vlei were given to Mr. Bennett. Witness did not have duplicates, but intended to get the vouchers back. It would be impossible to prove that the vouchers had been destroyed. The Municipality, he believed, still held the time sheets and original notes. With the exception of a little he got all the cement from the Municipality. He was not anxious to keep the work quiet at the pumping well. It was not his idea to make up a big bill in connection with the matter. Pinner was the man employed by witness. He had drawn more money from witness than he was entitled to, and witness wrote to him to keep his mouth shut about the work. Witness warned Pinner in these terms, because he was a man inclined to talk about his business. Up to September 8 everything was included in the account, which he furnished the Council. The Municipality pointed out that they could not bargain with witness, because they were a public body.

Mr. Upington said that he had considered the position in reference to the settlement which was arrived at between Mr. Collie and the Council, and he was not now prepared to put it to the Court that the settlement was not binding. He felt that in view of Mr. Collie's evidence he could not insist that the settlement was conditional.

[Hopley, J.: Where would that leave the case?]

Mr. Upington said that in paragraph 14 of the declaration claim (a) would disappear, (b) would go out with the exception of £556 2s. for work at the vlei mouth, and (c) and (d) would remain. The claims for damages for breach of contract and loss, and seizure of plant and material would, of course, still remain.

Plaintiff again went into the witness-box and was further cross-examined by Mr. Searle. Many of the questions related to the accounts between the parties, Mr. Searle seeking to show that items which plaintiff was now claiming were already disposed of under other headings. There was an item of £556 2s., charged by plaintiff for materials at the vlei mouth. Witness admitted that he had received an advance of £900 under certificate from Mr. Bennett, and that this amount had not been repaid by him.

Mr. Searle put it that these materials were included in the inventory taken when the Council had turned plaintiff off the work.

Witness said that he was not aware that these materials were included in the inventory. In further cross-examination witness said that on the first contract he did not make a profit, because he had so much hard cutting to carry out. He calculated, however, that he could have made a profit on the other contract for the construction of branch mains, because the excavations were shallow. On the 11th October, 1905, he received a letter from the clerk to the Council stating that he should not proceed with the work. In the meantime he had made preparations for commencing the work, and he wrote asking for final instructions. Witness would rather do the work to-day than receive £2,000 damages. The work had not been carried out yet.

Mr. Searle: The Council's estimate of the cost of the branch mains was only £1,700.

Witness: Then it must have been as far out as their original scheme.

[Hopley, J. (to witness): Your estimate must have been about £6,000 or £7,000?]

Witness: It was an exceedingly good one—about £6,000.

Cross-examination continued: Witness claimed £750 damages in respect of the house connections and the bridge at the vlei mouth. He had sustained a loss on the amount of work that he had done on the bridge, but he estimated that if he were allowed to complete the bridge he would make a profit of £400 to £450. He estimated the profit he would have made on the house connections at £150 to £200. For the bridge he should have been paid on the labour schedule prices, and he would have had to pay out considerably less. He reckoned his profit from the cartage and other labour at £10 a day. He calculated that the work would have occupied about six weeks.

[Hopley, J.: This might go until further orders. It is very interesting; it is like the case of Houlder Brothers, where it is said that they were to charge 4d. a day for demurrage, and they paid 3d. a day. It seems almost immoral making £10 a day on this basis.]

Further cross-examined: The Council, in their letter, agreed to pay him schedule prices. He was allowed under the schedule 5s. a day for "boys," and he would pay 3s. to 3s. 6d. For artisans, bricklayers, etc., he was allowed 2s. a day, and he would have paid 12s. His profit on the house connections would have been from 15s. to £1 per house.

Mr. Searle said that as showing the way the contract was made up, he might mention an item in regard to a municipal mule lent to the plaintiff. Plaintiff had charged £11 10s. for having the use of that mule.

Witness said that counsel forgot that he had to pay for a man to attend the mule.

Re-examined: There had been nothing that he was ashamed of in connection with this contract. There had never been any collusion with Bennett and himself, so that he should receive certificates from the municipal engineer in excess of what he was entitled to. He had covered in no portion of the work he had done until he had had the approval of the municipal engineer.

Mr. Upington (in reply to the foreman) said that the plaintiff's claim had now been reduced by £2,328, leaving £3,563 claimed for work and labour done and £1,000 retention money under section (a) and £2,750 and £300 damages under section (b).

Thomas Pitts, of Mowbray, formerly in the employ of plaintiff as general foreman of the Kalk Bay contract, said he supervised the work from Fish Hook to St. James's. He spoke as to the difficult character of the ground that they had to excavate, and said that the work was done as carefully and expeditiously as possible. Witness stated that certain sections which had been criticised by the Government engineers had actually been constructed by the municipality.

Cross-examined: Witness would receive a commission from Mr. Collie if he won this case. His terms of employment with Mr. Collie were £25 a month, and 15 per cent. commission on the profits. He had not yet received any commission. He admitted that the tests made by the Government engineers revealed a leak at each of the places tested. One of the pipes near the Fisheries had been broken, and the hole had been patched up with pieces of tin. Witness was unable to say who was responsible for this bit of work. He did not see work of that kind put in.

By the Court: The section in question must have been inspected by Bennett.

Witness went into details of the accounts and time sheets in connection with the work.

Hopley, J., remarked that it seemed to him if all these details were to be gone into the case would not be finished before Christmas. He was sure that the jury would not sit with any degree of patience until that time. Could not these matters be referred to an expert?

Mr. Searle said he had no objection to that course.

It was agreed that the matter of the stormwater sewage and all other questions of quantities be referred to a quantity surveyor.

Mr. Upington said his other evidence was on the question of accounts, but as that matter had been referred there would be no necessity now to call the evidence.

Mr. Searle said he would call evidence to show that the account submitted to the defendants was wholly incorrect.

Mr. Upington submitted, if evidence was going to be called to show fraud or collusion, he should be allowed to call evidence to disprove the charge.

Hopley, J., said he would decide the point when the time arrived.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Thomas William Stainthorpe, A.M.-I.C.E., M.R.S.I., said towards the end of June he was appointed by the Government to make an inquiry into the drainage work at Kalk Bay and Muizenberg. Witness made a plan of the whole work for the Government. He had no interest whatever as between the plaintiff and defendant. There was no doubt that between manholes 28 and 29 the gradient was the wrong way. There were several other variations. He went into the Government investigation, and he could not get the payments to correspond. A higher scale had been applied than the scale on page 18. The payments had not been made on the basis suggested by the plaintiff.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The proper way to have drawn up quantities of this kind would have been to have taken the average depth of the manholes, and have the manholes pegged out for the contractor. The plans might have given a little more information to the contractor. The Secretary for Public Works appointed him to make the investigation. The general administration of the Municipality, in his opinion, was lax. From a municipal point of view, the general administration of Muizenberg during the time of this contract was not what it should have been. Instances had come to his notice where documents which should have been filed were lost, principally in the Engineer's department.

Dr. Mitchell, who, with Mr. Stainthorpe formed the Commission of Inquiry appointed by the Government, gave evidence as to the quantity of stagnant water found in the manholes. It was possible that the system as it was would work for a time with the aid of flushing chambers, but the worst of the sections sooner or later would have to be taken up. From the point of view of his department, considerable expenditure would have to be incurred to make the sewers reasonably satisfactory. After his report the Municipality would be neglectful if it worked the system.

W. T. Olive, engineer, stated that his letter of the 11th November requesting that the manholes should be uncovered for the purpose of inspection, had not been complied with. About 110 men were on the work at the commencement, but towards the finish there were only 10 men on the work. Witness wrote several letters requesting the plaintiff to get on with the work, but nothing was done. Towards the end of January the Municipality continued the work. The original plans were sufficiently accurate for the contractor.

Cross-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: Some of the lengths on the sections did not tally with the quantities. The plaintiff was turned off the work because the time had expired, and because he had been overpaid. The contract, to his mind, was one in which rock would have to be encountered. Witness would have put 120 men on the work, and done it entirely different.

M. T. Cowan, architect and quantity surveyor, and formerly a member of the Council, stated that the total value of the work done, including extras, was £14,116 13s. 6d. The net over-payment was £4,137 2s. 8d. The Council never passed a resolution that the work of the branch mains should be undertaken, for which the plaintiff was to be paid £2,100. The suggestion was that the work should be done when the Council had funds. There was no authority given to enter into a contract for branch mains. No work, as far as witness was aware, had been done on the branch mains.

Cross-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: The quantities were prepared two or three months before he came into the Council, and he only saw them when the tender was accepted. The matter of the branch mains came up before the Council pretty often, and a schedule was prepared on a resolution of the Council.

M. T. Cowan, architect and quantity surveyor, continuing his evidence, stated, in answer to a juror, that in March he discovered that there was one set of reports to the Council and one to Mr. Collie, and he was then aware that the Council was getting different statements to those which were supplied to the contractor. Witness would have no hesitation in accepting the engineer's interim certificate; it would be impossible to question the certificate without going fully into the whole matter. In this case a certificate was given to Mr. Collie by Mr. Bennett without the Council knowing anything about it.

Dr. Mitchell, recalled, submitted statements showing the different rates paid, and their comparisons with the various schedules.

W. D. Gourlay, Mayor of the Kalk Bay Municipality, stated that there was no contract for branch mains. The question only came up when Mr. Collie wrote to the Council saying that he was in difficulties, owing to his having encountered so much rock, and was working at a loss. No plans were placed before the Council to show what branch mains were to be constructed. As a matter of fact, the Council was never in a position to conclude a contract for the branch mains, the main drainage being regarded as the important thing to complete. Witness protested against the honouring of certificates by the Council after the contract price had been exceeded.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He understood that the certificates were handed to Collie, and that the latter handed them to the Town Treasurer.

Witness was Mayor when the settlement was arrived at in October, the idea being to settle and define the position of the Council up to date. When Mr. Bennett was going home witness begged the Council to let him go, for the purpose of having another man in to report on the condition of affairs. It was acknowledged, however, that the contractor had to contend with very great difficulties. He was not aware that the contract price had been exceeded, although certain extra payments had been made. The first the Council knew of overpayments was when Mr. Olive came. The branch drainage was never to be given to any contractor until permission to raise the money had been obtained from the ratepayers.

Re-examined: The drainage scheme which had been referred to included the electric lighting scheme, and other contracts had been entered into in respect of other portions of the general scheme. The settlement in October was in reference to extras, but had nothing to do with the ordinary payments on certificates.

Arthur Ford, superintendent of the drainage works at Kalk Bay, said that he entered the Council's employment at the beginning of this year. After Collie left he made a complete inventory of the plant and material, which was lying all along the line of work. The valuation of 1898 was a fair valuation. Witness had carried out the work from the point at which Mr. Collie left it. Each section as it was completed was measured up, and the work carried out in strict accordance with the specifications. He had prepared a statement showing the amount of work done by the Council up to the end of October, the total expenditure by the Council being £2,850. The main contract was, however, not completed yet, and he estimated a further expenditure of £1,276 would be required to complete the contract. In June an obstruction occurred which it was found, on a shaft being sunk, was due to a broken pipe which had been patched up with tin and composition. Another pipe which had been similarly treated was also found close by, this being a portion of the work done by Mr. Collie.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness had had considerable experience of drainage works, and had been assistant-general foreman of the main drainage works, Cape Town. He had also been engaged on drainage work in England. The work now in progress was expensive, but he did not see any difficulties about it. At present there were about twenty men employed.

By the Jury: The work which had been carried out by the Municipality was of a far more difficult character than that which had been carried out by the contractor.

William Jefferson, sub-foreman on the Kalk Bay drainage works, said he had also had experience as a ganger on the Cape Town main drainage, and at Wynberg. The work at Kalk Bay had been pushed along as rapidly as possible, and there had been no accidents in connection with blasting. Witness proceeded to corroborate the evidence of the previous witness with regard to finding a damaged pipe which had been patched up with composition and a piece of paraffin-oil tin. The pipes were blocked owing to the composition running through, and water was oozing through the pipes.

John Scott, a foreman employed on the Kalk Bay drainage works, said he had had experience of drainage works at Cape Town, Wynberg and Claremont, and at Kalk Bay he was looking after the main sewer. Witness denied the assertions made by Mr. Collie in his letter as to witness's insobriety and as to time being lost on the work.

Henry Herbert Evans, an engineer practising in Cape Town, and formerly assistant engineer to the Kalk Bay Municipality, stated that he left the employ of the Municipality very shortly after the contract was commenced. Witness denied that he had given Mr. Collie to understand that the quantities in the schedule were consecutive.

Cross-examined: It was contemplated that the excavation for the greater part of the work would be in solid rock. Witness inspected all work whilst he was there, and before it was finally covered in. During the time that witness was there the whole of Mr. Collie's work was satisfactory. Witness measured up the work, but he had nothing to do with the pricing of the work.

By the Jury: He left the employment of the Council on account of a disagreement, but it had nothing whatever to do with the contract.

Charles Pinker, a builder and contractor, at Muizenberg, gave evidence as to the work done by him under a sub-contract with the plaintiff. Later he was engaged as foreman, and subsequently had been engaged by the Municipality. Witness gave evidence as to the value of the plant and material taken over at the Vlei Mouth. Witness kept full books of his work, and handed them to the plaintiff for the purpose of making out his accounts. Mr. Carroll, the plaintiff's book-keeper, told witness that plaintiff burnt the books, and when witness spoke to plaintiff about this he denied having done so. Carroll subsequently told witness that the plaintiff was shuffling, as he (plaintiff) had torn up the books, and handed them to Carroll to burn.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He was not fond of going about talking freely of business matters. Witness sent the plaintiff a demand for £25, and the plaintiff asked him to let the matter stand over until the present case was decided. Since August he had been in the employ of the Municipality. Witness had charge of the Muizenberg section, and no complaint was made by the Engineer. Witness had nothing to hide from anyone. The plaintiff advanced witness money on the work. Witness had paid wages to the men out of his own pocket, although at the time he was very hard pressed for cash; in fact, he was unable to pay a small instalment on a debt.

Wilhelm Westhoven, who had been in the Public Works Department up to the beginning of this year, and who had forty-three years' experience of engineering, including the Forth Bridge, stated he had prepared a report of the work in question. At the present time he was acting as consultant engineer to the Municipality. Prior to taking this position he made the investigations. He was simply asked to arrive at the actual work done by the contractor. Witness then proceeded to give evidence on the different items.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and counsel proceeded to quote to his lordship the different items in the accounts in dispute to be referred to experts for reports.

Mr. Upington said, in view of the fact that the plan of Mr. Westhoven was not submitted to the plaintiff, he should be allowed to give some evidence on that point. Counsel did not think it would be fair that Mr. Westhoven's plan should go before the jury without an opportunity given to Mr. Collie.

[Hopley, J.: Can he tell us anything which you cannot?]

Mr. Upington: He maintains it is possible to construct that sewer underground in accordance with the quantities, and he has prepared a plan.

[Hopley, J.: Why did he not do so?]

Mr. Upington: Because he had to go according to the instructions of the engineer.

Hopley, J., thought it fair that the plaintiff should be allowed to give evidence.

The plaintiff (recalled) then gave evidence on his plan.

Mr. Upington said the first question to be decided was, Was there any evidence of fraud and collusion? Not a shred of evidence had been called to substantiate the charge brought against Collie. If that charge failed then the certificates were binding on the municipality. There were clauses in the contract providing that Bennett's measurements and Bennett's interpretation of the schedules were to be binding on both parties and the work was to be done to Bennett's satisfaction. Bennett had interpreted the contract in the way contended for by the plaintiff. In those circumstances the Council could not go into the question of over-payment or bad workmanship. On this point of law counsel referred to Lock v. Claridge (1 J., 356), Hansen and Schrueder v. Deure (3 E.D.C., 36), Wilson v. Holt (4 H.C., p. 220). Hudson on Building Contracts. Counsel held that the municipality broke the contract by failing to pay monthly and had no right to turn Collie off the works.

Mr. Searle said there were certain preliminary legal points to be decided before the questions of fact were submitted to the jury. They were (a) Disregarding the question of fraud, could the payments made on the architect's certificates be reviewed? (b) Upon what basis should the work be paid for? (c) Suppose the depth exceeded that given in the quantities at any particular place, did the second schedule apply? (d) Could Bennett apply whatever schedule he pleased? (e) Was there a legal contract for the branch mains?

On the last point counsel said no contract had been entered into in the form laid down by the Act of 1882 and so there was no legal contract; consequently on the authority of Dibben v. Cape Divisional Council (14 S.C.) the plaintiff could not claim damages for a breach.

On the first point, counsel contended that the certificates were only progress certificates and in no way binding on the Council. (Hudson on Building Contracts, Vol. 1, second edition, pp. 276, 297; McCarthy v. Visser, (22 S.C., 122). Bennett had awarded his certificates on the wrong basis, so the municipality could go behind them. The case of Hills v. The Colonial Government (14 C.T.R., 39), decided that point.

He would draw their attention to the evidence given by Mr. Olive about that schedule, that peculiar schedule given to him by Mr. Bennett, the effect of which would be that the work upon which Mr. Collie was then engaged would be according to the main schedule paid on a very much higher rate than on the proper schedule, although on that schedule the beginning portion of the work was priced at a lower rate, and the latter portion of the work was priced at a higher rate. It seemed pretty clear that the plaintiff had been paid on the wrong schedule. On the matter of the stormwater sewer, the only question for the jury was upon what basis it had to be dealt with, whether on the basis of the schedule on page 18, or on the main schedule. He understood his learned friend to say that Mr. Collie said his claim to be paid on the higher schedule was admitted by the engineer, but counsel could not find that statement in the evidence. Damages were claimed by Mr. Collie for not being able to go on with the house connections, and he claimed from £150 to £200 on that item. Of course, if the Council was right in taking up the position that he was overpaid and saying to him, "You must go on with the contract," and he was not able to do that, he could not claim any damages for the house connections. It was said there had been great laxity in the administration of the municipality, but counsel did not see what that had got to do with the case. The question was, what schedule Mr. Collie had to be paid upon? Was he paid on the right schedule? Counsel could not see there had been any laxity of administration except as regards the payments of these certificates, which might perhaps have been inquired into. He did not ask the jury to take any unfair or harsh view towards the plaintiff. It was admitted he had had all this money, and the system which was not completed was in a very unsatisfactory state, and a large amount of money would have to be spent by the Municipality to make it right. He asked the jury to take Mr. Westhofen's figures, which he submitted were true and reliable.

Mr. Uppington, in reply on a point of law, submitted that certificates of work done granted before the final certificate were binding on the parties. In the absence of fraud and collusion, the Municipality, in face of these certificates, could not now say that Mr. Bennett had made a fool of himself, that he had been careless and did not know his business. A very great injustice would result, if upon a contract of this kind which clearly contemplated that each section of the work was to be inspected and approved before it was filed in, the Municipality, after their architect had certified and the full length of the sewer filled in from end to end, could come at the last moment and bring experts to say that the work was three-quarters of an inch out and that the work had been done in an unsatisfactory manner. The contractor based his tender upon the quantities. This was not one of those cases where the quantities were supplied to the contractor, and they were not made the basis of the contract. The outstanding feature of the law of the case was that the quantities were the basis of the contract. Addressing the jury on the facts of the case, counsel said that something had been made of the fact that, acting upon his advice, the plaintiff had withdrawn certain claims. Counsel thought he had made it quite clear that in so doing the plaintiff was acting upon his advice, that from a legal point of view the settlement of October 19 could not be assailed whatever he may have thought at the time. The plaintiff's own evidence was no legal proof. In regard to the fraud and collusion, the charge was based on the flimsiest foundation. A single atom of evidence had not been produced to justify any honest and fair-minded jury in coming to the conclusion that there was an attempt to defraud the Municipality by collusion with Bennett. What did his learned friend rely upon? He referred to that wonderful letter—a letter written hurriedly in pencil to Pinker. If one had two years afterwards to give an explanation of every hurried note written in pencil, suddenly thrown into one's hands—to give an explanation of a phrase used or something of that kind, it would be a very difficult thing for most of them. But what about Pinker? Counsel thought he was going to say something about fraud and collusion, but Pinker, to whom the letter was written, did not say a word to that effect. There was not the slightest evidence of fraud, and it might more easily be said of Mr. Cowan that there was a benevolent arrangement between him and the Municipality. Wallace and Harris were most important witnesses, and his learned friend's explanation of their absence was anything but satisfactory.

Hopley, J., in summing up, pointed out that as a question of law, the jury must take the whole of the plans, specifications, drawings, etc., as a whole. And if they did so, it followed that the contention of the plaintiff that the lineal yards shown must be taken to be consecutive must fall away. The work must be done according to the levels set forth on the plans, and on this point of law he ruled that the plaintiff's contention was absolutely wrong. The next point of law was as to the interpretation to be placed upon the meaning of the two schedules. Clearly, in his lordship's opinion, the work under the contract was to be governed under the main schedule, especially as a sum of £750 had been specially provided for extra work under the contract. Another point of law was whether Mr. Bennett had any power under the contract to vary the prices under the schedules. He had no such power, and if he had made such variation, he had gone beyond his powers. The only time he could vary the prices was when nothing was provided for in the schedule of quantities. Mr. Bennett was as much bound by the terms of the contract as anyone else, and it was a ridiculous proposition of law that he had the power to make variations when he chose. As to the point whether there was a branch main contract or not, it was obvious that Collie was losing money on the main contract, and the Municipality, sympathising with him, were desirous that he should have that subsidiary contract under a separate schedule. But when a person contracted with a Corporation, he was supposed to know the statutory limits of the powers of such Corporation. As a matter of law, his lordship must hold that no such contract was ever concluded. On this point, however, he would leave it to the jury to say what were the damages, supposing he were wrong in the point of law, and such a contract had been concluded. Proceeding to the facts of the case, his lordship said it would be for the jury to say whether the plaintiff had been overpaid, and, if so, how much. He was not sure that they could come to a definite opinion on that point until the referee's report had been read, but they might determine upon which schedule, in their opinion, payment should have been made and that might, if necessary, be communicated to the referee. There was one piece of work of exceptional difficulty, and which seemed to be beyond the limit of the ordinary quantity prices, for that the jury might specially find for plaintiff. With regard to the stormwater contract and upon what basis payment should have been made, it did not appear to have been proved that the labour schedule applied. If, however, the jury found that the work was of such a mixed nature that the ordinary schedule did not apply, they might find that Mr. Bennett was justified in allowing labour prices. The assessment of damages with regard to the branch main contract would only be of use in case the ruling on the point of law that no such contract had been concluded, was appealed against. Then came the point whether the plaintiff had been wrongfully dismissed. If plaintiff had been overpaid they would have to consider as a matter of commonsense whether the municipality were not within their rights in withholding further advances and whether, notwithstanding this, the plaintiff should not have proceeded with the work. If they had wrongfully turned him off the works, the jury would say what amount of damages he had sustained; but if rightfully turned off no damages could arise. On the question of fraud and collusion Mr. Upington was quite right in saying that when such things were alleged they should be fully proved. It would be for the jury as commonsense men to say whether under all the circumstances there was sufficient to lead them to believe that there had been collusion between Collie and Bennett. As to the alleged defective work his lordship did not think the Council could go behind the engineer's certificate of approval, unless it were found that there had been collusion, otherwise as a matter of law the Council would not be entitled to recover damages.

The jury, after ninety minutes' deliberation, found a verdict for the defendants for £3,250, provided the amount of work done since the last certificate had been allowed for, otherwise it must be deducted, also less the excess amount charged on Bennett's figures over the amount allowed by Westhoven for the sixty-four yards allowed by Bennett at 270 shillings. Collusion not proved. The plaintiff was paid on a higher schedule and not on a lower. The labour schedule should be applied to the claim on stormwater contract.

On the branch mains, if damages, then £750. By a majority of six to three it was found that the plaintiff was rightly dismissed from the work. Unanimously it was found that the defendant have no claim for faulty work passed by Bennett. On the house connections, if damages, then £150. It was also found that this went with the main contract, which should be finished by the Council.

His Lordship said, when the referees handed in their report, counsel could move for judgment.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

THERON V. ESTATE THERON. { 1906.
 GLYNN V. ESTATE THERON { Nov. 14th.
 AND ANOTHER.

Attachment of inheritance—Judgment debt—Right of debtor.

A. obtained judgment against the applicant and an order for the attachment of the inheritance coming to him from the estate of his grandmother.

B. obtained a judgment against the applicant and an order for the attachment of the inheritance coming to him from the estate of his father. It appeared that there was no inheritance coming to the applicant from his mother, who died before his father, and that on the death of his father there was no inheritance due from his estate to the applicant. Although the executor of the father had notice of the order at the suit of B., he paid the money over to A.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to an order on the executor to pay the money to the Deputy Sheriff in execution of the judgment at the suit of B.

The first matter was an application for an order upon W. B. Shaw, the executor dative in the estate of the late Petrus Nicholas Theron, to pay over to the Deputy Sheriff the amount of the inheritance due to applicant (Mr. Theron, junior), and for costs against respondent de bonis propriis.

The second matter was an application for an amendment of an order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan on the 24th September, attaching for the benefit of applicant (J. A. Glynn) certain moneys falling due to P. N. Theron, junior, in the estate of Christina G. Theron. The amendment sought was to make the order applicable to the executor dative of the estate of P. N. Theron.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for Theron junior; Dr. Greer appeared for the executor dative and Glynn.

Mr. Jones said that in April, 1903, Theron, junior, became indebted to one Mrs. Goslett in the sum of £30, which apparently he was not able to pay. His grandmother died, and she left a will bequeathing some of her property to Theron's father. Theron's father died intestate, and as a share of his estate Theron (junior) was entitled to the sum of £29 7s. 11d. Theron (junior) ceded his right under the will, as Mr. Shaw said, in his letter to the petitioner's attorney, to Mrs. Goslett, and instructed Shaw on the 22nd August, 1906—a document which came out of the possession of Shaw—to pay over such sum as may be found due to him to Mrs. Goslett. Instead of doing so, Shaw paid the money to Glynn. He paid the other two heirs in intestacy of Theron's father. If his lordship held that it was a cession, and that as executor dative, Shaw was bound to pay out under the cession then that disposed of the whole of the matter. Young Theron said that the inheritance ought not to have been paid to Glynn in execution of the writ taken out by him, but that it should have been paid under the cession to Mrs. Goslett, and, if not under that cession, then under the original order of the Court, which, when Mrs. Goslett got judgment against him, declared that inheritance specifically executable to that judgment. Instead of doing that, Shaw, as executor dative, had handed over to Glynn on an order of this Court, which did not refer to him; he had paid over to Glynn on an order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan on an application which asked that certain inheritance due to Theron out of his grandmother's estate should be declared executable, and an order on the executor in the grandmother's estate to pay the money in execution of that judgment. Counsel submitted that there was no right on the part of Shaw to pay out this money, that he should be held liable for these amounts, and that he should pay costs.

Dr. Greer submitted that the executor was bound to act under the order of the Court, which, it was perfectly clear, was intended to interdict the money in his hands. He had not paid out to the other heirs their share in the estate, but had only made an advance. The executor had acted bona fide throughout, and has obeyed what was the intention of the order of the Court at the time.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is a somewhat extraordinary entanglement in this case. It seems clear that the order which was made by Mr. Justice Buchanan could not possibly affect any inheritance coming to Theron out of the estate of his father. It was an order upon the estate of his grandmother, but it appears that the grandmother died before the father. The father, therefore, became the heir of his mother, and upon the death of the father, any inheritance coming to Theron would be an inheritance coming to him from his father, and not from his grandmother, and, consequently, the order of Mr. Justice Buchanan could not be interpreted to apply to the money which is now in question. It seems, however, that Shaw, who was the executor of the father's estate, paid this money over to Glynn, upon the strength of the Judge's order, although Shaw ought really to have known that this order did not apply to that amount, more especially bearing in mind that he had in his possession at the time an order calling upon him as the executor to pay the money coming to him (Theron) out of his father's estate to Mrs. Goslett. There is a technical difficulty in this case as to whether Mrs. Goslett should not have been a party to the present application, but no objection has been raised on that ground, and certainly Theron himself has an interest in the matter to see that the money goes to the person to whom he originally intended it to go, and who under her writ of execution would be entitled to this property. She was the first to obtain a writ as against this particular inheritance, and she would have a preference in respect of it. At the time of the judgment an order was made that this particular inheritance was to be attached, so that the only legal attachment in existence now is an attachment at the suit of Mrs. Goslett, and it appears to me that Theron has sufficient interest in the matter to justify the Court now in granting an order upon his application that the money shall be paid over to the Deputy-Sheriff upon the writ which was granted at the suit of Mrs. Goslett. Then there is a further application to amend the order which had been previously made by Mr. Justice Buchanan, so as to extend that also to this estate. Well, I do not see how I can well do that. That order was made to attach a particular inheritance which is in the estate of the grandmother, and at this stage, after an attachment has already taken place at the suit of Mrs. Goslett, I don't think the Court can amend the order which had previously been made by Mr. Justice Buchanan. That order must stand, and no amendment of it can be made. There is the further application that the costs be paid de bonis propriis, on which I should like to hear counsel.

Dr. Greer submitted that Shaw had acted bona fide throughout.

De Villiers, C.J.: There won't be much of the inheritance left if the costs are deducted. The Court will dismiss Glynn's petition, with costs. As to Theron's petition, an order must be made in terms of the first prayer, and as to costs, it is a very doubtful point whether Shaw should not pay costs personally de bonis propriis. It is just possible, it may be probable, that he honestly believed that the money was to be paid out of the estate of the father. I do not think it would be fair to make the estate liable for all costs, but to the extent of £10, costs will come out of the estate; for the rest, he must pay costs de bonis propriis.

Mr. Jones asked that £10 be applied preferably to the payment of the applicant's costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose Mr. Shaw would be good to pay the whole balance of the costs. Applicant's costs, to the extent of £10, will come out of the estate of P. N. Theron; beyond that amount to be paid de bonis propriis by Shaw.

Ex parte MYBURGH.

Acts 47 of 1899 and 40 of 1896—
Villages — Communal allotments—Construction of Acts.

In order to give an intelligible meaning to the expression "The several villages in the district of Elliot" used in the second section of Act 40 of 1896.

Held, that it was intended to refer to the "Communal allotments" in the district of Elliot mentioned in the first section of Act 47 of 1899.

This was an application for an order compelling the Registrar of Deeds to register a mortgage bond by petitioner in favour of J. E. B. Aling for £200 over certain erf at Maxonga's Hoek, district Elliot. Petitioner stated that there were five villages in the district of Elliot and the original title deeds of the erven in these villages contained the conditions that the land should not be alienated or hypothecated. By the Agricultural Further Amendment Extension Act (40 of 1906) these conditions had been eliminated from the title deeds of erven in the said several villages. The Registrar of Deeds had refused to register a bond by petitioner over his erf at Maxonga's Hoek.

The Registrar of Deeds reported that Act 40 of 1906 appeared to him merely to release "village" erven from the operation of the restrictive conditions regarding alienation and mortgage to which the grants were made subject. The erf in question was described as situate on the commonage of Maxonga's Hoek, although in the majority of cases in which he had refused registration the properties had been specifically described as agricultural erven. The grants of village erven proper did not contain any restrictive conditions, but it was possible that Parliament might not have been aware of that.

There was a supplementary report by the Assistant Registrar of Deeds, in which it was stated that petitioner also sought to mortgage land described as "Agricultural Erf No. 6 of the Maxonga's Hoek, European Communal Allotments." This was not a "village" erf nor was the annex a "village" erf, as there was only one village properly so-called in the district of Elliot, viz., Elliot. Maxonga's Hoek and the other European settlements of Gubenxa, Embokotwa Corinor and Noah's Ark were communal allotments and not villages.

Mr. McGregor appeared for the petitioner; Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Registrar of Deeds, to submit to the judgment of the Court.

Mr. McGregor said that the leading principle would be to give such an interpretation to the Act as to give some meaning to the Act. The whole fight was to the word "village," and if Maxonga's Hoek and the other collocations of residences described by the Registrar of Deeds as "communal allotments" were not villages then there would be nothing for the Act to operate upon, as the erven in the admitted village of Elliot did not contain the restrictive conditions abolished by the Act. The Act said "several villages." Beal on the cardinal rules of legal interpretation (p. 153) said that an Act should not be construed so as to reduce it to an absurdity. Counsel cited the cases of the Duke of Burleigh (62 L.T.R., 94) and The Lion (L.R. 2, P.C. 525), Millar v. Salomons (21 L.J., Ex. 21). The absurdity was that one would be making the Legislature make things null and void, which did not exist. As to their being agricultural erven, the title of the Act of 1906 referred to agricultural erven.

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the report of the Assistant Registrar, there is only one "village" properly so called in the district of Elliot, viz., the village of Elliot itself. The Act No. 40 of 1906 assumes that there are more villages than one. The words are: "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in Act 47, 1899, or any other law, the following conditions appearing in the title deeds of erven in the several villages in the district of Elliot shall, from and after promulgation of this Act, cease to have effect, and shall be rendered null and void." An intelligible meaning must be given to this enactment. On reference to the Act 47 of 1899, I find that the word "villages" is not used, but the words "communal allotments." "Communal allotments" there mentioned are Gubenxa, Embokotwa, Corinor, Noah's Ark, and Maxonga's Hoek. Now, it appears to me that the word "villages" in the Act of 1906 was intended to refer to the "communal allotments" of the Act of 1899. But then the Registrar of Deeds further points out that the erven which are now in question are agricultural erven, and he assumes that if they are agricultural erven they cannot be treated as erven in the villages. But I confess I do not see the inconsistency. You may have erven in a village which are, to all intents and purposes, agricultural. We know, as a matter of history, that most of our villages have started with erven which would be large enough for purposes of agriculture on a small scale, but still they would be agricultural erven, and it seems to me that the fact that some of the erven here in question are agricultural does not prevent them from falling within the definition of the Act, viz., "erven within the several villages of the district of Elliot." As there would be no way of giving effect to the use of the words "several villages" unless these communal allotments are taken to be villages, I think the Court should give effect to the intention of the Legislature. The Registrar mentions, further, the fact that if you take his strict construction as to the meaning of the Act, then those village erven which he would seem to consider would fall within the Act would be wholly out of the question, because he admits that in regard to those erven the conditions mentioned in this Act do not appear at all. So in order to give this Act any intelligible meaning—and I suppose we must assume that the Legislature did have some meaning in passing the Act—the only course is to give that meaning which I have already stated—that the communal allotments of the Act of 1899 are the "villages" which the Act of 1906 was intended to refer to. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the order must be granted as prayed.

Mr. McGregor (in answer to the Court) said that they did not apply for costs, although there was a prayer to that effect in the petition.

De Villiers, C.J., said that an order would be granted as prayed, except as to costs.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ROSENBLATT AND DE BEER { 1906.
V. HUTTON. { Nov. 14th.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a cheque for £376 6s. 9d., with interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE JURGENS V. AREND AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on certain two mortgage bonds for £550 and £200 respectively, with interest, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest, and for £2 ls. premiums of insurance; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated and the rents to be declared executable.

Order granted.

AFRICAN HOMES TRUST V. WHITE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest and instalments; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Close read an affidavit by defendant's agent, and submitted that the case should be allowed to stand over sine die. Defendant was absent from the Colony. Plaintiffs were duly protected, and it was desirable that defendant should be supplied with further particulars of the account. It was necessary that Mr. White should be here to check the account.

De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think there is sufficient ground stated in the affidavit for a postponement. The bond, on the fact of it, is absolute, the money is due, and there is no allegation in the affidavit that any part has been paid off. On that the defendant's agent says it is desirable that a full settlement of accounts between plaintiff and defendant should be furnished, and says apparently the defendant's indebtedness on the bond is less than £1,000. "Apparently," it is said; it does not say what is his reason for saying that. There must be provisional sentence, and the property will be declared executable.

HIRSCH AND CO. V. KRUGER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £77, with interest from the 30th June, 1906, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BLUMBERG AND SON V. VAN DER WALT.

Mr. P. S. J. Jones moved for provisional sentence upon a certain mortgage bond for £110, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE BATTISS AND ANOTHER V. MACKENZIE.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a second mortgage bond for £208 10s., with interest from the 1st July, 1906, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable; counsel also applied for execution to be leviable on defendant's movable property first.

Order granted.

WEBER AND OTHERS V. VAN DER WESTHUIZEN.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

HIDDINGH V. ESTATE MERRINGTON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100, payable at the Standard Bank, Claremont, with interest.

Order granted.

ISAACS V. KINSBERG.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £83 6s. 8d., payable at Cape Town.

Order granted.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. KOPELOWITZ AND BERMAN.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £198 10s. 8d., payable at the Standard Bank, Simon's Town, with interest, plus charges for noting expenses.

Order granted.

FALK STADLEMAN AND CO. V. PIKETHLEY AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on certain four bills of exchange, three for £50 each and one for £54 15s. 2d., with interest and costs.

G. G. Pitkethley appeared, and said that the other defendant, his brother, was in the Transvaal. He offered to pay £50 a month towards the discharge of his obligations.

Mr. Bailey said that he was instructed by his attorneys that they had no directions from the bank as to accepting this offer.

Defendant said that he carried on business in Albert-road, Woodstock. He had made approaches to the plaintiff, but without coming to terms.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You must try and come to terms with the plaintiff. They are entitled to their judgment.]

Defendant said that meant that his estate would be sequestrated.

Mr. Bailey, in answer to the Court, said that the plaintiffs were a limited company carrying on business in England.

De Villiers, C.J. (to defendant): I must give judgment, but I hope the plaintiffs will see their way to give you consideration. It will be for their own interests to accept your £50 a month. Perhaps this expression of opinion from the Court may have some influence with the plaintiffs. Execution will be stayed for a fortnight, but leave reserved to plaintiffs to apply for an execution in the meantime if so advised.

ROODEBLOEM ESTATES V. HORWITZ.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a certain mortgage bond for £83, with interest from the 1st July, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BERNARD V. VAN ROOYEN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against defendant upon the balance of an unsatisfied judgment of this Court, and costs.

Defendant did not appear.

Order granted.

WRENSCH V. FRYER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones mentioned this matter, which was an application for a decree of civil imprisonment. He said that the summons had, by mistake, been made returnable for to-morrow (Thursday), but he understood that defendant was now in court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that, as long as the defendant was in court, the case might be called.

Mr. Jones moved for a decree upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £36 1s. 1d., and costs, a writ of nulla bona having been made.

Defendant went into the box, and said that he was quite unable to make any payments.

He was carrying on business as an auctioneer, but his earnings were not sufficient to enable him to do more than pay expenses, and the instalments of 10s. a month which he was paying to other creditors.

Cross-examined: He would be prepared to make an offer of 10s. a month.

Decree granted, with costs, execution to be suspended upon payment of 10s. a month, with leave to plaintiff to apply for an increase of monthly payments on satisfactory proof that defendant has means.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

JOLLY V. JOLLY. { 1906.
{ Nov. 14th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329e, for a certain notarial deed of separation to be made an order of Court. Consent paper had been filed.

Order granted.

S.A. FISHERIES AND GOLD STORAGE V. ZANKELOWITZ.

Plaintiff in reconvention—Defendant in reconvention barred—Judgment by default.

The defendant in a suit pleaded to the declaration and filed a claim in reconvention. The defendant in reconvention, not having filed his plea in time after demand, was barred from pleading.

Held, that the plaintiff in reconvention was entitled to judgment by default.

Mr. Russell (for plaintiffs in reconvention) moved for judgment in terms of the claim in reconvention for £73 3s. 5d., goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs, defendant in reconvention (Zankelowitz) having been barred.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What has become the claim in convention?

Mr. Russell said that he did not know. The claim in reconvention was for a liquidated demand, while the claim in convention was for damages.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the defendant in this case had instituted a separate action for the amount of the debt he would certainly have been entitled to take advantage of the rule, and the case could have been set down by default. I do not think he should now be penalised, because, instead of instituting a separate action, he has brought his action by way of a claim in reconvention. I think he ought to have the same rights as if he had been the plaintiff in convention. You may, therefore, take the order.

PARSONS V. BESSELL.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £33 11s. 6d., balance of account for work and labour done, and material supplied.
Order granted

ETTMANN AND CO. V. JEPPE.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £110 5s. 2d., balance of account for goods sold and cash advanced, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

BUNCIMAN V. BRITISH FREE RIGHTS BENEFIT SOCIETY.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was an application for leave to sign judgment against respondents for not proceeding with a certain action within the time prescribed by rules of Court. There was also an application for costs of a certain matter which had been heard by Mr. Justice Maasdorp. Under the circumstances it might perhaps be the desire of the Court that the matter should be mentioned to Mr. Justice Maasdorp.

Mr. Gutsche (for respondents) said he agreed with his learned friend.

The matter was ordered to stand over until it could be mentioned to Mr. Justice Maasdorp.

SMITH AND CO. V. SASSO AND CO.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, in terms of plaintiff's declaration, for £387.
Order granted.

JOSEPH AND CO. AND OTHERS V. FOURIE AND FOURIE.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea in terms of declaration for an order of ejectment against Louis J. Fourie from certain portion of a farm purchased by plaintiffs from the estate.

Order granted, defendant to quit within a fortnight.

STEER V. SHEERWOOD.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £124 8s. 9d., balance of account for professional services.
Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte LEVY. { 1906.
{ Nov. 14th.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Jacob Levy, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights. Defendant was stated to be residing in London, England. The parties were married in England. Counsel submitted that the petitioner had acquired a domicile separate from her husband, and quoted a dictum of Mr. Justice Kotze in Atkinson v. Atkinson (2 Transvaal Reports, 212).

De Villiers, C.J., said that there was no prima facie proof of matrimonial domicile in this country. The parties had never lived together in this colony. The object of the application was to alter the status of the parties, and the country of domicile could only affect their status.

Dr. Greer said that the petitioner had been in this country since January, 1904.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How could she acquire a domicile, supposing she had been here? The husband has never been in this country.]

Dr. Greer said that he did not think he could carry the matter further.

De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think this is a case at all events in which the Court should grant leave to sue by edictal citation. According to the affidavit the parties were married in England. Then the petitioner came out to live here with her sister, and now, because she has lived here for some time, and acquired, as she says, a domicile here, she claims to be entitled to sue her husband, who has remained in England, and who never came out here, with a view ultimately of obtaining a divorce against him. Certainly, the Court has extended the principle very far in assisting people to get divorces, but this would be beyond any precedent as far as I can see. The application must be refused.

Ex parte ESTATE CRAWFORD.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out to petitioner, the surviving spouse, a sum of £8 a month from a balance of £496 10s. remaining to be invested.

Order in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte MOKOBOTUA AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, authorising the respondents, Rosenblatt and De Beer, attorneys, Vryburg, to pay over to applicants a sum of £135 6s. 8d.

Rule absolute, on condition that Mr. De Beer's taxed costs be paid.

FEDERAL COLD STORAGE, LTD. V.
BUFFALO COLD STORAGE, LTD.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for an order in terms of consent paper for the postponement of an action brought by the Buffalo Company against the Federal Company until February next, and a commission to be appointed to take evidence of certain witnesses, whom the parties may call before Mr. Mackarness, in London.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

LINSCOTT V. LINSCOTT.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights, plaintiff to have custody of the child, and maintenance at the rate of £3 a month.

Order granted.

HIND V. HIND.

Mr. Howes moved for a decree of divorce, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE COUTTS.

Mr. Payne moved, on the petition of the executor of the late James Coutts and Jane Coutts, for leave to sue one Friedrich Vockerdt, whose whereabouts are unknown, by edictal citation upon a mortgage bond for £150.

Leave granted, citation returnable on the 12th December, one publication in an East London newspaper.

Ex parte BRINK AND OTHERS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order authorising the S.A. Association to pay out a sum of £1,200 from the estate of the late J. A. Laubacher, sen. The petitioners were the grandchildren of the late Mr. Laubacher. The money was needed in consequence of a certain mortgage bond having been called up. The petitioner's mother waived her right to the said sum.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte DOMINGO.

Mr. Howes moved for leave to assume the death of petitioner's husband, Sidney Domingo, who was supposed to have perished, with nine other fishermen, in a motor-boat, which went out in Algoa Bay last May. After the boat had gone out a storm was experienced, and neither boat nor occupants had since been seen or heard of. Deceased was entitled to certain sums from benefit societies.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think the circumstances are sufficient to justify the Court in taking it that the man has died. An order will be granted.

Ex parte SUMMERFIELD.

Mr. Palmer moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband Joseph J. Summerfield in forma pauperis for divorce, by reason of his alleged adultery at Somerset West. It was stated that respondent had been arrested on a charge of fraud, and was lodged in gaol at Parow. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule granted on counsel's report, calling on defendant to show cause on the 12th December why plaintiff shall not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY
CO., LTD. V. DISTRIBUTING SYNDI-CATE FOR COLD STORAGE.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.) was for applicants; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) was for respondents.

This matter came before the Court on an application by the Imperial Cold Storage for removal of bar.

Mr. Schreiner said that he now had to apply for an order in terms of consent, which provided that the bar should be removed, that the defendants should furnish their affidavit of discovery by the end of the month, and that Mr. Alfred Theodore Hennessy should be appointed official referee, with the powers under the Act No. 29 of 1898, costs to be costs in the cause.

Order in terms of consent paper.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE DE BRUYN.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of creditors representing claims for £1,800, for the appointment of Martin Sachs as provisional trustee of the estate of Jacob George de Bruyn, general dealer, Kenhardt.

Mr. Sachs was appointed provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business pending the election of trustee.

Ex parte TOWNSEND.

Dr. Rainsford moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Samuel Robinson Paul Townsend in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner said that she was married to respondent in Hull, England. They afterwards resided in Cape Town. Defendant left her for the purpose of joining Remington's Scouts.

Petitioner appeared in person, and said that she lived in Tamboer's Kloof. She had no information as to respondent's whereabouts. He was last heard of at Pretoria.

Dr. Rainsford said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule granted calling upon defendant to show cause on the 12th December why plaintiff shall not be granted leave to sue in forma pauperis, and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Pretoria News," citation to be published at the same time as rule along with interdict and notice of trial, and to be returnable on the 1st February.

De Villiers, C.J., said the effect of the order was that although the rule was returnable on the 12th December, the petitioner would be allowed to serve the citation and the other notices by the same advertisement as the rule in case the defendant could not be served personally.

Ex parte GOLDEN MILE GOLD MINING AND DEVELOPING SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Roux moved for an order for the winding up of the Syndicate, and the appointment of Frank H. Cook as liquidator.

Winding-up order granted, and Mr. Cook appointed liquidator, security to be given to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court.

Ex parte DOUALLIER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on the petition of Johanna S. M. Douallier, who resides at Sutherland, for leave to mortgage certain property for the purpose of having necessary repairs carried out. The Master reported that he was not inclined to favour the application, for two reasons, viz., it was stipulated in the will that the erf should not be mortgaged, and it appeared that the parties had lived on the property for some years, during which they should have kept it in a state of repair. Counsel submitted that this was a case in which relief should be given by the Court, and he cited ex parte Slabbert and others (14 C.T. Reports, 62), ex parte Kotze and another (12 C.T. Reports, 718), and In re Jansen's Estate (3 C.T. Reports, 238).

De Villiers, C.J.: I think that the case must stand over for more information, especially upon the point as to why petitioner did not during the time she was living on the property see to the repairs. Cannot Douallier have the repairs done for the benefit of the children?

Mr. Bisset said that it did not appear that Douallier had means. He would obtain further information on that point also.

Ex parte GILLANDERS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, on the petition of the widow of the late Dr. John Lyall Grant Gillanders, for leave to sue the Peiserton Diamond Mining and Estate Co., of Peiserton, district of Kimberley, in forma pauperis, for £5,000 damages for the loss of her husband, owing, it was alleged, to the negligence of respondents, or their servants. Dr. Gillanders had been in the employ of the company as medical officer, and it was alleged that he had met with his death owing to an abandoned mine having been left unfenced. Counsel added that Mr. Upington, for whom he was holding the brief, was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule granted on Mr. Upington's report, returnable on December 12.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte HAMMAN. { 1906.
Nov. 16th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved as a matter of urgency for leave to petitioner, who is articulated to an attorney at Victoria West, to be absent from his articles of clerkship, from November 13 to December 15, in order to prepare for his matriculation examination.

De Villiers, C.J.: Of course, he will make up the time afterwards?

Mr. Van Zyl said that that was so. Order granted as prayed.

SCHWANER V. HOLMES.

Partnership—Dissolution—Errors or omissions—Bad debts—Depreciation of assets.

The plaintiff and the defendant, who were partners in trade, agreed to a dissolution upon the following terms: the defendant to purchase the plaintiff's interest for £5,000, but in case the defendant should discover any "errors or omissions" in the partnership books and accounts within six months after dissolution, such accounts shall be rectified at joint cost. It appeared that, according to the books, the value of the plaintiff's share of assets was £7,000. It appeared also that the defendant knew before the agreement was made that there were bad debts owing to the partnership, and that there had been depreciation in some of the assets.

Held in an action for the balance of the purchase price, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the price as part of the "errors or omissions" the amount of bad debts and depreciation.

This was an action brought by Carl Ludwig Theodor Schwaner, of Upington, against Manuel Grey Holmes, also of Upington, to recover certain sums upon promissory notes made by defendant in favour of plaintiff in connection with a dissolution of partnership.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that defendant was indebted to him upon a promissory note for £1,000, dated January 18, 1906, and payable at the Standard Bank, Prieska, on June 30, 1906, with interest, at 8 per cent., from January 1. Defendant was also indebted to plaintiff in £127 6s. 9d., balance of a certain promissory note for £838, dated January 16, and payable on June 30, 1906, with interest at 8 per cent., from January 1. The former note was not provided for at maturity. The latter note was only provided for to the amount of £743 14s. 6d. Plaintiff said that application was made for provisional sentence on the notes on September 12, 1906, and he was ordered to go into the principal case (16 C.T.R., 836). Plaintiff went on to say that he was liable for a sum of £184 9s., under an agreement dated December 23, 1905, between the parties who had heretofore carried on business in partnership under the style of W. J. Holmes and Co., by which it was stipulated that plaintiff should bear all losses exceeding £500, which might be incurred in respect of a contract with the Colonial Government for supplies for the police, which said sum of £184 9s. represented the amount of losses in excess of £500, actually incurred on the said contract. Plaintiff claimed payment of £1,000 and £127 6s. 9d., with interest, as aforesaid, less £184 9s.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted execution of the promissory notes described in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the declaration, but denied indebtedness to plaintiff in the sums of £1,800 and £127 6s. 9d., with interest as therein set out, and said that the said notes were made by him in favour of the plaintiff subject to the terms of the agreement of dissolution of partnership entered into between the parties on the 23rd December, 1905. In terms of clause 5 of the agreement, defendant had made an examination of the partnership books and accounts, as a result of which he had discovered errors and omissions amounting to £947 10s. 3d., which sum, together with £184 9s., admitted by the plaintiff, he had been and was entitled to bring into account against the amounts of the said promissory notes. He had rendered a statement to the plaintiff of the said amount of £947 10s. 3d. The amount of the promissory notes in which he was indebted to plaintiff was £1,838, with the interest thereon, £73 10s. 4d. Defendant said he was entitled to deduct the sum of £947 10s. 3d. as aforesaid, with interest thereon, amounting to £35 10s. 7d., and the sum of £184 9s., admitted by plaintiff, thereby leaving a balance due to plaintiff of £743 14s. 6d., which amount was provided by defendant against presentation of the said notes.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted execution of the agreement of dissolution, but said that the sums claimed to be deducted by defendant did not arise by virtue of errors and omissions in the said partnership books and accounts, and that the defendant was not entitled under the said agreement to deduct the same or any portion thereof from his indebtedness upon the said promissory notes. The said sums appeared largely to represent alleged bad debts, for which the defendant himself was solely responsible, the partnership business having been taken over by him as a going concern, inclusive of outstandings.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer) was for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that it lay upon the defendant to make good his account as against the plaintiffs' liquidated acknowledgment of debt.

Mr. Gardiner said that he accepted the onus.

Manuel Grey Holmes (the defendant) was called. He said that previous to entering into partnership with the plaintiff in 1901 he was a member of the police force. He had no knowledge of books. Balance-sheets were drawn up from time to time showing the position of the business. In September, 1905, he desired to discontinue the business, and he communicated with the plaintiff, on the basis that plaintiff should take over and buy out witness's share. Schwaner produced a statement in which bad debts and depreciation were shown. His share of the capital was shown at £6,397. Schwaner offered to buy him out on that basis, but he declined, and he made proposals with a view of buying out Schwaner on the same basis. Plaintiff took stock to the end of November, but he did not make an allowance for the bad debts. Witness agreed to pay plaintiff £5,500 less his share of an acetylene gas plant, making a net amount of £5,338. In this agreement no stipulation was made that plaintiff should not carry on business in or near Upington, and, as a matter of fact, he was carrying on a business at Upington. He believed at the time the balance-sheet was not correct, and his belief had since been confirmed. He did not have an examination of the statement made at the time. Since he had taken over he had employed Mr. Page, a bookkeeper from Cape Town, to go into the books, and it had been found that a number of bad debts and disputed accounts had been included in the balance-sheet, which he claimed could now be brought up under the heading of "errors." In the stock-sheet a quantity of German sausages had been included which ought not to have appeared there. He had opened a tin before the statement in November was made up, and had found that the sausages were bad.

Continuing, witness gave evidence in regard to several other items, which he considered should be treated as "errors," instancing a charge made by Mr. Schwaner of £78 for a trip to Port Elizabeth and Cape Town, for which witness said the business should only be debited with £25. He had also charged £51 as salary of the bookkeeper, Mr. Page, for two months during which he had been engaged in going over the old books.

Alfred Newton Foot, incorporated accountant, said that in drawing up a balance-sheet in case of dissolution of partnerships, it was usual to write off bad debts, and make provision for such as were doubtful. He would not, as auditor, sign a balance-sheet that did not include an allowance for bad debts and depreciation, unless he had the consent of his principal.

Cross-examined: Witness knew nothing about the present case, and if it were mutually agreed that no depreciation or allowance for bad debts should be included in the balance-sheet, then it would not be necessary to show these items.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing a balance-sheet is made up, and is shown that there is a balance in favour of a partner for £8,000, and the business is bought for £5,000, would not you assume that it is upon the basis of something of that kind—depreciation or bad debts?]

Witness: You would assume that some allowance had been made for something.

Further evidence was given by Arthur Cecil Shore, bookkeeper, employed by defendant and Frederick James Page, of Cape Town, who had been employed by defendant to investigate the accounts. Both witnesses thought the amount of the discounts on Colonial goods bought by the firm should have been allowed for in the stocktaking in addition to having been allowed in the discount and interest account. The late firm got the benefit of the discounts, and the stock should be taken less the amount of the discount.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would like to hear counsel for defendant on the point as to bad debts.

Mr. Gardiner said that in the partnership agreement provision was made that accounts should be prepared each year. What the parties tried to arrive at in the dissolution was that each should pay the other his share, less due allowances. It was contemplated in the dissolution that these accounts might have to be corrected, clause 5 contemplating errors and omissions. It was clear that errors amounting to less than £100 should not be reckoned in any settlement. A proper partnership account should have been drawn up between the parties, and the authorities were clear that such an account must show bad debts and depreciation. He quoted Pixley's "Duties of Auditors" (p.p. 283 and 320), and the "Encyclopædia of Accounting" (Vol. I, p. 211). He argued that this could not be said to be a true balance-sheet disclosing the real position of the parties.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then he pays over £2,000 less than the amount appearing in the account.]

But we have no evidence that that was the reason why the less amount was taken.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is no explanation why it should be otherwise.]

Mr. Gardiner pointed out that in Schwaner's offer Holmes would have had to go out of business in Upington, while under the agreement which had been made Schwaner was still carrying on business at Upington. When Schwaner wanted to buy he took into account the bad debts in his statement of September. When he was selling, however, he brought up a balance-sheet on quite a different basis. There was a bad debts account which had never been written up. The leaving out of the bad debts account was an omission from the books which the defendant was entitled to have rectified. Depreciation stood on the same footing. The figures taken by defendant were those which had previously been taken by Schwaner. Counsel also dealt with other aspects of the case.

Mr. Schreiner having been briefly heard,

The plaintiff was called, and gave evidence with regard to the item of £78 charged for a trip to Port Elizabeth and Cape Town, which he said he made on behalf of the business. As to an item of £6 5s. 9d. for his son's hotel expenses, witness considered that he was entitled to charge this to the business, as his son was coming down from the Transvaal to help the business.

De Villiers, C.J.: Plaintiff and defendant were partners. On the 23rd December, 1905, they entered into an agreement for the dissolution of the partnership. The main conditions of this agreement are these: The defendant agreed to purchase all the right, title, and interest of the plaintiff in and to the one-half part and share of the partnership and property, movable as well as immovable, for the sum of £5,338, with certain exceptions. The above amount of £5,338 is to be payable as follows: £3,500 sterling in cash, £838 on the 30th June, 1906, and £1,000 on the 30th June, 1906. I will leave out the unimportant parts which do not enter into the consideration of this case.

The important clause is the one before the last. It is there agreed that "should the said Holmes (the defendant) desire to make an examination of the partnership books and accounts, such examination shall be concluded within the period of six calendar months from date hereof, and in the event of any errors or omissions being discovered, any such shall be rectified at our joint costs and benefit, but none such under the total amount of £100 sterling shall be considered." Plaintiff now sues upon the promissory note of £838, less a certain sum paid on account, and the sum of £1,000 with interest. The defendant sets up the defence that errors and omissions have been discovered, and that if these errors and omissions be rectified in terms of the contract that there will be nothing owing by the defendant to the plaintiff. The most important of the alleged errors or omissions are bad debts and the depreciation of the property. It is said that the amount of the purchase price was arrived at by taking the bad debts which appeared in the account which was rendered in November as being good debts, and, if I understand the argument correctly, the contention is that if the bad debts had been deducted the balance would have appeared less in favour of Schwaner and that, consequently, the purchase price would also have been proportionately less. I could have understood that argument if there were anything to show that the defendant was not fully aware at the time when he entered into this contract of the existence of bad debts. He had complete control over the books. The bookkeeper who was there would have given him any information, and the accounts which had been furnished to him with a view to a purchase by the present plaintiff himself showed that the bad debts and the depreciation of property, to which I shall presently refer, were also specified there. The defendant, therefore, knew well that there were bad debts and that there had been considerable depreciation of the property. With that full knowledge, he enters into this contract for the payment of £5,338 for a share of a partnership which, according to the accounts, was worth more than £2,000 above that amount. The value was £8,230, according to the accounts, and he paid £5,338, therefore £2,892 less than the value. Then we must allow for certain items, but certainly it was £2,000 in round figures. Now, this was not a case of a bargain: it was not a case of one person trying to make a good bargain with another, but it was a case of a partnership account, a settlement upon a fair and equitable basis. I cannot see the reason for this agreement to give £5,338 for property worth £8,230, unless the defendant had fully borne in mind the bad debts of the existence of which he knew, and also the depreciation. Now, in my opinion, the words "errors and omissions" cannot by any conceivable twist of language be held to include the bad debts or depreciation, which could not be looked upon in any sense either as an error or omission in the accounts, and, therefore, the main items upon which the defendant relies in reduction of his account fall to the ground. Then there is another item of some importance, and that is the discounts. But after a careful consideration of the matter I don't think that these ought to be allowed. Defendant says that if the accounts had been somewhat differently framed the margin of difference would have been less than it was. But there is nothing to show that the prices would have been different if the entries had been differently made. It appears to me that the form in which these entries took place was the correct form, and I cannot see that in the result there would have been any conceivable difference if discounts had been allowed by way of reduction of stock instead of in the way it was done, as it appeared in the profit and loss account. So that that item also, in my opinion, should not be allowed. Then we come to the remaining items. Admissions are made in regard to items of £15 odd, £19 odd, £18 odd, and £4 odd, but they would not amount to £100, which is stipulated for in the contract, and even if we add the somewhat doubtful one of Schalkwyk, £10, it would not come up to the amount of £100. There is another item of £78 18s. 6d., expenditure by the plaintiff in going to Cape Town and Port Elizabeth. The defendant claims that that should be reduced. Now, in my opinion, if the plaintiff did go to Cape Town and Port Elizabeth on business connected with the partnership, the amount is a fair and reasonable charge. If that charge is allowed, then the total amount of errors and omissions would not come up to £100. The words of the agreement are: "In the event of any errors or omissions being discovered, any such shall be rectified at our joint costs and benefit, but none such under the total amount of £100 sterling shall be considered." If, therefore, it is not shown that the errors and omissions reach the amount of £100, I do not think the defendant would be entitled to charge any part of his expenses in engaging a bookkeeper under this contract. The bookkeeper has not succeeded in showing that the errors and omissions amount to £100, and, therefore, I do not think that the expenses of the bookkeeper ought to be allowed in this case. Then I come to the last item in dispute, and that is the charges made by the plaintiff for work and labour done by him after December 1, 1905. The view which I take of this case is that, although the account made up to the 30th November, 1905, did not form the basis of the contract, because it is not attached to the contract, yet I do consider that the parties intended that the state of things existing at that date should be the state of things regulating the accounts between themselves, and I do not think that it could have been intended that the plaintiff should be allowed after the 1st December, the date when all the accounts were made up, to draw any amounts in accordance with the previous contract from the partnership assets, and I consider, therefore, that the £33 12s. 7d., which he drew after the 1st December, should not be allowed, and that the defendant would fairly be entitled to deduct that amount from the total claim made against him. But that amount would not be deducted by way of errors or omissions, because it is a mistake made after the 1st December. I think it is an item that the plaintiff should not be allowed to retain, and that the amount of £33 12s. 7d. should be deducted from the total claim made by the plaintiff. However, the judgment as to the other items does not, as I say, reach the total of £100, and I am afraid I cannot allow part to defendant under the contract. Judgment must, therefore, be for plaintiff for the amount claimed as prayed, less £33 12s. 7d., with interest from the 1st January, 1906.

Mr. Schreiner applied for the plaintiff and his bookkeeper (Mr. Ledger) to be declared necessary witnesses.

De Villiers, C.J.: Judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for £909 5s. 2d., with interest as prayed from January 1, 1906, and with costs, including plaintiff's expenses as a witness, and the expenses of the witness Ledger, who was not called.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. OPPELS. { 1906.
Nov. 16th.

Act 27 of 1882, Sec. 8 (3).

Hopley, J., mentioned a case that had come before him as judge of the week. The accused, Oppels, was charged under the Police Offences Act, with being found without lawful excuse on enclosed premises. The section of the Act under which he was charged and convicted related entirely to people being found on enclosed premises at night. The accused pleaded guilty to being found arrangement with shareholders 4,395 shares. He also considerably diminished the liabilities of the company, but, owing to the continued depression in trade, he was unable to carry all his arrangements through, and as the company was being pressed by certain of its creditors, application was made to place it under official liquidation. As far as your liquidators have been able to ascertain, the liabilities are as follows: Preferent claims: Mortgage to Netherlands Bank on all landed property, interest, taxed costs, etc., £9,378 12s. 6d.; second mortgage on above held by Mr. L. F. Zietsman, £700; claims for wages, £186; claims for Divisional Council rates, £30 2s.; concurrent claims due to sundry creditors, £868 10s. 1d. In connection with the second bond held by Mr. L. F. Zietsman, it may be mentioned that the bond was passed in favour of Mr. I. B. Reynolds, apparently in settlement of certain advances made by him. When Mr. Reynolds made his attempt to settle with all shareholders, he arranged with Mr. Zietsman to cede him this bond in payment of 700 shares, with a further stipulation that he (Mr. Zietsman) should become guarantor for an overdraft obtained by Reynolds from the Standard Bank. As far as your liquidators are aware, Zietsman has not yet had to pay up under his guarantee. The assets consist of the landed property at Claremont, which was valued in 1905 by sworn appraisers at £16,092, but will now hardly realise the amount for which it is mortgaged. In addition to this, there were certain movable assets of comparatively small value. These consisted principally of old and ill-assorted material, the dregs of the stock which had originally been acquired by the company. The liquidators received an offer for this from certain parties, who were prepared to assist Mr. Reynolds to start again in business. With the consent of the principal creditors, they accepted it, after having first ascertained by means of valuations that the offer was a fair one. The issued shares of the company amounted to 31,425, of which 26,395 are held by the vendor. The annexed schedules marked C and D will give full particulars. In framing the list of contributories specified in schedule E, attached hereto, it will be seen that a considerable amount is due by Mr. L. Zietsman, formerly chairman of the company. The inspector's report will furnish full details in connection with the claim against Mr. Zietsman. The large amount due by the vendor is accounted for by the fact that the agreement between himself and the company was never registered. A considerable number of the other contributories hold shares issued to the vendor under similar circumstances and transferred to them by him. The causes of the failure of the company were, in the opinion of your liquidators: (a) Over capitalisation; (b) want of proper management; (c) depression in trade. The evidence furnished in the attached report will show that grave irregularities took place in connection with both the flotation and management of the company, and that the books and accounts were kept in an unsatisfactory manner. The evidence at the inquiry made is, in the opinion of your liquidators, sufficient to show fully all matters relating to the promotion, formation, and failure of the company, as well as the conduct of its business. Your liquidators are of opinion that while, as previously stated, there were grave irregularities, no actual fraud was committed by any director or other officer of the company in relation to the company since its formation. It is difficult to make the same statement with regard to the circumstances connected with the flotation of the company, but as far as can be judged, if a fraud was committed, no one actually benefited therefrom.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the liquidators. Mr. Close for L. F. Zietsman. Mr. Upington for W. Kidd. Mr. Bisset for F. L. St. Leger. M. Rawbone and G. Le Sueur; and Mr. P. S. T. Jones for L. B. Smuts.

Mr. Schreiner, in outlining the case for the applicants, stated that the company was one which had had a short life. It was registered in November, 1902, and went into liquidation finally in 1903. At the instance of the vendors, a Government inspection, which was of great importance, took place. The record of that inquiry was very voluminous, and had, to save expense, not been copied. The report of the liquidators raised the three points which it was necessary for the Court to consider. The list of contributories had been settled by the liquidators, but they objected to being made contributory, and appeared by counsel. The applicants did not press for an inquiry into the procedure of the company after 1904, but, as it had been suggested by one of the respondents, they acquiesced.

De Villiers, C.J., inquired under what section the Government inspection was held.

Under section 116.

[De Villiers, C.J.: And what was it for?]

To inquire in to the affairs of the company and report.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But an inspection, to be of any use, must be carried out speedily, or else it is a farce. Two years was occupied in carrying out this inspection.]

The report was drawn up much before that time, but was not signed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But what good is a report that bears no signature? Can we get more information by a further inquiry?]

I do not think so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was it at the wish of the Government that the inspector delayed the report?]

The delay arose through the attorney for Reynolds asking the inspector to hold over the report, as there was a probability of Reynolds buying back the shares. Then the Government gave intimation to Mr. Syfret that he need not proceed to present the report, and at yet a later stage asked that the report be presented.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I want to decide whether further inquiry is necessary. There has been an inquiry, and nothing has been done on it.]

Mr. Close read the affidavit of Mr. Louis Frederick Zietsman, who described in detail the transactions with reference to the shares. One thousand shares were voted to him for services rendered, but no share certificate was issued therefor. For another 1,000 shares he paid, and of these he sold 500 to one Cadby, while the balance of this thousand he transferred to Mr. Reynolds, and they formed consideration for the bond.

Mr. Upington read the affidavit of Mr. Win. Kidd, of Port Elizabeth, who stated that he purchased 100 shares from the vendor. He was unaware that the agreement between the vendor and the company was not registered in respect of these vendor's shares.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Upington): You say your client bought these as fully paid-up shares, and without any knowledge at all of irregularities?]

Yes, my lord.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Schreiner): Do you say that, in such circumstances, a man is to be held liable?]

Mr. Schreiner: Yes, my lord, we say that is the position in law, though it is, of course, hard.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That would have a very far-reaching effect. Can anyone who buys shares in the market as fully paid up be sure that they are paid up?]

We say that in law the respondent Kidd is liable. The position of my learned friend's (Mr. Jones's) client is the same.

Mr. Upington said that the only question was whether or not the company, in liquidation, could go back on the share certificate and say it was not, as a fact, fully paid up, though they represented to the buyer that it was.

Mr. Jones read an affidavit by Mr. L. B. Smute, stating that he had disposed in December, 1904, of the 100 shares in respect of which it was sought to make him a contributory. The certificate showed that the shares were fully paid up. The shares had, it appeared, been granted to one Dominicus, a director of the company, and purchased from him by the deponent.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was Mr. Smuts a director?]

Mr. Schreiner: Oh, no, my lord; he was quite an innocent shareholder.

Mr. Bisset read the affidavit of Mr. F. L. St. Leger, who said that he was not the registered holder of any shares, but Dominicus transferred to him certain shares which he (Mr. St. Leger) understood had been taken up and paid for by Dominicus in the ordinary way. Further affidavits were made by Mr. Rawbone, and on behalf of Mr. G. le Sueur, denying that they were the registered holders of shares. Shares were transferred to them by Dominicus, and it was understood that they were fully paid up. Deponents had no knowledge that they were vendor's shares.

Mr. Close submitted that the present procedure was not one which could, in safety or justice to Mr. Zietsman, be followed. There were many questions of fact to be decided, and he urged that the correct procedure was that followed in the case of The Liquidators of the Mecca Cafe v. Weber (14 C.T.R., 360), in which witnesses were heard by the Court.

The two points which he took were, that a shareholder to be liable (1) should have his name showing on the share register, and (2) should have consented to his so appearing. With the first point he had already dealt. On the second the cases laid down that the principles which applied to any contract applied to the taking of shares; there should be application allotment and intimation to the applicant. He cited Townsend's case (13 Eq., 163) and Pillatt's case (2 Ch. App., 535). Had these three requirements been satisfied in the present case? No application for these 1,000 shares had been proved on the part of Mr. Zietsman. The necessary knowledge would be assumed on the part of a director of the contents of the books of the company (Hallmark's case 9. C.D., 333). For a similar decision see re Denham and Co. (25 C.D., 752).

[De Villiers, C.J.: But in this case it is alleged that Mr. Zietsman saw the actual list sent to the Registrar.]

Mr. Close: But that is denied.

There was nothing, he proceeded, in the minutes to show that the fact of the allotment of the second thousand shares was specifically brought to Zietsman's knowledge. When Zietsman discovered his position in the books, he at once wrote the letter of repudiation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose that this venture had been a success, instead of a failure, could Mr. Zietsman have insisted on getting those second thousand shares at par?]

Mr. Close: I submit he could not.

In ex parte Cumell (1884 2 C.D., 392) it was held that where a name appeared on the allotment sheets, this was not conclusive. Mr. Zietsman might have applied for the expunging of his name, but as a matter of fact he never considered that his name appeared on the register of shares in respect of these shares. As to Dominicus' share in the transaction, Zietsman agreed to apply for the second thousand shares if he got a bonus of £250. Dominicus was acting either privately or as a director. If privately, Zietsman could not be taken to have applied for the shares. If as a director, then he was acting ultra vires, and there was no mutuality of contract, and it was consequently invalid. (Richmond Hill Hotel Co., 2 C. App., 527.) If then the commission was a secret one, as was suggested, or if discount shares were to be issued, it was ultra vires, and not binding on the company or on the other property (The Ooregun case, 1892. A.C., 125). Section 58 of the Companies Act ought to be looked at in this connection. On the second question, as to whether Zietsman was liable for the 500 shares, the so-called bonus shares, this was now practically abandoned by the liquidators. Section 97 dealt with the issue of shares under a contract which had not been registered, and the principle laid down in Silva's case applied. Counsel further cited Buckley 8, ed. 32.

[De Villiers, C.J.: To escape liability, is it not necessary that there should be transfer?]

The shares can be transferred even if the company is in extremis.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Schreiner): Your case is that these 500 shares are registered in the name of Zietsman, and as no contract is registered, he is fixed with knowledge that the shares were not fully paid up, and his action was not bona fide, and therefore he was held to be liable as a contributory.]

Mr. Schreiner: That is so. We go further, and contend that even those who took the shares innocently are liable.

Mr. Close, continuing, said that there was a bona fide agreement entered into and carried out. The agreement, whether registered or not, showed the intention of the parties. See McGregor v. Silberbauer (9 J., 36). Section 97 of our Act was taken over from section 25 of the English Act of 1867. Counsel cited Blythe's case (4 C.D., 140, Burkenshaw v. Nicolls (3 A.C., 1004). Zietsman was no party to the Act by which those shares were originally issued to Reynolds; consequently, the doctrine of estoppel could not apply. In Barrow's case, it was held that allottees subsequent to an allottee who took innocently for bona fide consideration took without liability.

Mr. Upington said that his client's position was very different from that of Mr. Zietsman, in that he had no connection with the company, except as a purchaser in open market.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I must say at once that I should like to hear Mr. Schreiner on the point of your client's liability.]

Mr. Upington said that, inasmuch as Mr. Kidd was still interested, he had to press for some action to be taken to enquire into the manner in which this company had been floated and managed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the form of the inquiry you suggest?]

Mr. Upington: Under sub-section 3 of section 154 of our Companies Act, the Court has the power to direct further inquiry.

Mr. Jones said that the position of Mr. Smuts was similar to that of Mr. Kidd.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he would postpone hearing Mr. Jones till he had heard Mr. Schreiner.

Mr. Bisset said that the three directors for whom he appeared were in a similar position to Mr. Zietsman, and he would adopt Mr. Close's argument. St. Leger was not liable, because (1) he was a transferee without notice, (2) the supplementary register was good, and on that Reynolds' name now appeared instead of that of St. Ledger, and (3) the original register was not conclusive against him. There was clear intention on the part of St. Ledger to divest himself of the ownership of the shares. Le Sueur's position was slightly different, but he was in England, and if the Court was not prepared to take his brother Francis' word for the facts, then he should have an opportunity of being heard. Rawbone was sought to be placed on the list as owner of vendor's shares, and also as a subscriber to the memorandum of association. He objected on the ground that he was not a registered holder of all these shares. He got 250 shares from Dominicus for services rendered. The company could not now come down on him and insist that he should take the other 250 shares also.

Mr. Schreiner said that with regard to Zietsman being on the list for £875, he was the holder of 2,000 shares, apart from the third thousand voted to him in March. There were two allotments of one thousand shares. He paid £1,125, and the £125 was a payment on account of the second thousand.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You needn't enter further into the question of the £875.]

Mr. Schreiner said that with regard to the 500 shares, they still stood in the name of Mr. Zietsman, against which was put up this so-called supplementary register. Neither the agreement under which Reynolds had to get fully paid up shares, nor the agreement under which Dominicus got 2,000 shares, of which the 500 against Zietsman's name formed part, was registered. Zietsman knew that these agreements were not registered. The position of the three directors represented by Mr. Biset was in law exactly similar to that of Mr. Zietsman. These gentlemen gave no consideration to the company for the shares. Mr. Rawbone said that he rendered services to Dominicus, but the liquidators knew nothing as to that, and were indifferent. There was no objection to Le Sueur being given time to substantiate the statements made by his brother as to Rawbone's position—

[De Villiers, C.J.: I have no doubt as to his position.]

Mr. Schreiner, continuing, said that as to the position of Kidd and Smuts, they were liable under section 97. The doctrine of estoppel could not apply in the face of this section. See Ye Mecca Cafi v. Weber (21 S.C., 227). A bona fide holder could not rely on the fact that it appeared on the shares that they had been fully paid up. Kidd could look to Reynolds and Smuts to Dominicus.

After hearing Mr. Upington, who distinguished the case of Ye Mecca, on behalf of Mr. Kidd; Mr. Jones, on behalf of Mr. Smuts; and Mr. Schreiner, in reply, De Villiers, C.J.: I do not propose to say more about the management of this company than to make this remark—it is impossible to conceive of grosser mismanagement from the flotation of the company down to its liquidation than has been disclosed in this case. In dealing with the different respondents before the Court, I shall first consider the case of Smuts and Kidd. I think these two stand on exactly the same footing. There can be no doubt that they were bona fide purchasers of the shares in respect of which they are sought to be made contributories, and that they had no notice of any illegality or informality attached to these shares. That these shares form part of the vendors shares, which had been allotted to Reynolds, and that the contract with Reynolds never was registered is, in my opinion, clearly proved, and unless the two respondents I have named were bona fide purchasers, without notice they would be liable as contributories. The 97th section of Act 25 of 1892 enacts: "That every share in any company shall be deemed to have been issued, and to be held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same shall have been otherwise determined by a contract duly made in writing, and filed with the registrar of joint stock companies at or before the issue of such shares." So far this section agrees with the 25th section of the English Act, which has been cited. The section proceeds: "and, further, unless such share in terms of such contract be issued in exchange for a consideration of valuable services rendered to the company in furtherance of its objects, or in exchange for, or in consideration of, valuable property rights, or privileges acquired by the company in furtherance of its objects, in which case though not actually paid up, such share shall be considered to be fully paid up, and shall entail no further responsibility or liability upon the members to whom it has been, or shall be issued, or upon subsequent holders than would have been entailed upon them if the share had been actually fully paid up in money." If the section had stopped here there would have been no doubt in my opinion that the respondents, Smuts and Kidd, would not be liable.

They bought shares on the faith of the representation made by the directors of the company, who signed the certificates that the shares mentioned in those certificates had been fully paid up. In signing the certificates the directors acted within the scope of their apparent authority, and the company, if it had not been ordered to have been wound up, could not have denied payment from the purchasers. Under English law the company is said to be "estopped" from claiming such payment, and it is difficult to find another English word to express the operation of our own law in a case of this kind. Unfortunately the use of the English law term "estoppel" at once leads to the belief that the whole law of estoppel has been imported from England, just as the use of "valuable consideration" instead of "redelijke oorzaak" has led to the supposition that it was intended to introduce the whole of the English law relating to consideration. The equivalent of the civil law for estoppel, in its limited sense, is "obstrictio ne quis contra suum factum renit." Instances of the use of the expression are continually found in Voet's Commentaries (e.g., Voet 6-1-17 and 19, and Voet 14, 3, 6). I am clearly of opinion that under our law also the company would be prevented, and therefore "estopped" from claiming payment for shares from persons whom the directors, acting within the apparent scope of their authority, have led into honestly buying the shares, by representing these shares to have been fully paid up. If the company would have been so estopped, there is no reason why the liquidators should not also be estopped. Mr. Schreiner, however, contends that the principle just enunciated could not have been intended by the Legislature to apply, in view of the succeeding part of the 97th section, which reads thus: "And every director, or other person who signs or issues, or connives at the signing, or issue of any document, entitling or purporting to entitle any person to a fully paid up share in any company under this Act when, as a fact, the whole amount of such share has not been paid in cash, shall be liable to make good to the bona fide holder of such share any damage which he may suffer by reason of the said share not having been fully paid up." There is undoubtedly some force in the argument that this provision would seem to show that the legislature did not contemplate that the bona fide purchaser would be relieved, but then the section does not speak of the bona fide purchaser but of the bona fide holder. I can quite conceive that a distinction might also be raised in the present case between the case of the vendor of the shares, who probably would be liable under the Act, and the case of the other two respondents, who in my opinion would not be liable. It may well be that this provision was intended to meet the case of a bona fide holder like Reynolds. I do not say it is so, but it may have been the intention of the legislature. Anyhow, the difficulty of giving full effect to this part of the section would not justify the Court in holding that the Legislature intended the principle of obstrictio not to be applicable in the case of bona fide purchasers of shares such as these now in question. I am of opinion that Smuts and Kidd should not be placed in the list of contributories. I come next to the case of the three directors—St. Leger, Le Sueur, and Rawbone. To my mind, these three stand on exactly the same footing. They must have known that the shares which they received and for which they were really not giving valuable consideration form part of the original shares which had been allotted to Mr. Reynolds, under a contract which was never registered. As to Mr. Rawbone, he draws a distinction between the 250 shares which he had acquired from Dominicus and the 250 shares in respect of which he had signed the memorandum of association. He says that they were really the same 250, but I cannot agree with this view. They appear to me to be entirely separate transactions, and Mr. Rawbone appears to be liable on 250 as a signatory to the memorandum of association, and the other 250 as being the holder of shares purporting to be fully paid, but which had, in fact, never been paid up. As to Mr. Zietsman, I have no doubt whatever as to his liability. I consider that there is clear proof that the 2,000 shares were applied for by him. We have the books of the company, and we have the pregnant fact that in the list sent to the Registrar of Deeds his name appears as the allottee of the 2,000 shares. He had an opportunity of denying the statement that he saw the list before it was sent, but he did not deny it. He simply said he did not sanction it. I am satisfied also that if he had intended to have only the 1,000 shares, he would not have paid the £125 for allotment, in addition to the £1,000 for the remaining 1,000 shares. I am satisfied in respect of the 2,000 shares, as he has paid only £1,125, he is still liable for the 875 shares which had been allotted to him, and stand in his name in the books of the company. Then, in regard to the other 500 shares, I am satisfied that he should be held liable in regard to them. He stands exactly on the same footing in regard to the 500 shares as the three other directors whom I have mentioned, but if there is any difference, all the difference is against Mr. Zietsman. He knew, and he had every opportunity of knowing, that these 500 shares formed part of the original number which had been awarded to Mr. Reynolds under an agreement which was never registered in terms of the 97th section of the Act of 1892. I think that disposes of the whole of the case, and the result will be as to Smuts and Kidd that they succeed in their contention that they should not be placed on the list of contributories, and they will be entitled to their costs out of the assets of the company. The order of the Court will be that Mr. Zietsman be placed on the list of contributories for 1,375 shares, Mr. St. Leger 150 shares, Mr. Rawbone 500 shares, and Mr. Le Sueur 250 shares, the costs of the opposition to be paid by them, with leave to Mr. Le Sueur to bring an action and come to trial within six months to have his name erased from the list of contributories and recover costs. It was further ordered that the unpaid costs of inspection be paid by the official liquidator at a rate to be hereafter fixed by the Court. It was formally ordered that Mr. Zietsman's name be erased from the list of contributories in respect of the 300 shares.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL { 1906.
V. ROYAL HOTEL CO., LTD. { Nov. 20th.
(1906). { " 26th

Cape Town Municipality—Owner's rate—Act 26 of 1893—Legal title.

The defendant bought certain premises in Cape Town from the official liquidators of a company, and the purchase was confirmed by the Court on the 19th February, 1906. On the 1st March, 1906, the defendant took occupation, and on the 15th March, 1906, the owner's rate for that year became payable. Through no wilful neglect the defendant had not obtained transfer on the 15th March, 1906.

Held, that the defendant was not liable under the last proviso of the 102nd section of Act 26 of 1893, to the payment of the rate which became due and payable on the 15th March, 1905.

This was an action brought by the Town Council of Cape Town to recover £472 16s. 7d. for municipal rates, due and payable on the 15th March, 1905, in respect of ratable immovable property in Cape Town, constituting the Royal Hotel.

The declaration set forth that there still stood registered in the name of the Royal Hotel Company, now in liquidation, certain ratable immovable property in Plain-street (the Royal Hotel). On January 24, 1906, the liquidators of the Royal Hotel Co., by an agreement which was subsequently confirmed by the Supreme Court, sold this property to the trustees for the defendant company, and in February, 1906, defendants took possession of the property as owners, except as to a portion consisting of certain Arcade shops, which was retained by a contractor. The rates for the municipal service of 1905 amounted to £450 6s. 3d., which amount was not paid on March 15, 1905, and therefore increased to £472 16s. 7d. The defendant therefore became and was on March 15, 1906, a "future owner" of the property, and as such liable under section 102 of the Cape Town Municipal Act (26 of 1893) for the rates levied for 1905. In case the Court found that defendant was not liable for as much of the rates as was attributable to the Arcade shops, of which defendant had not in fact possession before March 15, 1906, then the defendant company was liable for £372 18s. 5d., being the rates attributable to the property, not including the shops.

The defendant company pleaded that transfer had not yet been passed to it by the liquidators of the Royal Hotel Co., Ltd., and that, in accordance with the true constructions of sections 97 and 102 of the Cape Town Municipal Act, the only persons liable for rates for 1905 as owners, or future owners, were persons in whom legal title was vested on March 15, 1906, or within a year from such date, and that it was not liable to pay the amount of the rates or any portion thereof under the Act or any other law. No valuation of the property made for the purpose of this case was binding upon it, or was legal or could be taken advantage of by the plaintiff, wherefore it prayed that the claims might be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Giese) was for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Roux) was for the defendants.

Charles B. Martin, City Treasurer, gave evidence on the certified extract of the Valuation Roll, 1905. The notice of the assessment showed a rate of 2½d. in the £, and the amount on the two properties was £450 6s. 3d., due and payable on the 15th March, 1905. According to the Act there was an additional 5 per cent. if the rates were not paid by the 30th June.

Witness first of all wrote to the old company and then to the new company for the rates. The £36,000 in the Valuation Roll of 1905 really represented the whole of the ground site, plus the hotel buildings, and £33,000 the buildings and the shops. The rates for 1906 had been paid.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The defendants did not state that they were paying the rates for 1906 as occupiers and not the owners.

Cecil Henry Wilmot, who made the valuations for 1905, stated that he valued the old Royal Hotel and the two shops at £36,000, and the incomplete shops at £3,300. The site was included in the £36,000. At a later date he apportioned the valuation of 1905.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

James Cecil Bateman, acting secretary to the company, stated that transfer had not yet been taken owing to a dispute with the Civil Commissioner as to the valuation which ought to be put on the property for the purpose of transfer duty. The rates for 1906 were paid by the defendants as occupiers.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: They had exercised their rights of subletting a portion of the property. There was no notification to the plaintiffs that the rates were being paid by the defendants as occupiers.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

In argument, Mr. Schreiner said that it was very much a legal question of construction. If the Act did not bear the construction the Town Council put forward, then persons might have all the benefit of the town services without paying for them. The company in that case would not be bound to take transfer at all, and, as long as it had not taken transfer, it would not be necessary to pay rates.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then they would come in as occupiers.]

Mr. Schreiner: Not of the shops they don't occupy.

Continuing, Mr. Schreiner cited Kimberley Divisional Council v. London and S.A. Exploration Co. (2 A.C., 23); Indwe Municipality v. Indwe Collieries (16 C.T., 279). On section 97 of the Act (26 of 1893), legal title was vested in various ways in persons, and not necessarily by registration. Future owner did not necessarily mean the person having registered title. A person having a limited interest under a will would have legal title. He cited De Kock and Another v. Fincham (19 S.C., 136), and Krachmal's Trustee v. Epstein (17 S.C., 317). On the power of the Court to determine the proportion to be paid by the owner, he quoted Cradock Divisional Council v. Hattings (6 J., 260), which was a later case than the case of Bett v. Kimberley Divisional Council (4 H.C., 342), which could therefore be treated as a case that had not been followed. He also cited Dreyer's Case (B 1868, p. 246).

[De Villiers, C.J.: When, do you say, they did become owner?]

They became owner upon the sanction of the sale by the Court on February 19, 1906.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But this is a very different case to the Indwe case.]

Yes, as to the facts, but not as to the principle.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your contention is that the person who has entered into a contract by which he is entitled to become the owner is the owner, but that would be an extension of the principle laid down in the Indwe case.]

Mr. Schreiner further cited the case of Bainbridge v. the Wynberg Municipality (7 J., 11), and said that defendant would not be liable to pay qua occupier, unless that occupation was an actual occupation.

Mr. Gardiner said that the word "owner" alone should have the same definition as when coupled with the word "future." Section 97 said that the owner was the person in whom the legal title was vested.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he was inclined to agree with Mr. Gardiner that the legal title could only be proved by registration.

Continuing, Mr. Gardiner referred to Act 25 of 1897, where the meaning of owner was extended; this would not have been necessary if the contention of the Town Council as to the meaning of "owner" under the Act of 1893 was correct. In the case of Van der Spuy v. Maddison (B. 1877, p. 97), it was held that in this colony no person could be said to be the owner of land until he had obtained transfer. It was the transfer which gave the dominium. He also cited MacDonald v. Port Elizabeth Town Council (8 J., 37), Grimbeek's Case (17 S.C., 200), and Van Breda v. Town Council of Cape Town (6 J., 71). The point at issue in this case was not at issue in Krachmal's case, as in that case the future owner was not a party before the Court at all. In the Kimberley case the special circumstances were that there was no evidence to show that registration was necessary in the Free State. The circumstances of the Indwe case were entirely different. There a kind of emphyteusis had been created. The Court had always held that the first test of ownership of immovable property was registration (Maasdorp's Institutes, Vol. II., p. 68). If the defendant company went into liquidation, the liquidators could repudiate the purchase and refuse to take transfer.

On the question as to the proportion for which the defendant would be liable in case the Court found that it was not liable for the whole, the Court stopped Mr. Gardiner, the Chief Justice remarking that the defendant company was either liable for the whole amount or for nothing.

In reply, Mr. Schreiner said that the liquidators could not repudiate a sale that had been confirmed by the Court, which was a sale ex decreto judicis. Legal title was not always registered title.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (November 26th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The question whether the defendant company is liable to the payment of the rate levied by the plaintiff Council in respect of the Royal Hotel premises must be decided under the provisions of Act 26 of 1893. It is unfortunate that there is no general law defining what is meant by the "owner" or "proprietor" who is liable, as such, for the payment of municipal rates. The rule certainly is that only the person in whose name the land is registered is legally regarded as the owner, but it has been pointed out in previous cases that the intentions of the Legislature would often be defeated if this rule were always rigidly adhered to in practice. In the Indwe Municipality case (16 C.T.R., p. 279), for instance, the only inhabitants of Indwe who elected the councillors and enjoyed the advantages, such as they were, of municipal government, were the occupiers under perpetual leases of the erven, and the Court held that for the purposes of the rating powers conferred on the Council under that Act these leasees were the owners. No tenants' rate had been imposed, the leasees enjoyed the privileges of owners, and the company in whose name the property was registered had parted with all control over the property so long as the nominal rent was paid. The Court held that the leasees were owners liable to be rated under the Act 45 of 1882, and in the course of the judgment illustrations were used which are now relied upon in support of the plaintiff Counsel's contention that the defendant company is the owner of the premises. One of these illustrations was the case of a person who has purchased land from a non-resident registered owner, and has paid for and occupied such land, but has neglected to secure transfer, and it was remarked that "it could not be successfully contended that he is entitled, by reason of such neglect, to be freed from the payment of the owner's rate." The case thus put differs from the present in two important respects, for it supposed that the occupier intentionally neglected registration for the purpose of evading the payment of rates as owner, and it raised the question of liability in a Municipality established under Act 45 of 1882. In the present case it has not been suggested that there had been any undue delay on the part of the defendant in obtaining transfer of the premises in question. These premises belonged to and were registered in the name of a company, and on the 24th of January, 1906, the liquidators of that company accepted a tender made on behalf of the defendant company, which was then about to be formed, for the purchase of the property. The purchase was confirmed by this Court on the 19th of February, 1906. On the 1st of March, 1906, the defendant company obtained possession of a portion of the premises, and on the 15th of March, 1906, the owners' rate levied by the Council of Cape Town became payable under Act 26 of 1893. The defendant company, although it has not yet obtained transfer of the property, has paid the rate payable on the 15th of March, 1906, but it refuses to pay the rate payable on the 15th of March, 1905. This rate, amounting to £472 16s. 7d., the plaintiff Council seeks by this action to recover from the defendant. It is clear that the owner of the property on the 15th of March, 1905, was the company now in liquidation. The 97th section of Act 26 of 1893 enacts that "the person or persons in whom shall be vested on the 15th day of March in each year the legal title to any immovable property, shall be the person or persons primarily liable for the rates imposed during that year in respect of such property," and there can be no doubt, therefore, as to the primary liability of the company in liquidation for the payment of the rate now in question. In support, however, of the defendant company's liability, the plaintiff relies upon the two last provisos to the 102nd section of the Act, which read as follows: "Provided also, that any and every rate assessed under the provisions of this Act shall, in so far as the owner of any property is concerned, be and be deemed to be a charge upon the property rated and recoverable against the owner at the time such rate was levied, or any future owner; provided always that no future owner of property shall be liable for any rates which became due and payable at any period more than one year prior to the date upon which he became owner of the said property." The "owner" to whom these provisos refer is the person in whom, in terms of the 97th section, the legal title to the property is vested, and that is the registered owner, and the primary liability for the rates attaches to such owner as opposed to the secondary liability of the occupier under the first portion of the 102nd section. If the property on which any rates are unpaid is transferred to another, the transferee becomes liable for such unpaid rate as became due and payable within one year prior to the date upon which he obtained transfer. But no such liability attaches to a person who has purchased the property and has not received transfer thereof. As was pointed out, in Van der Spuy v. Maddison (Buch. Rep., 1877, p. 98), the purchaser has a personal right to obtain transfer, but the legal title to the land is not vested in him until he obtains transfer. If he neglected to obtain transfer with a view of evading the payment of rates, other considerations would arise which do not enter into the decision of the present case. On the 15th of March, 1906, the defendant company, without any default on its part, had not yet received legal title to the premises, and, consequently, it cannot be held liable for the rate which became due and payable on the 15th of March, 1905. The judgment of the Court must therefore be for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon Sir J H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

FRAHM V. MANGIAGALLI. { 1906.
Nov. 22nd.

Defamation of character—Words imputing unchastity to a widow.

A statement that a man was seen coming out of a widow's bedroom through a window at night-time,

Held to be defamatory and actionable.

This was an action for damages for slander.

The plaintiff is a widow residing at Parow, and the defendant lives at Glen Lily. It was alleged that on November 20, 1905, defendant said, in the hearing of Elizabeth Fernandez and Albert Canterbury Thorndike: "Now I will tell you something which will make you laugh. Berthold Frahm (meaning plaintiff's son) has told me that one night, as he returned home, he saw the German man getting out through his mother's bedroom window as he went in at the door." The damages were laid at £500.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for plaintiff and Mr. Gardiner for defendant.

The plaintiff stated that she heard of the alleged slander from two persons—Elizabeth Fernandez and Mr. Thorndike. Plaintiff's solicitor sent a letter to defendant, which the latter ignored. A second letter also failed to elicit a reply, but subsequently defendant, through her solicitor, denied that she had ever uttered the alleged slander. This letter was written after the writ had been issued. Plaintiff did not know the "German man," and could not imagine who he could be. She wished for an apology.

Cross-examined: She did not mind about the damages; she only wanted to clear her character. People did not believe the slander, which her son first told her of. Defendant came to see her, and denied that she had slandered plaintiff, but the latter did not forgive her. Plaintiff waited about a couple of months before re-opening the subject by approaching a solicitor.

Elizabeth Fernandez stated that she resided at Parow. On the afternoon of November 20, 1905, defendant came to her and told her slanderous things about plaintiff's daughter, and also about plaintiff herself. Witness stated that defendant told her that plaintiff's son had told her that he had seen a German man coming out of the window of plaintiff's bedroom at night-time.

Cross-examined: Witness did not believe the defendant's statement. Although the incident happened a year ago, she well remembered all the incidents. There was a little ill-feeling between witness's husband and Mrs. Mangiagalli.

By the Court: Witness was certain that there was no mistake about what Mrs. Mangiagalli said on that occasion. Mrs. Mangiagalli was an Italian, but witness could understand her without difficulty.

Albert Thorndike stated that in November last year he delivered an account to defendant. Just as he was on the threshold of Mrs. Elizabeth Fernandez's house, he heard the defendant say that plaintiff's son told her that one night he saw a German jump out of his mother's bedroom window. Witness thought the statement was meant to be defamatory of plaintiff's character.

Cross-examined: Witness subsequently mentioned the matter to plaintiff's son, who denied that he had ever made such a statement.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

The defendant, Ada Mangiagalli, stated that her husband was a sawyer. Of late, plaintiff had been rather angry with her because plaintiff's son visited defendant's house. Defendant denied having made use of the words as to the German man getting out of plaintiff's bedroom window; she had never made use of such words. Plaintiff did not like her son visiting defendant's daughter. Plaintiff's son had never told witness such a story about his mother.

Cross-examined: Witness did not know that plaintiff objected to any proposed marriage between plaintiff's son and defendant's daughter.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it true that you said those words to Thorndike?]

Defendant: I do not know anything about it.

Berthold Frahm, son of plaintiff, stated that Thorndike had mentioned the alleged slander to him, and subsequently witness asked Thorndike for the names, which the latter gave him.

Cross-examined: He had not been on good terms with his mother since this case had been on.

Angelo Mangiagalli, husband of defendant, said that Thorndike told him that Mrs. Fernandez had informed him of the alleged slander. Witness then said to Thorndike: "Good boy, I will put you in the paper on Monday." Thorndike replied: "Don't do that, it will spoil my connection."

Mr. Gardiner having closed his case,

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: The decision in this case must depend on the credibility of the three witnesses alleged to have been present at the time the defamatory words were said to have been spoken. The witnesses were Mrs. Fernandez, Thorndike, and the defendant. Mrs. Fernandez gave her evidence in a very fair manner, and I am satisfied that she intended to speak the truth, and that she understood the defendant to make use of the words mentioned in the declaration. It was not she who brought the matter to light, but Thorndike, who was a friend of the son of plaintiff's, and who thought it his duty to warn his friend as to the language that had been used. The son naturally wished to clear his mother's character, and made further inquiries. Well, the son took Thorndike first of all to the defendant's house, and there had a conversation with both the defendant and her husband. Now, it is alleged that Thorndike, in their presence, said that he had heard these words not directly from the defendant, but from Mrs. Fernandez. Well, supposing he did, I do not think that is conclusive, because he might well wish to screen himself from the charge of disseminating a scandal of this kind. When he was confronted with Mrs. Fernandez, she maintained in his presence that she had not mentioned these words to Thorndike, and that she had never mentioned them to anyone else, and that she did not know that anyone else knew of them until that moment. She knew Thorndike entered the house immediately after the words were spoken, but she did not know that he had heard the words. I am quite satisfied that Mrs. Fernandez at all events has spoken the truth, that these words were uttered by defendant. It is difficult to know where Mrs. Fernandez could have got hold of this story if she did not get it direct from defendant. It is suggested that the two families were not on good terms, but apparently they were on good terms. I am quite satisfied that whatever ill-feeling Mrs. Fernandez might have had against the defendant it would not induce her to charge the defendant with using words she did not utter. I am quite satisfied that the words were made use of, and that both Mrs. Fernandez and Thorndike heard them used at the house. It follows, of course, that I cannot accept the statement of defendant that she did not make use of them, and the only other question is what damages should be awarded. It is certainly a paltry case; I think a Magistrate's Court might well have disposed of it. Mrs. Fernandez certainly did not think the worse of plaintiff for these words, nor did, apparently, Thorndike. It is said, on behalf of defendant, that she could not be expected to apologise if she did not make use of the words. Well, I fully agree, but if the Court finds she did make use of the words, then the Court might fairly expect that she should apologise, that she should admit that in an unguarded moment she spoke a bit of scandal, and that she did not mean to say anything against the character of plaintiff, and desired to make no excuse. If she had done that no Court in the world would have done more than award nominal damages and order the payment of Magistrate's Court costs. But she has all along denied using these words and has compelled plaintiff to come into Court. There can be no reason to doubt as to the defamatory nature of the words. Here is a widow leading as far as would appear a chaste life, and it was alleged that a man was seen coming out of her bedroom through a window at night-time. The suggestion is as clear as anything that it was for some illicit purpose, and that there was a want of chastity on the part of this widow. It does appear to me that it was a charge of unchastity against plaintiff, and that she was entitled to come into court to have her character cleared. I think the sum of £5 will satisfy the justice of the case, and I think costs must follow the result.

GREEN AND SEA POINT MUNICIPALITY V. DODDEMEADE.

Municipal regulations—Advertisement hoardings—Interdict.

Under its Act of incorporation the plaintiff Council had the power to make regulations for determining and regulating the place and manner in which placards and bills should be displayed; and accordingly a regulation was made that no person should erect a hoarding on, or near, or in view of a street for the purpose of displaying placards, &c., without the written consent of the Council. After the passing of the regulation a hoarding, which had been placed near the street by the respondent on his property, was blown down, and he, without obtaining the consent of the Council, proceeded to re-erect and reconstruct the hoarding to a greater height.

Held, that the Council was entitled to an interdict restraining such reconstruction.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi which had been granted on November 13 restraining respondent, William Renny Doddemeade, from proceeding with the erection of an advertisement hoarding.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicants.

Respondent, who appeared in person, said he had been a tenant of property around which the hoarding had been erected for the last 14 years. At the commencement of his tenancy he applied to his landlord (Mr. Wessels) for leave to erect a hoarding for the purpose of advertising, and Mr. Wessels gave him his unqualified sanction to do so. Respondent drew the rents from the hoarding. The bye-law had been in existence for only three years, while the hoarding had been erected for 14 years, and he took it that the bye-laws could not be retrospective. A portion of the hoarding had been blown down, and it was so damaged that a portion of it had to be erected with new material. Mr. Wessels gave respondent his verbal consent to the erection of the hoarding, but as Mr. Wessels was a lawyer he would not put down anything in writing about it. Respondent did not ask the Municipal Council for its permission to re-erect a hoarding, as he did not acknowledge its right in the matter. Previously the hoarding varied from 10 ft. to 7 ft. in height, whereas now it was 10 ft. right through. He had altered the hoarding for the better.

[De Villiers, C.J.: From your point of view. No doubt it is highly desirable that the Municipality should have power to prevent the defacing of the landscape by the erection of unsightly hoardings.]

The respondent observed that the hoarding had been blown down on several occasions and had always been re-erected without any objection by the Council.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Still that would not prevent them carrying out their regulations now. If they did not insist on their regulations being complied with in the past, that is no reason why they should not now insist.]

The respondent, proceeding, said the hoarding did not intercept anybody's view. The times were bad, and the hoarding was a source of income to him. He would like the Court to consider that.

De Villiers, C.J.: The 52nd section of the Act under which this application is made, confers very large powers on the Municipality, among which is that of making regulations for determining and regulating the place and manner in which placards and bills shall be displayed. That is an enactment of the Legislature, and it must be obeyed. In pursuance of that enactment the Municipality has made the following regulation: "No person shall erect a hoarding or framework in or near or in view of any street or thoroughfare for the purpose of displaying placards, bills, advertisements, or notices of any kind without the written consent of the Council, and in granting such consent the Council may impose such conditions as may seem to them desirable." It appears that the hoarding which the respondent had used for advertising purposes was blown down, and thereupon the respondent, without asking for the written consent of the Council, proceeded to re-erect the hoarding, and not only to re-erect it, but to somewhat alter the height of a portion of it at all events. That he had no right to do. He had no right in the face of the regulation made under the Act of Parliament to insist on taking the course which he took. He was bound to ask the consent of the Council before re-erecting the hoarding and altering the structure, and even if he did not alter the structure, I am of opinion that he should have obtained the Council's consent before re-erecting it. Therefore I think the Council was quite within its rights in obtaining an interdict. Unfortunately the work had been completed before the interdict was served, and there is no application for the removal of the hoarding. But I think there was sufficient ground for the application to be made and the rule nisi should accordingly be made absolute with costs. As to the removal of the hoarding, a fresh application for that purpose should be made, but I would advise the respondent to come to some terms with the Municipality. Possibly they may be able to agree upon some mode of advertising which will not be objectionable to the public and may at the same time be profitable to the respondent. He says that in these hard times the hoarding is a means of earning something, and no doubt the Council will bear that in mind if application is made in proper form, but this Court cannot decide in that matter. I am not prepared now to decide the question whether the Court should order the removal of the hoarding. I am not prepared to express an opinion in case application should be made for its removal, but I think there was sufficient ground for an application for an interdict, and the rule granted must be made absolute with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

TAUTE V. ODENDAL. } 1906.
} Nov. 23rd.

Defamation — Malice — Animus injurandi.

The defendant having been informed, as the fact was, that his uncle, who was very old and weak in body and in mind, had given a general power of attorney to the plaintiff, asked the old man why he had given the plaintiff a power under which he could do as he liked with the property and under which he had already begun to call in debts. The old man replied that he had not given the plaintiff such a power; upon which the defendant said that if his uncle did not give the power, the plaintiff was doing what was illegal. The Court, being of opinion that the words had been spoken in the interest of the defendant's uncle, without any animus injurandi,

Held that the defendant was not liable in damages.

This was an action for damages for slander.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is an attorney, notary, and conveyancer, practising at Prince Albert, in this colony. The defendant resides at Prince Albert.

2. Before the utterance of the slander hereinafter mentioned, the plaintiff had been employed by one Jan Coenraad Lotz, of Prince Albert, as his attorney and agent for the general administration of his estate, and a general power of attorney had been executed by the said Lotz in plaintiff's favour on August 24, 1906. Defendant was aware of this.

3. On or about August 28, 1906, and at Prince Albert, the defendant, addressing the said J. C. Lotz, in the hearing of Willem Avenant and Jacobus Coenraadus de Beer, falsely and maliciously spoke and published of, and concerning, the plaintiff, in relation to his profession, as aforesaid, to his business as general agent of the said Lotz, and to the conducting thereof by plaintiff, the following defamatory words, in the Dutch language to wit: "Waarom geef jy ver Taute een volmacht procuratie? Hy doet onwettige dinge in zyn kantoor en hy laat onwettige dinge teeken en hy zal gauw jou geld doorbreng," which, in the English language, means: "Why do you give Taute (meaning plaintiff) a general power of attorney? He (meaning plaintiff) does illegal things in his office, and he causes unlawful documents to be signed there, and he will soon run through your money."

4. Thereafter, on the same day and at Prince Albert, the defendant, addressing one Andries Stephanus Snyman, and in the hearing of the aforesaid Avenant and De Beer, falsely and maliciously spoke and published of, and concerning, the plaintiff in relation to his profession as aforesaid, to his business as general agent of the said Lotz, and to the conducting thereof by plaintiff the following defamatory words in the Dutch language: "Hoe kan julie zoo een kerel als Taute een vreemdeling een procuratie geef om Oom Jan zyn zake waar te neem. Wanneer hy dit achter kom zal hy Oom Jan zyn goed zoo deurgebreng het dat die ou man niks zal he en hy zal de eenigste erfgenaam wees. Weet jy dat hy nou al onwettige dinge doen en onwettige papieren laat teken in zyn kantoor," which, being translated into English means: "How can you give such a fellow as Taute (meaning plaintiff), a stranger, a power of attorney to take charge of Uncle John (meaning Mr. J. C. Lotz)? By the time he (meaning the said Lotz) realises the true state of affairs, then he (meaning plaintiff) will have so administered the estate of Uncle John (meaning Mr. Lotz) that the old man (meaning the said J. C. Lotz) will have nothing left, and he (meaning plaintiff) will be the sole heir. Do you know that he (meaning plaintiff) is even now doing illegal and improper things, and causing illegal and improper documents to be signed in his office?"

5. The aforesaid words mean, and were intended and understood to mean, that plaintiff was and is in the habit of acting fraudulently, dishonestly, and illegally in the course of the practice of his profession, and would act in that way in administering the estate of the said Lotz, with the result that the said Lotz would discover in the end that the plaintiff, by his fraudulent, corrupt, and dishonest manipulation of the said estate, had unlawfully transferred it to himself, and had left nothing for the said Lotz or his lawful heirs; and that plaintiff was not a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the administration of the affairs of the said Lotz or of anyone else.

6. By reason of the premises the plaintiff has been and is greatly prejudiced and injured in his credit and reputation, and in his profession and business aforesaid.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Payment of the sum of £2,000, and for damages for the injury above stated; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Paragraph 1 is admitted.

2. The defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 2.

3. Prior to the month of July, 1906, the said Jan Coenraad Lotz, of Prince Albert, of whom the defendant is a relative, was the holder of various promissory notes, given for moneys lent by the said Lotz, and which promissory notes were held by the said Lotz as investments, the interest being paid by the debtors, but the principal remaining due. In the said month of July the said Lotz began to suffer from dementia, and in and during the month of August he was not mentally sound, or in a fit and proper mental state to transact any business.

4. Shortly before the 28th of August, 1906, the plaintiff, purporting to act under a general power of attorney, granting to him by the said Lotz, and giving the said plaintiff the general administration of his affairs, and of which the defendant had no knowledge whatever, began to call up the aforesaid promissory notes, including notes which the said Lotz had promised not to call up in his lifetime, and generally to demand from persons holding papers and documents belonging to the said Lotz that they be handed up to the said plaintiff; and on the 28th of August the defendant went to the house of the said Lotz for the purpose of inquiry, and, in the presence of the said Avenant and De Beer and others, addressing the said Lotz, said in the Dutch language: "Hoe-kom ge Oom Jan, ver Taute een vol-macht procuratie," or words to that effect, which, being translated into English is: "Why did Uncle John give Taute (meaning the plaintiff) a general power of attorney." The said Lotz denied that he had given such a power of attorney, and stated that the only document he had signed was one confirming one Nicolaas Cornelius van der Hoven as his executor, and thereupon the said defendant said in the Dutch language, in the presence of the aforesaid persons: "Dan als Oom Jan nie die procuratie gege het nie, dan doet hy mos onwettige dinge"; and further: "Jy moet jou papiere laat vra en terug kry anders kan die man nou met jou goed maak net wat hy wil"; and further: "Hy het al ver Mr. Van der Hoven geze hy wil die geld uitzet op verband," or words to that effect, which being translated are: "Then if Uncle John did not give the power of attorney, then he (meaning the plaintiff) must be doing what was illegal (or unlawful things)"; "You must have your papers (documents) demanded and get them back, or otherwise that man (meaning the plaintiff) can do with your estate as he wishes; he has already told Mr. Van der Hoven that he is going to put out the money on mortgage."

5. Thereafter the defendant on the same day, not addressing the said Snyman in particular, but in conversation at which Dr. Luttig, the said Snyman, Sybrand R. de Beer, J. C. Lotz, and the said Avenant were present from time to time, said in the Dutch language: "Hoe kan julle laat Oom Jan voor zoo een vreemde man als Taute volmacht procuratie ge oor zijn goed zonder eenig secruiteit," "Als hy reg kom en dit achter kom zal hy baing ontevreden wees: volgens die procuratie kan hy nou met Oom Jan syn goed maak net wat hy wil," "Hy kan tot syn grond laat verbind," or words to that effect, which being translated into the English language are: "How could you let Uncle John give a general power of attorney over his estate to such a stranger as Taute without any security," "if he (meaning the said Lotz) recovers his sound senses (meaning that the said Lotz was not then mentally sound or in a mental state of mind fit to do any business) and realises what has been done he (meaning the said Lotz) will be very angry," "according to the power of attorney he (meaning the plaintiff) can now deal with Uncle John's estate as he pleases," "he (meaning the plaintiff) can go so far as to mortgage his land." Save as above, he denies the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6, and says that the words spoken by him on the 28th of August were spoken without malice, were true in substance and in fact, and were spoken in the public interest. The defendant specially denies that he did, or intended to, impute to the plaintiff that he had acted, or was in the habit of acting, or that he would act, fraudulently or dishonestly or illegally in his profession or otherwise, or that he would do so in the administration of the said Lotz's estate or anybody else's estate, or that he would transfer the said Lotz's property to himself and leave nothing of the estate for Lotz and his heirs, or that he was not a fit and proper person to administer the estate of Lotz or anyone else. Therefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's replication stated:

1. Plaintiff admits that prior to the month of July, 1906, the said Jan Coenraad Lotz, of Prince Albert, was the holder of various promissory notes given for moneys lent by the said Lotz, and that he, upon the instructions of the said Lotz, called up certain of the notes, the interest on which had not been paid for some considerable time. He admits further that, being specially authorised thereto by the said Lotz, he requested one J. M. Theunissen, an attorney of Prince Albert, to deliver up to him all papers and documents belonging to the said Lotz, which were in the possession of the said Theunissen.

2. Save as above and except in so far as the plea contains admissions, he denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea contained, joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment in terms of the declaration.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

At the request of Sir H. Juta, all witnesses were ordered out of court.

Jacobus Conradus de Beer, carpenter, of Prince Albert, said he was the son of S. R. de Beer, and his mother was a sister of Lotz. Witness had been asked to take care of Lotz, who was about 80 years of age. Taute was sent for, and witness was present at the interview between Lotz and Taute. The latter was given some promissory notes to collect by the former, and Taute was also handed Lotz's power of attorney. On August 28 last, witness, who was not then looking after Lotz, called at the latter's residence. He there saw Odendal, who was talking to Lotz. Odendal asked witness if he had signed as a witness to a certain power of attorney, and witness replied "No." Odendal then said that Taute did unlawful acts in his office, and allowed unlawful documents to be signed. Subsequently witness met defendant in a bar, and there was "a row" between them. About a week later defendant met witness, and the former asked him whether he (witness) had made an affidavit against him. Witness answered "Yes," and defendant said that if he had been in witness's place, he would not have done it for £500. On another occasion defendant showed that he had ill-feeling against plaintiff.

Cross-examined: Lotz had been in a weak state of mind. Defendant's wife was a niece of Lotz. Witness was not speaking the truth when he told defendant that he had not signed the power of attorney. Witness was not certain how many papers he signed, but he thought two.

Willem Avenant, farmer, of Prince Albert, said he lived near Lotz, whom he looked after in succession to the previous witness. Lotz during the time witness was there was ill, and witness could not say he was quite in his right mind. Witness was present when defendant called on August 28. Defendant asked Lotz what papers he had given to plaintiff. Lotz answered that plaintiff was his attorney. Odendal then observed: "That paper means that Taute is now the possessor of your belongings, and he will as quickly as possible do away with them." Odendal added that Taute was doing illegal things already.

Andries Stephanus Snyman, farmer, said he had been acting as chief overseer to Lotz, to whom he was related by marriage. Witness did not know of the passing of the power of attorney until it had been signed. One day Lotz asked witness to sort out some promissory notes to be sent to his attorney. On August 28, Odendal visited Lotz's house, and asked the latter what papers he had signed. Odendal had some words with De Beer, who was amongst those also present. Odendal said they allowed strangers to come and get the old man to sign papers without the presence of his relatives. De Beer then observed that if Odendal did not leave the old man alone he (De Beer) would go to the Magistrate, and Dr. Luttig urged them not to quarrel. Odendal next said: "How can you appoint such a man as Taute, who is a stranger, and will squander all Uncle John's property, and the old man won't have any possessions, and Taute will arrange it so that he will remain sole heir of Uncle John." Witness retorted: "If you say that I will go to Mrs. Lotz and tell her." Defendant then said that Taute had already allowed illegal documents to be signed in his office, adding that there was a sum of £300 which they would never see again. Subsequently, Mrs. Lotz sent witness to see the papers with the instruction that if there was anything wrong with them he was to bring them back.

Sybrand R. de Beer, storekeeper, of Prince Albert, said he was brother-in-law to Lotz. Witness knew of the power of attorney the same day it was signed; he witnessed it, but did not see it signed. Taute read the power to witness, and Lotz told witness about the matter. Witness used to go to Lotz's house three or four times a day. At the time the power was signed, Lotz was weak, but in his sound mind. On August 28 witness went to Lotz's house, and asked defendant whether he was not ashamed to disturb the old man in that way. Defendant said: "You allow strangers to come here with powers of attorney without even the presence of a relative." Defendant further said, "Taute has now the general power of attorney, and he will now raise bonds on the property of the old man, and he will afterwards be the sole heir of the old man." Witness turned to the doctor, and said, "An end must be made to this now," but defendant went on: "Taute has now already in a disgraceful manner got people to sign notes in his own name."

Johannes Nieuwoudt, farmer, of Prince Albert, stated that on August 23 Lotz sent him to Taute to ask whether the latter had collected certain accounts for him. At that time Lotz was in his sound mind, and spoke to witness about farming operations.

Cross-examined: At times, Lotz was sick in his head; witness was one of his night nurses for a time.

Johan Godfried Taute, an attorney, of Prince Albert, stated that he had known Lotz since June last, when he asked witness to act for him as his attorney. On August 22 witness was sent for by Lotz, and on the following day witness went to see the old man, who went into affairs generally with him. Koos de Beer was present throughout the whole of the interview. The power of attorney was signed on August 24. When Lotz signed the power of attorney he was undoubtedly in full possession of his mental powers. Amongst the promissory notes was one signed by Van der Hoeven, which was overdue. Witness got Van der Hoeven to give a new promissory note, payable at witness's office. Witness had heard what Odendal had said, and immediately sent him a letter of demand. Witness, in December, 1906, had also warned defendant to be careful what he said about him. Mrs. Lotz sent for witness on August 28, and told him that defendant had made the statements, to which witness replied that they were false. Witness's object in bringing the present action was not to get heavy damages, but to stop the circulation of the report, which was certainly doing him a lot of harm.

Cross-examined: Witness did not know Lotz was weak in his mind until August 28. Van der Hoeven never spoke to witness about the old gentleman's state of mind. If Dr. Luttig knew Lotz was insane, it was his duty to tell witness; if witness had known it, he would not have had the power of attorney signed.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Nicholas Cornelius van der Hoeven, farmer, of Prince Albert, deposed that he was well acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Lotz. On August 27 last Taute sent for witness. At that date the old gentleman was not right in his head—his mind wandered. Taute accused witness of favouring Theunissen with Lotz so far as the latter's papers were concerned; witness denied this. Taute then showed witness his general power of attorney, witness expressing his surprise thereat. Plaintiff then said, "I'll show you something more," and produced two promissory notes which witness had passed in favour of Lotz. Witness refused to sign a fresh note in favour of Lotz, because it was payable on demand.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did Taute ever tell you that he intended putting out Lotz's money on mortgage?]

Yes; he did.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you tell Odendal what Taute told you?]

Yes.

Dr. Luttig, of Prince Albert, said that in July last he attended Lotz, and was of opinion that Lotz was incapable of looking after his own affairs. Witness accordingly recommended that the estate should be placed under curatorship. On August 28 witness was present at a conversation between Odendal and De Beer at Lotz's house. Odendal expressed surprise at Taute being given Lotz's power of attorney without his giving security. Witness did not hear anything said about Taute having done illegal things in his office or having promissory notes made in his own name instead of that of Lotz. It did not appear to witness that Odendal said anything maliciously. It struck him that Odendal said what he did say merely to point out the possibility of such things happening, and that Odendal wanted to be accurate in a matter of business.

Cross-examined: Witness was Theunissen's brother-in-law. Witness had witnessed two powers of attorney which Lotz had passed in favour of Taute.

Stephanus Johan Marinowits, of Prince Albert, deposed that on August 28 he went to Lotz's house with defendant. Witness detailed the conversation which took place between Odendal and De Beer on that occasion.

John William Odendal, the defendant, said he knew that in July and August last old Mr. Lotz was not in possession of all his senses. Lotz had one son, aged 52, who was also of weak mind. Witness first heard of the power of attorney being given to plaintiff in August 28. He had occasion to go to Lotz's house that day, and in conversation he made use of the words set out in his plea.

Sir H. Juta: Did you accuse Taute of doing unlawful things in his office?

Defendant: Not in the very least.

Did you intend to impute anything dishonourable or fraudulent to Taute?—Not in the very least.

Did you say anything from which anybody could imagine that he wish to act fraudulently?—No.

Or that he would act fraudulently and dishonestly in the administration of Lotz's or anybody else's estate?—No.

Or that he would steal all Lotz's property?—No.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The only material evidence in this case is the evidence of witnesses who deposed to what took place at the conversations on August 28. If the version given by plaintiff's witnesses is correct, there can be no doubt that defendant would have been guilty of defamatory libel. If, on the other hand, the version given on behalf of the defendant is correct, then I consider that, under all the circumstances of the case, there was no defamation rendering defendant liable. Defendant had gone to see the old man, not as a stranger meddling in the affairs of others, but as a relative of the old man, who was very weak in mind and body. Lotz had an old wife, who could do little for him, and an imbecile son, who could do less. Accordingly plaintiff came as a friend and a relative, and not as a stranger. He had heard something about a power of attorney which had been passed, giving very large powers to plaintiff, and I accept the defendant's version of what took place, fortified as it is by the evidence of Marincowitz. Defendant asked: "Why did Uncle John give Taute a general power of attorney?" Then there is evidence that Lotz denied giving a general power of attorney. This little bit of evidence is of importance, because plaintiff's own witnesses say that the old man was always harping on the fact that he had given a document to Van der Hoven confirming him as his executor. I quite accept the statement made by Marincowitz and defendant that the old man denied giving such a power to the plaintiff. The old man was wrong, however, but that does not affect the point. Defendant said: "If Uncle John has not given a power of attorney, then Taute must be doing what is illegal." Under all the circumstances, I consider that the words used as they were are not to be regarded as libellous. I would not treat the occasion as a privileged one, but I should certainly say this, that the use of the words under these particular circumstances show that there was no animus injurandi. Mr. Buchanan says there may have been a verbal power given, but that was not the point. The point was, that there was this written power. The only powers he relied on were written powers, and if they fell to the ground, the legality of what plaintiff did would also fall to the ground. I am not prepared to say that plaintiff's witnesses came here positively to swear to words which were never used, but I think plaintiff's witnesses really misunderstood what took place. The misunderstanding is so evident, because part of what they said was really said, but they did not follow the whole of the context, and did not hear Lotz deny his having given the power of attorney. It seems to me that plaintiff's witnesses misunderstood the gist of the conversation, that they did not quite understand that these words were used in consequence of Lotz's denials, and they were led to believe that this statement was made by defendant. In my opinion, they were mistaken. The same remarks would apply to the second conversation on August 28. Dr. Luttig's evidence I fully accept as to what took place, but here, again, there may have been a misunderstanding. Snymann, I am satisfied, misunderstood the greater part of the conversation that took place. Part of this conversation both parties are agreed upon. For instance, as to giving the power of attorney to a stranger, that is admitted, and it is quite a reasonable thing for defendant to remark upon it, but there was certainly nothing libellous in the objection to this general power being given to a stranger. As to the statement that plaintiff could mortgage the land if he chose, that was perfectly true, and there was no doubt it was a very dangerous proceeding on the part of Lotz to give his general power of attorney to a person who was a comparative stranger. Objections of that kind are not necessarily libellous, and certainly not when used under the special circumstances under which they were used by defendant. The result of my finding is that plaintiff has not proved that the words alleged in the declaration were used by defendant, and consequently there must be judgment for defendant, with costs.

Ex parte WEGE AND Re VAN DYK AND MARAIS V. ABRAHAM AND CO.

Mr. McGregor moved for the revocation of the order granted on October 31, on the petition of V. Abraham, and an order that the writs of execution issued in terms of judgment obtained by Van Dyk and Marais in the Resident Magistrate's Court of Calvinia be no longer suspended, and that the messenger forthwith proceed with the execution, and hand over the proceeds thereof to Van Dyk and Marais.

A rule nisi was granted calling upon the respondents to show cause on December 12 next why an order should not be granted, rule to operate as an interim interdict, notice to be served on the Cape Town attorney for the respondent.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

EAST LONDON HARBOUR
BOARD V. CALEDONIA
SHIPPING CO. AND ANO- 1906.
THEE. Nov. 27th

Consolidation of actions—Leave to appeal.

Two companies instituted separate actions against a Harbour Board for damage done, through the defendant's negligence, to certain vessels belonging to the two companies respectively, but in order to save expense, it was agreed between all the parties that, as the same evidence would have to be taken in both cases, the two actions should be consolidated, which was accordingly done. The amount claimed by one of the companies was less, and the amount awarded was less than £500.

Held, that the Board was not entitled, by reason of such consolidation, to appeal to the Privy Council, as if the amount claimed had exceeded £500.

This was an application on the part of the East London Harbour Board, in the case of the Board, and the Caledonia Landing, Shipping and Salvage Company, Ltd., and the Colonial Fisheries Company, for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

The two actions had been consolidated by consent of parties, and judgment had been given in favour of the first plaintiff (Caledonia Company) for £3,000, and in favour of the second plaintiff for £250. The first plaintiff's claim had been for a sum of £4,000 and the second plaintiff's claim had been for a sum of £345 (16 C.T.R., 792).

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) appeared for the applicant Board. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) appeared for the respondents.

Mr. Schreiner contended that there was one consolidated case and one consolidated judgment. The consolidated claim had been for a sum of over £500, and so the defendants had a right to appeal to the Privy Council in both cases. The right involved in the case was of far greater value than £500 to the Harbour Board. The judgment, though it only awarded damages, was really a declaration of rights. The civil right involved was the liability of the Board for an action of the Harbour Master, which was beyond its authority.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That right can be decided on appeal in the Caledonia case without appealing in the Fisheries case.]

Counsel quoted De Villiers v. Divisional Council (1875, Buch., p. 125).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but there the right involved (i.e., the right to take gravel) between De Villiers and the Council was worth more than £500, although the claim was only for £25;

but here the right involved between the Board and the Fisheries Company is not worth more than £500.]

Continuing, Mr. Schreiner said that the Fisheries Company was in liquidation, and if this Court refused leave to appeal in the Fisheries' case application for leave would be made to the Privy Council, and he asked that execution be stayed till the Privy Council gave or refused leave to appeal.

In support of this application he quoted Smith v. Davies (Buch., 1878), Roebuck v. Murdoch (1 J., 43), and La Foret v. Yourac (1 M., 497). The Fisheries Company was in liquidation, and could not give security for the return of the money if the amount of the judgment were paid over to them.

Mr. Searle said that no leave to appeal had yet been granted in the Fisheries case, and so there was no reason to stay execution. Notice had been given to the applicants that application would be made by the respondents to amend the judgment by adding interest a tempore morae. This was a mere formal omission from the judgment, and he asked that interest a tempore morae be added to the amount of the judgment. The respondents were entitled to interest. He cited Voet (21, 1. 11).

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said that interest a tempore morae was never granted on an illiquid claim for damages. He did not oppose the application for interest from the date of judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am quite satisfied in this case that the only object of the consolidation of the two suits was to save the expense of a double set of counsel, a double set of attorneys, and of hearing witnesses twice over. Beyond that there was no object in the consolidation, and I certainly do not think that the effect of the consolidation would be to allow the East London Harbour Board to appeal to the Privy Council in respect of the Colonial Fisheries Company as if the claim in that case had been in excess of £500. The claim was only for £350, and I do not think this Court would be justified in giving leave to appeal merely because the action brought by that company was for certain purposes consolidated with an action for more than £500 brought by another company. There is something in the suggestion as to a stay of execution. It is a very peculiar case. It is not a case likely to frequently occur, where the company, which has obtained the benefit of the judgment is in liquidation, and there is a clear intention on the part of the unsuccessful party to appeal against the judgment. The Court will stay execution for a short period, just sufficient time to make application to the Privy Council for leave to appeal, that is for six weeks from this date. In regard to the Caledonian Company, there the amount was far in excess of the £500, and clearly the Harbour Board is entitled to appeal, and the only question is as to security, whether security should be required from the Harbour Board, or whether the Court should direct execution. I cannot see what takes this case out of the ordinary rule. Here was damage done to the ship, for which the Court has held the Board liable. There seems to me to be no special reason in this case why the ordinary course should not be followed and the Harbour Board ordered to pay the amount of damages. As to the interest a tempore morae, I am not prepared to say what the Court would have done at the time if the application had been made, but the Court's attention was not drawn specially to the matter, and the Court is not prepared to alter the judgment. The result therefore will be that there will be leave to the applicant to appeal to the Privy Council in the case of the Caledonian Company and direct that the judgment be carried into execution, and that the company, before execution, enter into good and sufficient security as directed by the 50th section of the Charter of Justice. Leave refused to the applicants to appeal to the Privy Council in the case of the Colonial Fisheries Company, but a stay of execution granted for six weeks, the costs of the application to be paid by the applicants.

Appeal to the Court of Appeal—Extension of time—Good and sufficient cause shown.

On an application for an extension of time within which the appellant shall prosecute his appeal under the last proviso of Sec. 24 of Act 35 of 1896, it appeared that he could not be ready within the time fixed, that there was a bona fide intention on his part to appeal, and that the delay was not due to any culpable neglect on his part.

Held, that good and sufficient cause had been shown for extending the time.

This was an application for an extension of time in which to prosecute an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Scarle, K.C., and Mr. Upington), appeared for the applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), appeared for the respondents.

Sir H. Juta said the judgment had been satisfied. The appeal was noted in time, but it was impossible to print the record within the three months allowed by the rules of Court.

Mr. Schreiner said the time could not be extended unless good and sufficient cause were shown for extending it. Here no good and sufficient cause was shown. Counsel quoted Hiscock v. De Wet (1 A.C., 35) and Van Nickert and Brown v. Colonial Government (18 S.C., 23).

De Villiers, C.J.: A very large discretion is left to the Court of Appeal, under the last proviso of the 24th section, and the Court has never placed a rigid construction upon the words "good and sufficient cause shown." The Court must be satisfied that it is a bona fide application; that there is a bona fide intention on the part of the person applying to appeal, and that there has been no culpable negligence on his part. In the present case there has certainly been some neglect, but not such negligence as would justify the Court in refusing leave. There is certainly no evidence of any desire on the part of the applicant to delay the appeal. Circumstances have induced him to postpone the matter, but I do not think it was intentional. Under the circumstances the Court will grant leave to appeal, notwithstanding the expiration of the time. But, considering that the costs of this application would not have been incurred if the application had been made in time, I think the precedent established in the case cited might fairly be followed here, and the applicant ordered to pay the costs of the application.

Spoilation—Warranty of horse.

Mr. Close was for the applicant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent. Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule nisi, granted on the 31st October last, calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to return to the applicant a cart, horse, and harness.

Mr. Benjamin read an affidavit by the respondent which set out that he exchanged a pony, cart, and harness with the applicant for a heavier horse, and he also paid the applicant thirty shillings in addition. The horse which he received from the applicant was not up to the guarantee given, and he returned it and took away his pony, cart, and harness. The horse was guaranteed to be quiet, whereas it kicked and jibbed freely, and several times refused to move.

In a replying affidavit the applicant denied giving any guarantee with the horse.

[Hopley, J.: He has made a bad exchange. It was an exchange which is recognised by our law. His remedy surely must be by way of damages for a false guarantee.]

Mr. Benjamin: The position we take up is this: It was taken under such circumstances that the Court would not interfere by way of motion. It was quite competent for the applicants to bring their action. I submit it as a matter which should be decided on action.

Hopley, J.: The rule must be made final. The respondent parted with his cart and horse for a horse which he says was guaranteed to be fit for certain work, but which he found out afterwards was not really fit for the work. He gave a chestnut pony and a cart for this animal and took thirty shillings to boot. He took the animal and the thirty shillings, and delivered his own property to the applicant Findlay. After a trial he found that the animal he had received was not fit for the work which it had been guaranteed to do. Consequently he was dissatisfied with the bargain he had made, and instead of taking the proper legal remedy he went and tendered back the animal at the stable rented by the applicant and re-possessed himself of the horse and trap which had once been his own property. This he did without notice to the applicants. Apparently there was some sort of person in charge of this stable, but one does not know whether he had any authority to consent on the part of the applicant. Presumably he could not. When the applicants found out the course of conduct adopted by the respondent they at once protested, and threatened him with the rigour of the criminal as well as the civil law. It was only then that the respondent tendered back the thirty shillings as well as the horse in place of the one he had given away. He could not take such a course and the applicants are perfectly right in asking that their property should be restored. If they really guaranteed this as a good horse to do certain work—if they guaranteed a jibbing horse, a kicking horse, as a good and quiet worker, the respondent would have his remedy by way of action. Though the respondent did not use force in getting back the cart and pony, and though he acted openly, in a certain sense, still it was, in my opinion, an act of spoliation, carried out in a bold, high-handed manner. He took property which did not belong to him, and should be compelled to hand it back forthwith. The rule must be made absolute with costs.

ROSE V. TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD.

Mr. Russell applied on behalf of the applicant for the fixing by the Court of a day for trial by jury of this action, which was a claim for £1,500 damages for personal injuries.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), who appeared for the respondents, did not object.

His Lordship: What date do you suggest?

Mr. Russell: The Act does not say that it is necessary for a trial by jury to take place during term.

His Lordship: Surely you do not wish the Judges to sit out of term more than they do.

Sir H. Juta: If the case is heard out of term I will object.

His Lordship: The Judges are trying to get a breath of sea air before the next term begins.

The case was set down for trial on February 7 and 8.

PHERSON V. PHERSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied on behalf of the applicant for an order compelling the respondent, James Henry Pherson, to pay her the sum of £30 to enable her to sue the respondent for a judicial separation.

Dr. Greer appeared for the respondent.

The applicant's affidavit stated she was married to respondent at Claremont in 1891, and that since December, 1905, he had become addicted to the excessive use of alcoholic liquor, and had ill-treated her by assaulting her. He had taken possession of her property, which included a bank-book. She believed that he intended to realise the whole of the property and leave the country, and with the object of frustrating that she had applied to the Court to interdict him from selling the property.

The respondent's affidavit stated that he was a jobbing contractor, and that owing to the depression he was only earning 22s. a week, out of which he had to support an adopted child. He denied that he was addicted to the excessive use of alcoholic liquor, or that he had ill-treated his wife. She had left him of her own accord, and he was at present suing for restitution of conjugal rights.

In a replying affidavit the applicant stated that the respondent had, during the present season, laid down ten tennis courts at an average of £7 each, and had drawn money from the Claremont Municipality for a contract.

[Hopley, J.: It is very extraordinary how these people will waste money. Why the cost of the application and opposition in this motion will cost as much as would have settled this application.]

Counsel were heard in argument.

An order calling on the respondent to hand over the amount in the savings bank (£10), and another £10 to the applicant, was made. The question of costs to stand over.

SYRKIN V. WEINBERG BROTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin applied to make absolute a rule nisi, calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not be interdicted from collecting any of the debts due to applicant or from using his stock-in-trade. Dr. Greer appeared for respondents.

Affidavits on both sides having been read,

Hopley, J., inquired if it was not rather hard on the respondents if they had a case that their business should be stopped, especially if they could give security.

Mr. Benjamin said he was instructed that if the £300 was not returned, then they wished to press for their pledge.

[Hopley, J.: Suppose the £300 is contained in the stock-in-trade on the shelves?]

Mr. Benjamin: There is no proof that it is.

[Hopley, J.: Do you say that the £300 has not gone into the business?]

Mr. Benjamin: It has not.

Dr. Greer: I am instructed that it has.

Mr. Benjamin: And I am instructed that it has not.

[Hopley, J.: Then that makes the case all the harder. Why should you be keen on this pledge if he gives you ample security?]

Mr. Benjamin: We would be prepared to accept that.

Hopley, J. suggested that the parties agree to use only £100 worth of stock-in-trade, and give absolute security for that amount.

Dr. Greer: I am instructed that there are other creditors—

Mr. Benjamin: They are not before the Court.

[Hopley, J.: I have nothing to do with other creditors. If he cannot settle with them, then there must be an insolvency.]

Dr. Greer asked leave to discuss the matter with his clients.

[Hopley, J.: Yes; I do not want to see these people cutting each other's throats.]

Dr. Greer said his client accepted the suggestion of the Court.

Mr. Benjamin asked if the security could be given subject to the approval of the Registrar.

Hopley, J., inquired what was to be done with the outstanding debts.

Dr. Greer said his client would place all outstanding debts which formed part of the security over to a special account.

Mr. Benjamin: I think the money collected should be handed over to us. I have authority to ask for an order that they should be handed over.

Hopley, J., suggested that the accounts be handed over to some impartial accountant for collection.

Mr. Benjamin said he was instructed to agree to that, and suggested Mr. Foot.

Dr. Greer said he could not agree to that.

[Hopley, J.: You do not want me to make this rule absolute, do you, and spoil the business?]

Dr. Greer said he feared that the rights of other creditors would be imperilled. If the debts were collected by an impartial person and retained by him pending the decision of the case, they would agree.

[Hopley, J.: Yes, I see your point.]

Hopley, J.: In this case, it seems to me, as the matter is presented on the papers, that there is an agreement between the parties whereby the applicant advanced £300, and there seems to be very good documentary evidence that he did actually pay over the sum of £300 or its equivalent to the respondents, and that the respondents agreed to give him certain plant, stock-in-trade, and book debts in security, and to transfer and assign all their interest in such property to him to effect such security. Now, this is an arrangement which is not at the present moment being questioned by any third party or any creditor, who says that he would suffer thereby. The party who questions it is one of the partners of the firm, and the reason he questions it is because he was out of the country at the time it was made, and his partner, a younger brother, made the arrangement. Such a person cannot take up that point, because his partner has power to make a compromise in the business, and, if necessary, to pledge the assets. It is not denied that this was an advance to the business, but Reuben Weinberg says that on his return he repudiated the entire arrangement. But he could not repudiate it unless he was in a position to pay off to the person with whom the debt had been contracted the amount advanced, and to free the property pledged. Therefore, the thing must stand as an arrangement of advance against a pledge of moveables. There may be a question as to whether there was a valid delivery, but on the affidavits, as far as I can see, a delivery which is good and maintainable in law was made. The goods with which the parties were carrying on business were taken to another place, which was specially hired for that purpose, and the key was held by the applicant himself, in token of the possession which he had acquired. The book debts were not ceded to him, as they ought to have been under the agreement. It is only right, as long as the agreement stands, that they should be handed over, if not to him, to somebody who will collect them for the applicant. It might, however, be inadvisable to hand them over to the applicant, because he might think he had sufficient security in the stock-in-trade, and might not take diligent care to forthwith collect these book debts, and so they might become bad, and be lost to all the parties in this case. Therefore, it is wise to say that an impartial business man shall collect them as quickly as possible, so that they may be saved to all these parties. It is perfectly clear on the documents, since nothing has been said of any fraud, that £300 is owing. It is, therefore, to the advantage of the respondents, as well as the applicants, that whatever can be collected should be paid off this £300. Upon Reuben Weinberg coming back from Europe, he tried to repudiate the whole thing, and treated the applicant as though he had no right to the things, or to exercise any rights upon the premises in which they had been placed, and where the respondents were carrying on the business under a sub-lease of the premises. The best order I can make so as to try and safeguard the rights of all parties, is that the rule be made absolute pending the result of any action which the respondent might bring. It is further ordered as to the outstanding debts that they be ceded forthwith, collection to be made by Mr. A. N. Foot, and to be applied by him to reduction for the advance of £300 by applicant, and it is further ordered that the stock may be used by the respondents in the course of their business upon their giving security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court for any stock which may be taken by them for such use. Stock to be taken in lots of not less than £50 at a time. The costs will abide the result of the action, and failing any action brought by the respondents, the costs to be paid by the respondents. The action to be instituted within the next fortnight, and to be put down for hearing next term.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

In re COLLISON, LTD. { 1906.
Ex parte COLLISON. { Nov. 28th.

Company—Winding up—Inability to pay debts—Unrealizable assets.

In an application by certain debenture-holders of a company for its winding up, on the ground of its inability to pay its debts, it appeared that the assets were valued at £145,000 and its liabilities at £95,000, that the Standard Bank, with which it dealt, refused to grant it further banking facilities, and that in consequence the company found great difficulty in satisfying current liabilities; but the Court, not being satisfied that the company did not possess sufficient realizable assets for the payment of its debts or that sufficient efforts had been made to get the company out of its difficulties,

Held that under the circumstances, the application should be refused.

This was an application brought on the petition of the chairman of directors of Henry C. Collison, Ltd., for a winding-up order under sections 135 and 136 of the Companies Act, 1892.

The affidavit of Harry Collison stated that he was the chairman of directors of Henry C. Collison, Ltd., carrying on business as wine and spirit merchants, in Cape Town and Johannesburg. The company had a registered office at 9, Castle-street, Cape Town, and was registered in the office of the Registrar of Deeds, Cape Town. The company was indebted to the Standard Bank, Ltd., at its Cape Town branch, in the sum of £11,049 16s. 10d., whereof £7,500 was covered by guarantee, since paid, but there was a clear balance unsecured of £3,549 16s. 10d. The amount so owing was the balance of an overdraft. The bank had refused further facilities, and had demanded payment of the sum of £11,049, on which interest was accumulating, and although the sum of £7,500 had been paid, the company was quite unable to settle the balance. The company had counted on further facilities from the bank and a further overdraft to carry on business for the next five or six months, but the bank had refused further advances and had closed the account. The company was also indebted to the Standard Bank Johannesburg branch in the sum of £11,000 or thereabouts, and the bank had applied for judgment on this claim in the Transvaal courts, and would with all expedition proceed to execution. The directors, in meeting assembled, had passed a resolution in favour of the winding up of the company. At a special meeting of the shareholders, in meeting assembled, it was resolved "that owing to the attitude taken by the bank and the endeavours to satisfy them having failed, steps be taken forthwith for the compulsory winding-up of the company." The company was unable to pay its debts to the bank as demanded. All shares in the company were fully paid up. The assets in the company were valued at £113,902, and, in addition, the Johannesburg branch was indebted in the sum of £34,000 to the Cape Town branch, and the liabilities were £82,316, of which £40,000 was represented by debentures. The assets in Johannesburg were £31,000, and the liabilities £12,069, in addition to the indebtedness to the Cape Town office, viz., £40,000. There was no available cash to carry on the business, as the Standard Bank had stopped banking facilities both at Cape Town and Johannesburg. Petitioner prayed for an order in terms of subsections 4 and 3 of sections 135 and 136 of the Companies Act, 1892, for the winding-up of the company, or for other relief.

The affidavit of Frederick Fitzwilliams, assistant manager of the Cape Town branch of the Standard Bank, stated that the bank was a creditor of the company in the following sums: Overdraft, with interest, £3,662 19s. 1d.; bills under discount, £10,174 4s. 11d.; drafts on the London office at the Cape Town branch, £2,012 10s. The bank also held certain bills for a considerable amount from the said company, which were held as security for the account of another customer. The bank was also a creditor of the Johannesburg branch, and, according to advices received from their Johannesburg branch, the account stood as follows: Overdraft, £5,115; bills under discount, £11,408. A separate account was in credit to the extent of £132 6s. 2d. As security for the whole amount, certain scrip was held valued at £6,679. The business was of very old standing, and had been carried on for many years, until it was floated into a registered company with limited liability in the year 1899. Since then the company had also carried on business successfully in Cape Town, but, as far as he could ascertain, it had become embarrassed through having advanced a considerable amount of capital for the purpose of carrying on the Transvaal business. Last year the Cape Town business resulted in a profit of £1,932 0s. 6d., though no portion of that was available, as there had been a loss of £7,744 10s. 11d. on the Transvaal business. From his knowledge of the business, deponent believed that it was in a sound condition, and that the embarrassment due to the loss in the Transvaal was temporary, and he submitted that a company which in the present state of depression in trade in Cape Town was able to show the profit above referred to must be considered to be in a strong position. The authorised capital of the company, according to the memorandum and articles of association, consisted of £85,000 divided into 17,000 shares of £5 each. He was not, however, able to say what proportion of these shares had been issued. The company owed about £12,000 on mortgage. In addition to this, it had issued debentures to the amount of £40,000, of which £25,000 was held by the widow of the late H. C. Collison, and £15,000 was held by one Harry Collison (chairman of the Board). Communications had passed between the said Harry Collison as representing the company, and the bank, the object being to endeavour to see whether security could be found to enable the bank to continue banking facilities. The bank held as security the guarantee of Harry Collison and one Reginald F. Vaile (vice-chairman of the company, and its representative in Johannesburg). The bank was not prepared to continue banking facilities above the amount of the guarantee of the said Harry Collison without further proof as to the financial position of the said Vaile. Deponent believed that the company was solvent, and that the object of the said Harry Collison and the other directors in proposing to go into liquidation was to secure the debenture-holders in respect of their debentures for £40,000. A sale of the assets in the present state of the market would result in a considerable loss. It would be injurious in the interests of the creditors, except the debenture-holders and mortgagees, to liquidate the company and dispose of the property of the company. Mr. Fitzwilliams, in a further affidavit, said that had any satisfactory arrangement been made or offered, the bank would certainly have allowed the overdraft to continue. As to the proceedings in Johannesburg, deponent said that the bank in Cape Town had received advices from Johannesburg stating that no proceedings had been taken there, except against the said Vaile as surety. An affidavit by Alfred John Barry, of Barry Bros., said that his firm was a creditor of the company for £4,612 4s. for wines and spirits sold. He was satisfied, from information that he had received, that the company was solvent, and that, in spite of certain losses which it had incurred in its Transvaal business, it was quite able to continue its business, and to pay its creditors in full. The position of the mortgagees and debenture-holders would not be prejudiced by the continuation of the business. The landed property of the company had recently been valued at £33,000. It would, dependent added, be a gross breach of faith if the company were now to be liquidated merely for the purpose of securing the holders of debentures. He believed that that was the real object of the present application.

Mr. Searle read a replying affidavit by Harry Collison, who said that several bills had already been dishonoured for a considerable amount. The company had no available sums to meet its bills. A large sum would be due at the end of the month for salaries. There would be no money to pay these salaries. The immovable property was already heavily hypothecated. No business arrangement could be made.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for applicants: Mr. Gardiner for Standard Bank and Barry Bros. (respondents).

Mr. Searle contended that the only point in the case was whether the company was in such a financial position as to be able to pay its debts. It seemed clear to those who had an intimate knowledge of its affairs that it could not pay its debts. The bank had still an overdraft of £3,000 odd against the company. The only possible way to protect the debenture-holders, creditors, and shareholders appeared to be that liquidators should be appointed. There need not be any realisation of the assets by a sale at present. It was necessary—in order that the rights of parties might be properly determined—that there should be a liquidation, otherwise the bank would take out a writ when it had obtained judgment, and would execute on the assets of the company. The bank did not deny that it had closed its account with the company. The company could not get any money anywhere, there were large debts due, bills had been dishonoured, and surely the company was insolvent, because his lordship had laid down on more than one occasion that the best proof of insolvency was where the party concerned could not pay his debts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose if the bank would be willing to continue facilities you would not insist upon this order?]

We have tried to obtain facilities, but have not succeeded. Mr. Collison is not anxious to have this business liquidated, but he has tried to get facilities, and the bank has closed him down. We are in the position of a starving man who asks for food, and is told that he has a good digestion and a good constitution, but is not given anything to eat.

Mr. Gardiner said that the petition was not properly before the Court. It was not a petition by the company itself under section 137, and the application did not fall under section 135.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But petitioner is a large creditor.]

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, but he is a debenture holder, and he can only come to the Court if his debentures are due and unpaid. Proceeding, he cited Buckley (8 ed., pp. 262, 264); Tennant's footnote to section 135 and the McIbournie Brewery case (1901, 1 C.D., 453). If the company's assets were insufficient a paid up shareholder had no interest whatever. He referred to Rica Gold-washing Company (11 C.D., 36).

The resolution of November 26, continued Mr. Gardiner, was not a special resolution under section 110.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But this technical objection is only postponing the evil day.]

Mr. Gardiner: One doesn't know that. Continuing, he referred to section 36 of the Companies Act. According to Mr. Collison's statement, there was an excess of £50,000 of assets over liabilities. Surely the company could give part of its assets as security. It could pledge stock. Under section 144 of our Act which corresponded to section 91 of the English Act, the Court might have regard to the wishes of the creditors and contributories. He referred to the case In re Uruguay Central Railway (11 C.D., 372).

Mr. Searle, in reply, referred to Buckley (p. 217), and said that if the company had not assets available to meet current liabilities it had to be wound up.

The assets in Cape Town were estimated at £113, 902, and in Johannesburg £31,000, while the liabilities were £94, 369. This showed a nominal balance of £50,000.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can I say then that this company is insolvent?]

It has got nothing to pay its debts. As Buckley says, a company may be wealthy, but still it may be insolvent.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I cannot accept that, even if Mr. Buckley says it, because it is simply ridiculous. It seems to me to be a ridiculous statement to make. I cannot consider that a company which has a balance of £50,000 assets over liabilities is unable to pay its debts.]

Mr. Searle: That is what the assets have been valued at. Counsel pointed out that the company had no available assets with which to pay debts and salaries falling due. As to the technical objections raised by his learned friend, he submitted that if sections 135 and 137 were read together, the company could petition the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am not satisfied at this stage that with care and prudence this company cannot yet pull through and be able to pay its debts. According to the petition presented to the Court, the assets of the company amount to £144,902 and the liabilities to £94,368, leaving a balance of assets over liabilities of £50,533. No doubt a large proportion of this balance may be unrealisable, but I am not satisfied that a considerable portion cannot be realised. I do not think that the applicant has done everything that can be reasonably expected to enable this company to carry on its business. Reference has been made to a passage from Buckley in which he says: "If a company is commercially insolvent, if, that is, it cannot meet current demands, it is properly the subject of a winding-up order. It is useless to say that if its assets are realised there will be ample to pay twenty shillings in the pound; that is not the test. A company may be at the same time insolvent and wealthy. It may have wealth locked up in investments not presently realisable, but, although this be so, yet if it have no assets available to meet its current liabilities it is commercially insolvent." With the greater part of this passage I quite agree, but I should find it difficult to believe that a wealthy company would not have some assets which it could realize for the payment of its debts. Certainly, in the present case, there is not sufficient evidence that the company does not possess sufficient realizable assets for the payment of its debts. Sufficient efforts have not been made to pull it through, and, so far as I can judge, the present application is made chiefly with the object of giving further protection to the applicants, who, as debenture holders, are already well secured.

Certainly the concurrent creditors are not fully represented before the Court. It is true that Mr. Collison is also a creditor for £7,000, advanced, but other creditors for more are opposing this application. The Standard Bank and Barry together are creditors for more than the claim of Mr. Collison, and there may be other creditors who would object to this order being now made, so that at this stage, with the information now before the Court, I am not prepared to grant an order, and the application will be refused.

Mr. Gardiner applied for creditors' costs of opposition.

De Villiers, C.J., said that costs of opposition would be allowed.

In re THE MILK SUPPLY CO. } 1906.
{ Nov. 28th.

Mr. Roux moved, in the matter of the Pure Milk Supply Co. (East London), for confirmation of first report of the official liquidator (Mr. Watson). Counsel stated that the report had lain for inspection, and that publication had been made, as ordered, in the "East London Dispatch," without any objections having been lodged.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he really did not see that there was anything in the report to confirm. There was simply a statement of the company's objects and financial position, but nothing was contained in the way of recommendations.

Mr. Roux said that he moved as a matter of practice. The application was purely formal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has the Court ever confirmed a report which proposes nothing? I will accept this report, but I cannot confirm it.]

Mr. Roux said that he would be prepared to take an order in those terms.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You may put in the report, but it is not an order. I do not see the object of making an application for confirmation of such a report as this.]

Mr. Roux said that he applied in accordance with what he understood was a well-recognised practice of the Court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would make an entry that the report had been put in, costs of this application to be costs in liquidation.

Ex parte LOUGHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to petitioner to withdraw from his appointment as joint liquidator of the Assets Realisation Association, Ltd. Petitioner said that practically the whole of the assets of the association had been realised, and there now only remained the investigation of the affairs of the company, for which purpose petitioner thought one liquidator would be sufficient. He asked for permission to withdraw, leaving Mr. Wyndham Bishop sole liquidator. Mr. Bishop supported the application.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VAN HEERDEN.

Dr. Rainsford moved, on behalf of petitioner, who resides at Victoria West, for an order authorising the registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract entered into by petitioner and his wife, before a certain notary. The notary, in his affidavit, stated that through the stress of work in his office at the time he had inadvertently omitted to send up the contract to his attorneys in Cape Town for registration.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is great negligence on the part of the notary.]

Dr. Rainsford said that, of course, the parties were not to blame in any way.

De Villiers, C.J.: I was thinking how we might make the notary feel he has been negligent. I cannot imagine such a tremendous stress of work at Victoria West that the notary should not have time to post a letter. An order will be granted as prayed. Although I cannot make an order against the notary to pay costs, seeing that he is not before the Court, I would suggest that he should pay costs.

SALIE V. SALIE.

Mr. Lewis moved, on the application of Nomenati Salie, to make absolute certain rule nisi, calling upon her son (Amanie Salie) to show cause why certain moneys standing in the Standard Bank, Cape Town, in his name, and the property of the applicant, should not be paid over to her duly-authorised agent, and why he (respondent) should not pay costs of this application. Counsel said that respondent had been served personally at Port Elizabeth, and that he had failed to appear to show cause.

Rule absolute, with costs.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

CARTER V. WIERSMA. { 1906.
Nov. 29th.

This was an application brought by George Samuel Carter, upon notice to respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted compelling him forthwith to remove certain facing boards, guttering, and portion of the gable of certain premises erected by him upon his property, lot No. 22, adjoining the property of the applicant, lot No. 21, situate off Forrest-road, Rondebosch.

The applicant alleged that respondent was the owner of an adjoining property, and that the portion of his premises overlapped his (applicant's) property. The respondent, who was a builder and contractor, had sold to applicant the ground now owned by him, and had erected a house for him. The respondent set up an agreement. He alleged that before he built his house he was given leave for the overlap by the applicant.

Mr. Close was for applicant; Mr. De Villiers was for respondent.

Affidavits having been read,

Mr. Close said it was undisputed that there was an encroachment, and it seemed clear that part of the trouble had been removed because the flow of water from the guttering on to applicant's property had now been stopped, and thus the application had to that extent been justified. Then, in regard to the overlap, it was alleged that an agreement had been arrived at between the parties. As to that, two important facts had to be remembered—no servitude had been registered against the applicant's property, and at the time when the alleged agreement was arrived at a survey had not been made.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is a great pity that in a paltry matter of this kind there should be all this litigation, but I am afraid it is impossible to decide it now. There is a great conflict of evidence upon an important question of fact as to whether this consent was given. I am afraid applicant will have to go to trial.]

Mr. De Villiers applied for costs, and urged that, considering that a servitude was involved in this case, the applicant had been entirely mistaken in his remedy, and should be ordered to pay costs of these proceedings.

De Villiers, C.J.: I do hope that the parties will settle the matter amicably. It is not worth litigating about this paltry matter, but there is an important question of fact involved which I cannot, upon affidavit, decide. The respondent alleges that there was a distinct agreement that, before he began building, that house, he should be allowed to put up this guttering, which would overlap the applicant's buildings, and he has supported his statement by a witness. The applicant, on the other hand, positively denies that any such agreement ever was made. Under these circumstances, I think the applicant should proceed by action, and the costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

WEIGHT AND ANOTHER V. S. 1906.
KELLY, N.O. AND OTHERS. (Nov. 29th.

Society—Change of constitution — Ultra vires.

The Grand Council of a Society, whose Constitution had been obtained from a Society in England "under the banner of Surrey," having had a disagreement with the Mother Society, resolved to constitute itself a Society "under the banner of South Africa," although nominally respecting the authority of the Mother Society. The Grand Council had no power under its Constitution to pass such a resolution. A delegate from a branch at S. had attended the meeting, but there was no evidence that he had any authority from the branch to agree to the resolution. Subsequently a meeting of 6 members out of 30 constituting the branch passed a resolution at S., without previous notice to all the members at S., in favour of the change of banner, but at the next meeting, which was attended by a larger number of members, this resolution was not confirmed. Thereupon, by direction of the Grand Council, the branch at S. was declared defunct and its regalia and other property were taken possession of.

Held, that the property thus taken must be restored to the S. branch.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the first and second respondents to show cause why they should not be ordered to restore to the custody of the first applicant certain property of which they were alleged to have illegally dispossessed him, and pay costs of this application, or, should the first respondent oppose the application, why they should not all be ordered to pay costs.

The property in question consisted of one set of regalia (thirteen pieces), four rituals, one minute-book, one registrar's books, etc.

A considerable body of affidavits was read, and the position of the parties may be briefly summarised as follows:

The Somerset West Lodge had, with other lodges in this country, been affiliated to the Sub-Council in South Africa of the Grand Surrey Banner of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, and a movement had been promoted with a view to the formation of a new banner, to be called the South African banner. At a meeting held at Woodstock on the 10th July last the following resolution was adopted: "Proposed by J. W. Kelly, K.O.M., A.D.G.P., seconded by W. F. Buchanan, that we, the delegates in Council meeting assembled, of the Grand Surrey Sub-Council of South Africa, whilst affirming the principle that the Grand Surrey Council in England in their dispute with the Grand Surrey Lodge, the said Council were then, and are now, the supreme governing authority of the Order: (a) Resolved that, in consequence of the internecine warfare between the said Council and the said G.S. Lodge, as exemplified by the conduct of the representatives of the G.S. Lodge, Johannesburg, due in a large measure to the laxity of the said Council in not withdrawing the charter of the G.S. Lodge when the said lodge became contumacious, and refused to recognise the validity of the decision arrived at by the said Council; (b) that in consequence of the unwarrantable interference of the Council and lodge (in their corporate and individual capacities) that this said Council in issuing to the Transvaal, without reference to this Council, in 1894, dispensations and properties thereto, and granting dispensations to Port Elizabeth, East London, and Bulawayo, when they had only three, one and two lodges respectively, a proceeding entirely at variance with their decision arrived at in Council assembled in 1890, wherein they laid down the principle that four lodges is the minimum; (c) the said Grand Council having since unduly interfered in lowering the status of this Council, especially in granting a Provincial Grand Lodge charter to Kimberley, with only three lodges, a proceeding in direct contravention of the before-mentioned decision of the Council; (d) having regard to the unreasonable delay in answering correspondence, supplying properties, and to their great lack of knowledge of the requirements of the Order in this country, and in view of the fact that it would be to the best interests of the Lodges in South Africa for properties to be procured and supplied by this Council direct, thus saving time and expense, we forthwith form ourselves into a South African Banner of the R.A.O.B., and we hereby constitute ourselves the Grand Council of such new banner." This resolution was put before the Somerset West Lodge at a meeting on the 14th July, when it was resolved: "Knight Kelly reading the resolution and giving us to fully understand the object of the said resolution, and also showing us how beneficial it would be to the lodge, it was moved by Primo James Lonsdale, and seconded by Primo Lacey, that we adopt the resolution, which was then put to the vote and carried." At a further meeting, however, the Somerset West Lodge declined to confirm the foregoing decision, and the Grand Council afterwards met and adopted the following resolution: "Sir Edward Collins proposed, and Sir James Savage seconded, that the charter of the Somerset West Lodge, No. 165, be taken away from them, that the Lodge be now declared defunct, that two members of the Grand Council be sent down to receive and take away all properties belonging to the said lodge, that the bank be notified that all moneys invested in their names are now ours, and that we require same to be handed over to us forthwith. Carried, nem. con."

"Primo Evans proposed and Sir James Savage seconded that the Right Hon. Sir Wm. Buchanan, P.G.P., and Sir Edward Collins, P.G.P., be the two members of this Council to go to Somerset West and secure the properties. Carried, nem. con." In accordance with this resolution, Messrs. Buchanan and Collins went to the lodge rooms of the Somerset West Lodge on the 8th September last, and during the absence of Mr. Weight, to whom the regalia, etc., had been entrusted, as the Grand Host of the lodge, removed the property in question, his bookkeeper allowing the property to be taken on the production of the authority under which the emissaries of the Grand Council of the South African Banner were acting.

Mr. McGregor was for the applicants, James Weight, hotel proprietor, of Somerset West, and Arthur Stanley Wood, in his capacity of president of the Somerset West Lodge, No. 165, of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes (Grand Surrey Banner). Mr. Upington was for James Wm. Kelly, as president of the Grand Council of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes (South African Banner), and as such representing the Grand Council, and Edward Collins and Wm. F. Buchanan.

De Villiers, C.J., interposed, and asked Mr. Upington what was the effect of the resolution when the Grand Council cut themselves adrift from the Grand Surrey Banner?

Mr. Upington: Not entirely, but they are the governing body of the Order in South Africa at the present time, or those lodges, at any rate, which have given in their allegiance to it, such as the Somerset West Lodge.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Under what regulation was this Council constituted?]

Mr. Upington: They have not actually withdrawn from the Grand Surrey Banner; they have only taken wider powers than they possessed before. They still hold their charter from the mother body of the world, the Grand Surrey Banner. I have the charter here (produced).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Under what regulation did they pass that resolution?]

Mr. Upington: The resolution providing for their having wider powers?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, it is rather more than that. I want to follow the affidavits as they go along.]

Mr. Upington: I do not know that there is any actual rule relating to that matter, but I think it was done in pursuance—

[De Villiers, C.J. (interposing): This taking away the charter. It is proposed and seconded "that the charter be taken away from the Somerset West Lodge, and that the Lodge be now declared defunct."]

Mr. Upington: That was because they were considered as being in contempt under the provisions of this rule.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In what way?]

Mr. Upington: Well, for one thing, they removed their lodge from one place to another without the permission of the Grand Council, and in the second place they have taken up the position—and that really is the bone of contention between the parties—that, after passing this resolution in favour of the Banner of South Africa, they subsequently purported to rescind it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What I want is a rule authorising these delegates in Council assembled to pass this resolution.]

Mr. Upington said he was not aware that there was an actual rule upon the point. The only thing is a letter annexed to the affidavit by Mr. Buchanan from the Grand Secretary of the Grand Council under the Grand Surrey Banner of the mother banner of the world, defining the position of the Council in South Africa.

The reading of the affidavits was then proceeded with.

Mr. Upington, in argument, called his lordship's attention to the resolution passed at the Conference at Woodstock on the 10th July last, and the resolution subsequently passed on the 14th July by the lodge at Somerset West, when it was agreed to adopt the resolution passed by the Woodstock meeting. So that all that the present applicants made now of their dispute with the Grand Council being due to some subsequent action on the part of the Grand Council really had no basis or fact at all. If they, knowing the full terms of that resolution, adopted it, then surely they could not take advantage of that fact now, and say that the Grand Council had formed a new banner, and that they withdrew their allegiance from the Grand Council.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How could that bind the lodge at Somerset West?]

Mr. Upington said it bound the lodge in this way: The Grand Council had a delegate from Somerset West there present when the long resolution was passed on the 10th July. He contended, firstly, that their delegate was there, and, secondly, the lodge on the 14th July adopted the resolution passed by the Woodstock meeting on the 10th July.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the meeting at Somerset West was not duly convened.

Mr. Upington: They say now that it was not duly convened.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How many members were present?]

Mr. Upington: We cannot speak as to that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Apparently there were six present.]

Mr. Upington said that his clients had had no opportunity of answering that allegation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What I am anxious to see is your authority for passing this resolution, firstly, the resolution of the 10th July, and then the subsequent resolution by which you claim the right to all the property subscribed for by the people in Somerset West.]

Mr. Upington said that, in the first place, his contention was that the people in the Somerset West Lodge, having adopted the resolution passed on the 10th July at Woodstock, and accepted the Grand Council as the governing body in South Africa, could not now be heard to say that they desired to withdraw. The Somerset West Lodge resolved to approve the formation of the South African Banner of the R.A.O.B., and recognise the new council as the governing body of the Order in South Africa.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The sitting Primo, Wood, says that that was a wholly illegal meeting.]

Mr. Upington submitted that there was nothing to show that six members who were present at the meeting did not form a quorum. The Court would presume that things were done decently and in order, unless there were something to show that Mr. Wood, who was responsible for the regulation of the proceedings, showed that they were not in order. Mr. Upington went on to submit that in any case it was quite clear, South African Banner or no South African Banner, that the Grand Council still acted under the Grand Surrey Banner. It had not absolutely cut adrift and become a perfectly independent banner. If the resolution of the Somerset West Lodge were irregular and illegal, of course there was an end to the matter, but it was curious that this point was not brought out at such a stage as to enable respondents to answer it. But, apart from that, the fact still remained that, as regarded South Africa, the Grand Council was still the governing body, and the rules (112-3-4) provided that lodges guilty of certain offences may be declared defunct, and their property may be taken. So that, entirely apart from the legality or otherwise of the resolution of the Somerset West Lodge, the parties would revert to their original position, and their original position would be that the Somerset West Lodge would be a minor lodge under the constitution prior to July, 1906.

Without calling upon Mr. McGregor.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is impossible not to respect the patriotism of these respondents, who are anxious to give prominence to the South African Banner in preference to the mother banner of Surrey. Their patriotism, however, must give way to the law, which is on the side of the applicants. On the 10th July there seems to have been a meeting of delegates in council, and the following declaration was passed: that the delegates in council meeting assembled of the Grand Surrey Sub-Council of South Africa, affirming the principle that the Grand Surrey Council in England were then and are now the supreme governing authority of the Order." They admit that, and then they forthwith proceed to adopt a vote of censure upon the Home Council, and to declare that they now forthwith form themselves into a South African Banner, and to forthwith constitute themselves into a Grand Council. I asked for some authority or rule under which they had the power to constitute themselves into a South African Banner and the Grand Council of such Banner, and no answer was given. No answer has been given, nor can be given. The resolutions which were passed referred to several matters and referred to the Grand Council have unduly interfered in lowering the status of this Council, especially in granting a Provisional Grand Lodge Charter to Kimberley with only three lodges, a proceeding in direct contravention of the before-mentioned decision of the Council. "(D) Having regard to the unreasonable delay in answering correspondence, supplying properties, and to their great lack of knowledge of the requirements of the Order in this country, and in view of the fact that it would be to the best interests of the lodges in South Africa for properties to be procured and supplied by this Council direct, thus saving time and expense, we forthwith form ourselves into a South African Banner of the R.A.O.B., and we hereby constitute ourselves the Grand Council of such new Banner." They passed that resolution. I do not, therefore, consider that the letter which four years before had been received from the Grand Surrey Council's secretary had anything to do with the resolution. Well, then, it would appear that the Somerset West Council held a meeting there.

and that Council seems to have passed a resolution which is relied upon by the respondents, and that resolution was signed by Wood. Wood explains what took place. He says: "Kelly came to Somerset West and brought together six members of the lodge out of a total number on the books of 30, and at this meeting of six members held on the 14th July, 1906, at the Central Hotel, Somerset West, the resolution was passed. This meeting was not summoned in accordance with the rules of the Order, and no proper notice was given either by advertisement or by circular, as provided by rule 108." Now, even although that rule does not apply, certainly common justice would require that before the lodge at Somerset West could be called upon to serve under this self-constituted Grand Council of Woodstock, there should be full notice given to every member of the body at Somerset West, who are the subscribers to the funds. Well, then, they took an opportunity at the very next meeting, on the 21st July, to undo what had been done. Wood, sitting as Primo, makes the following statement: "It was proposed by . . . and seconded by . . . that the minutes, cash account, and roll-call be passed as correct, with the exception of minute No. 2, re changing our banner, as there were only six financial members present, and further that the financial members had not been warned by circular or advertisement, as should have been done, and therefore, object to that resolution being confirmed, and request the Grand Secretary to withdraw this lodge." Now, there was no delay; it was at the very next meeting. The lodge members confirmed the minutes of the previous meeting, but they refused to confirm that minute, which was relied upon by the respondents in regard to this new banner. Well, then, what is the next step taken by the Grand Council of the South African Banner? On the 6th September "Sir Edward Collins proposed, and Sir James Savage seconded, that the charter of the Somerset West Lodge, No. 165, be taken away from them, that the lodge be now declared defunct, that two members of the Grand Council be sent down to receive and take away all properties belonging to the said lodge, that the bank be notified that all moneys invested in their names are now ours, and that we require same to be handed over to us forthwith.—Carried nem. con." Also: "Primo Evans proposed, and Sir James Savage seconded, that the Right Hon. Sir Wm. Buchanan, P.G.P., and Sir Edward Collins, P.G.P., be the two members of this Council to go to Somerset West and secure the properties.—Carried nem. con." Well, it is a most extraordinary proceeding—this self-constituted Banner passing this resolution sending two men down there to take away their property, which other people had subscribed and paid for. Such a proceeding cannot for one moment be sanctioned, even if everything had been properly done at the Woodstock Conference, but considering that that Woodstock Conference itself has not proved its right to constitute itself the Grand Council of a new banner, as they call it. I consider that there is no power whatever on the part of the respondents to send this deputation down to Somerset West to deprive the lodge thereof of that property. The property may not be of much value, but they treasure it, they treasure their regalia and all the property they have in their humble manner acquired, and the respondents must return the property forthwith. The application must, therefore, be granted, with costs.

Having heard counsel on the question of costs of previous proceedings, when the hearing had been postponed,

His Lordship said that he saw no reason for altering the decision he had already announced, that the application would be granted, with costs.

In re MORGAN'S BREWERY CO., LTD. 1906.
{ Nov. 29th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the surviving liquidator of Morgan's Brewery Co. to complete liquidation by signing and paying out certain cheques connected with the company, which had been dissolved. The amount was about £818. The Standard Bank refused to pay out the money belonging to the company unless petitioner were authorised to draw and sign cheques alone, or a co-liquidator were appointed.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think, under the circumstances, the only course that should be adopted is to grant an order authorising the petitioner to complete the liquidation. An order will be granted accordingly.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. MISNUM.

Mr. Gutsche mentioned this matter, in which leave had been given to applicants to sue respondent in a provisional case. They had been unable to find respondent, and now applied for an order for substituted service. Respondent's last known address was Johannesburg.

De Villiers, C.J., granted the application, and ordered one publication to be made in the "Star" (Johannesburg), and the return day to be extended to the 12th January.

Ex parte ESTATE LOUW.

Mr. Close moved for leave to the executor testamentary to dispose of by public auction a certain farm, Hartbeestfontein, in the division of Calvinia. Mr. Close suggested that the property should be sold as recommended by the Master in his report, and that the proceeds should be paid into some trust company, to be dealt with at the death of the usufructuary, and in the meantime, that the interest be paid to the petitioner as usufructuary, as she was entitled to.

Order granted authorising the sale, and directing the proceeds to be paid into the South African Association for administration, and the interest to be paid to testatrix during her life, and the capital paid at her death into the joint estate.

LINDLEY V. ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, WYNBERG.

Mr. Burton moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon all concerned to show cause why, wherever the words "the parish of St. John's" appear in the deeds of Kenilworth Church, the words should not be substituted "St. John's Church, Wynberg," and why, after the words "conformably to local custom," the words "subject to the provisions of Act No. 9 of 1891" should not be inserted. Counsel said that there was now no appearance on the other side.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte SCHADE.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for an order authorising amendment of certain documents in the Debt Registry by the insertion of petitioner's full name.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of E.

W. McLachlan Thomas as curator bonis of the estate of David Levi, draper, Long-street, Cape Town, with power to carry on the business. Counsel said that the estate had been provisionally sequestrated. In ordinary circumstances the Master appointed a curator bonis, but in this case it was desired that the curator should have power to carry on the business as a going concern, and to take advantage of the opportunity of realising the goods to advantage during the coming Christmas season. He cited the case of Hoffman v. Black (14 C.T.R., 83).

[De Villiers, C.J.: But when could a trustee be appointed?]

Mr. Benjamin: A trustee cannot be appointed until the 21st December next.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there such a wonderful demand for drapery in the Christmas season? I have heard of Christmas delicacies being required, but I did not know that drapery was in great demand for Christmas.]

Mr. Benjamin: Apparently the goods could be realised in the way of Christmas presents, and so on with greater advantage at this time than if the premises were closed, and the realisation delayed until after the appointment of a trustee. That would practically postpone the matter until after Christmas.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not usual for this Court to appoint a curator; the practice is for the Master to appoint, but the Court will authorise the Master to appoint a curator bonis, with power to carry on the insolvent's business until the appointment of a trustee, and that is only done because of the special circumstances here. It is alleged that the season's sales will be lost, and also that the alleged insolvent does not intend to oppose the sequestration. Under these special circumstances the order is made.

Lease—Remission of rent—Lessee's right to quit—Lessor's failure to repair—Leaks.

In an action for rent, in which the defendant pleaded that the defective state of the leased premises justified his quitting possession during the subsistence of the lease and refusing to pay rent after vacating the premises:

Held, that it lay on the defendant to prove that the defect was of so material a nature as to render the premises practically useless for the purposes for which he had, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, hired them.

This was an action brought by Wentzel Tichy, G. W. Steytler, and E. R. Syfret, as assignees of the estate of Kaiser Bros., of Cape Town, against Paul Fistenheim, Richard Rubin, and Heinrich Hoeschen, trading as the Continental Caoutchouc Company, to recover £120 rent.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that Kaiser Bros. assigned their estate in December, 1905, and the plaintiffs were appointed assignees. Defendants were sued individually, and as carrying on the business. On the 21st June, 1904, a written agreement was entered into with Kaiser Bros. by the defendants under which the latter leased certain premises in Rutger-street for a period of five years from the 1st January, 1904, at a rental of £60 per month. The rent was paid to the end of April, 1906, but defendant neglected and refused to pay the rent for May and June, 1906, the amount of which (£120) plaintiffs now claimed.

Defendant Hoeschen, in his plea, said he had no knowledge that the firm of Kaiser Bros. had assigned their estate. He admitted paragraph 2 of the declaration, with the qualification that he said the firm of the Continental Caoutchouc Co. dissolved partnership in or about June, 1905. He craved leave to refer to the agreement of lease at the trial, and said that the lease had been ceded as collateral security by the firm of Kaiser Bros. to the Master of the Supreme Court, and that by reason thereof the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in this action. He admitted that he refused to pay the sum claimed, and said that in the month of April, 1906, and for several months prior thereto, payments were made under protest and without prejudice to the defendant's rights and claims under and in respect of the lease. The premises were at the time the lease was entered into, and during the months of May or June, 1906, and for several months prior thereto, utterly unfit for use and occupation, of which facts plaintiffs and the aforesaid firm had knowledge. On the 28th April, 1906, defendant vacated and gave up possession of the premises, and ceased to be liable for the rent.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, admitted that the lease had been ceded as security to the Master, but said that the cession was cancelled before the commencement of the present suit. They specially denied the allegations that the premises were unfit for use and occupation, and said that they had never been called upon to render the premises fit for use and occupation, and that when requested from time to time Kaiser did effect such repairs as were reasonable and necessary.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Roux) was for plaintiffs; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Alexander) was for the defendant, Hoeschen.

Mr. Close said that Hoeschen was the only one of the defendants who had pleaded, the others being out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

Wentzel Tichy, acting secretary of the South African Association, said that he was one of the assignees in the estate of Kaiser Bros., in which one of the assets was the lease between them and the Continental Company. Witness had found that there had been a dispute between Kaiser Bros. and the company concerning a demand made by the company for damages and cancellation of lease, dating back from September, 1904. The dispute was referred to the arbitration of Mr. Lawton in May, 1906, but as far as witness and his co-assignees knew at the time they were appointed, nothing further had been done. Witness spoke to a letter which he had received in January last from Mr. Andrews, defendant's attorney, calling attention to the condition of the premises. He also spoke to the way in which the matter was hung up, because it was uncertain whether sequestration or assignment of Kaiser Bros.' estate would take place. Apart from the single letter he had referred to, no complaint had been received from Mr. Andrews that the premises were unfit for occupation until on the 28th April a letter was left at the office along with the keys of the premises. In this letter complaint was made that the premises were not watertight and were unfit for occupation. Witness had been perfectly willing, if the premises were in an unfit state to put them in order. It would be impossible to obtain a rental of £60 for the premises in Rutger-street in the present juncture. He thought it would be difficult to get a tenant at all for the premises now. He considered that £20 per month would be the utmost they would be able to get for the store to-day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness did not have a full opportunity of inspecting the pleadings in the action commenced by the Continental Co., and he was unaware in what respect the premises were alleged to be unfit for occupation.

Mr. Alexander (in answer to the Court) said that soon after it had been decided to refer to arbitration the dispute between the lessors and the Continental Co., the former got into difficulties, and it was considered that it would be futile to go on with the proceedings.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had on one occasion been to see the property since the dispute commenced.

The estate itself was in an embarrassed condition, and it was unlikely that the second bondholders would receive anything. The assignees had one or two inquiries for the premises in May last. The rental asked for was £40 a month. They had not succeeded in finding a tenant.

By the Court: Witness went to the premises shortly after he had commenced his administration, but he found nothing wrong with the premises. He did not enter into the details of the pleadings of the case of the company against Kaiser Bros., and he did not know at that time what the nature of the dispute was.

G. W. Reynolds, Master of the Supreme Court, said that the lease was ceded to him during 1904. The cession was cancelled recently to enable the assignees to sue.

By the Court: Witness had never been to look at the premises.

Daniel F. Bosman, of Zietsman and Bosman, attorneys, spoke to having seen the premises in July, 1904, when he was unable to find any leakage. Witness also gave evidence to the effect that Kaiser Bros. had always had difficulty in obtaining payment of the rent from defendants, and that on one occasion Hoeschen had said that a German firm, who had been supporting the company, had ceased to support them, and that the only obstacle to the liquidation was the existence of this lease. Hoeschen also made a proposal to take over the lease at a reduced rental of £50 a month. Witness said that he again saw the premises in October, 1904, during a rainy period, but again failed to find any leakage, except on one of the floors, which was afterwards attended to. The place was used for motor garage, bicycles, etc., and there was a considerable amount of oil about the floors.

David Thomas Godfrey, plumber, Cape Town, spoke to having carried out repairs to the premises in 1904, at the instance of Mr. Kaiser, but said that he had been unable to find any leakages. Mr. Kaiser had always been anxious to keep the premises in repair.

By the Court: Witness made an examination of the roof last week, and found that it was, apparently, in a perfect condition. It was, of course, impossible to gauge the condition of a roof in dry weather. He had not seen the premises lately during wet weather.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that the important question in the case was what was the condition of the premises at the present time. He was somewhat surprised that counsel for the plaintiff had not left it to the other side to lead the evidence as to the condition of the premises, seeing that a lease was sued upon.

T. W. Cairncross, engineer, said that he had inspected the premises at different periods in 1905 and 1906. He found on one occasion that during rainy weather the windows had been left open, and there was water on the floor. He closed the windows and went to the place again afterwards, and was unable to find any trace of a leakage. There was a certain amount of dampness in one part of the premises, but he did not consider that that affected the utility of the room, and it was such a defect as could easily be rectified.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness considered that the sky-sign was a proof of the excellence of the roof. He considered that the building was a good one of a class that was common in Cape Town.

At this stage Mr. Close closed his case, subject to the right to call rebutting evidence.

Mr. Benjamin objected, and submitted that his learned friend must elect to lead further evidence, or finally close his case at this stage.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think there is no objection to this course—that, even after it has taken some evidence for the plaintiff, the Court should, for its own convenience, ask defendant to go on with his case, and reserve the right to the plaintiff to call rebutting evidence.]

Mr. Benjamin proceeded to call his witnesses.

Heinrich Hoeschen (one of the defendants) said he was formerly in partnership with the other defendants named on the record. The partnership was dissolved in June, 1905. The partnership had been registered in Berlin, and the dissolution had also been registered in Berlin.

Mr. Benjamin said he wished to make it clear that he was not instructed by the other defendants.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said he first noticed a serious leakage in the premises in June, 1904. The state of things became worse as time went on. The rent was only paid under protest. There was a bad leakage when he gave up possession in April last. When the place was leaking they had to put buckets and cans on the floors and move their goods about, as far as possible, to prevent damage. The principal part of the leakage was on the first floor. Occasionally the place was leaking in 20 or 30 spots at one time. The assignees showed no inclination to put the building into repair, and, in fact, appeared to be just as bad as Kaiser Bros. had been. Witness and his partners used to carry from £5,000 to £10,000 worth of stock in the premises. Considerable damage was done to the goods by the rain, the plated parts of bicycles, etc., suffering from rust.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: There were large doors on the ground floor and the first floor. There were large openings, but they were not in the habit of leaving the doors and windows open to the weather. During bad weather the roof leaked in different places, and they never knew where the rain would come through next.

By the Court: Witness was now occupying premises in Burg-street, for which he paid £35 a month. The premises were about as large as the Rutgers-street premises, but not so suitable. Kaiser Bros. knew at the time they entered into the lease that they were going to store bicycles, motor-cars, etc., there.

F. B. Andrews, attorney, spoke to having given notice to the assignees, soon after they had been appointed, of the action that was pending against Kaiser Bros. and an interview that he subsequently had with Mr. Tichy.

Cecil H. J. Brook gave evidence as to leakage on the first floor of the premises, while he was employed by Hoersch in 1904 and 1905, necessitating the use of buckets and cans, and the constant removal of the goods. A crack also appeared in one of the walls.

Ludwig Bachman also gave evidence as to leakages during the three years he was in Hoersch's employ. One of the employees slept on the premises, and on one occasion the leakage was so bad that he had to put an umbrella over his bed to keep the rain off.

Mr. Cherry, architect, said he considered that the construction of the roof was exceedingly faulty. He found numerous evidences that the building was leaky and that it was unfit for occupation at the present time. He regarded it as a very third-class building. He did not approve of the construction of the sky-sign.

Mr. Middleton, cross-examined by Mr. Close, stated that the main roof was in a very serious condition. The roof would leak in a heavy rain without wind. When he visited the place in February, 1905, there had been previously a heavy rain, and he found several leakages in the main roof. Between each pair of columns there had been a sagging.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The building was never constructed on the principle of a warehouse. A heavy rain, combined with wind, would cause the water to get through either roof.

James Petersen, builder and contractor, of Cape Town, stated he was called in in February, 1905, to report on the building. He had examined the building again in November last, and found it in a worse condition. The front roof of the main building was in a very bad condition at present. As a rough guess it would cost about £600 to make the building habitable.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: It was not raining when witness visited the place, but it had been raining, and he saw signs of the leakage.

Hubert Willis Cox, who examined the building in November last, gave corroborative evidence as to the faulty nature of the building. As a warehouse it was not at present fit for occupation, and it would cost about £500 to make it right.

Charles Henry Edwards, building surveyor to the Cape Town Corporation, stated that a completion certificate had not been issued in respect of these buildings. In March, 1905, he found a horizontal crack in one of the walls.

John Lyon, architect, of Cape Town, who drew the original plans of the building, but who had nothing to do with the superintendence of the building, stated that a building of this kind should have been supervised by an architect.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He could not say whether his plans were carried out or not.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Unless the Town Council approved of deviations the building would have to be carried out according to the plans.

George Rowe Rowe, who inspected the building on Saturday last, stated that he found water leaking through in five places. There was no wind, and a misty rain.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Daniel K. MacIntosh, architect, of Cape Town, stated that in March and April, 1905, and May, 1906, he made inspections of the building. On his last visit the weather was stormy with a heavy wind, which he considered a good test for a building of that class. He found one leakage at the end of the back roof. Witness corroborated what Mr. Cairncross had stated. From the evidence given by Messrs. Cherry, Middleton, and Petersen, witness would expect to find the place flooded in a driving rain. The leak he found could be easily remedied. The place, in his opinion, was fit for a warehouse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The timbering of the roof was rather slight and the rain might come in in a heavy fall. Theoretically the roof was a bit off. He was not very well satisfied with the top roof.

Robert Esten, civil engineer, of Cape Town, who made inspections of the buildings on four occasions, including one on Saturday last, stated he found only one leak, the one which the last witness had spoken of. From the evidence given by the other side he expected to find more leaks. The roof was perfectly straight. The leak, he said, was not a serious one.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: The wind was not strong before Saturday night.

Charles Stuart, secretary of the Meteorological Department, gave evidence as to the rainfall at Woodstock in February, 1905, and also the rainfall on Saturday last.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Close proceeded to address the Court on the facts of the case, when the Chief Justice said that as to the facts the burden was on the defendant. On the law, Mr. Closs said that the tenant was only entitled to give up possession when there was a grave inconvenience. It was a question of degree. He cited Voet (19, 2, 23) and Grotius (3, 19, 12), who relied on the Digest (19, 2, 19, 6). The difficulty had to be of a serious nature. A leak, unless very serious, would not excuse a lessee from paying rent.

Mr. Benjamin said that the question was whether the premises were in a fit and proper state.

De Villiers, C.J.: Do you say the premises were in a worse condition in April, 1906, than during the two previous years, during which they were good enough to occupy?

Mr. Benjamin said that all through these two years defendant called on plaintiff to repair, and the premises were gradually getting worse. He cited Pothier (vol. 7, p. 256 and p. 256) and Digest (19, 2, 25, 2). Mr. Benjamin further cited the cases of Bensley v. Clea (B. 1878, p. 80) and Alexander v. Armstrong (B. 1879, p. 235).

After further argument, and after hearing Mr. Closs in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 10th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is a case of far-reaching importance, and although I had no doubt, after the argument, as to what the judgment should be, I considered it well to give the case some further consideration. The plaintiffs are the assignees of the estate of Kaiser Brothers, with whom the defendants had in 1904 entered into a written agreement of lease. The lease was for a term of five years from 1st January, 1904, the rent was £60 per month, the lessees agreed "to occupy the hired premises with motor-cars, bicycles, and other merchandise," and the lessors agreed "to keep the outside of the premises in good and proper repair." About five months after the defendants had taken occupation they found that with rain, accompanied by wind, portions of the premises were in a leaky condition. The leaks chiefly came from the roofs, and complaints were from time to time made to Kaiser Brothers, who employed a competent plumber to attend to the matter, but the leakages were never completely stopped. An action was brought by the defendants against Kaiser Brothers for damages alleged to have been done to their goods and for a cancellation of the lease in case the leakages were not put an end to, but the action was never brought to a hearing. Ultimately arbitration was agreed upon, but when Kaiser Brothers assigned their estate further proceedings in the arbitration were stayed. For some time the defendants paid the monthly rent under protest to the assignees, but in April of this year the defendants decided to vacate the premises, and gave notice to that effect to the plaintiffs. At the end of April there had been no renewal of leakage, but in anticipation of such renewal the defendants quitted the premises after paying the rent up to that date. The object of the present action is to recover rent for the two following months, and the defence is that owing to the defective condition of the premises the defendants are not liable for the rent claimed. The defendants have not claimed damages in reconvention, but by quitting the premises and refusing to pay rent during the subsistence of the lease they have raised the simple issue whether circumstances existed which justified them as lessees in so quitting the premises and being relieved from the payment of rent. It is unfortunate that there are no decided, or, at all events, reported cases either in the Dutch or South African Courts to assist this Court in the decision of the question as to what degree of inconvenience would justify a tenant in quitting the premises leased. The text-books contain general statements of the law as understood by the writers, who, in most cases, refer to passages in the Digest as their authorities, but a few decided cases would have been of greater assistance than the vague generalities found in the books. Grotius (introduction 3, 19, 12) says: "The lessee is entitled to the use of the property or compensation for his interest in the same. Consequently he may compel the lessor to keep the property in a good state of repair, so as to be fit for use, and this the lessor must do at his own expense, and if he be in default, the lessee may advance the money for the repairs and place it to the account of the rent, or may even give up possession of the property." In support of this last statement the learned author refers to a well-known passage of the Digest (19, 2, 25, 2), which reads as follows: "If the light of a dining-room is shut out by reason of a neighbour's building on adjoining property, the lessor of an urban tenement is liable to his tenant; certainly there is no doubt that the tenant of either a rural or an urban tenement may put an end to the lease . . . We should hold the same if the lessor does not replace doors or windows which are too much decayed." Voet (19, 2, 23) says that if the lessee had just cause for quitting the premises, he is not bound to pay rent beyond the use which he has had of them. A just cause, according to him, exists "if the convenient use of the thing has not been furnished to such a degree that the tenant ought not to (I presume he meant 'could not') remain without great inconvenience to himself," and he illustrates his meaning by the case of a neighbour shutting out the light of a dining-room completely, not slightly

(in totum non modice), and the case of a failure to make repairs necessarily required for the use of the premises let. He cites several passages from the Digest, including the one already mentioned. In another passage cited by him (Digest 19, 2, 15), it is said that the lessee has an action ex conducto against the lessor if he is not allowed to have the enjoyment of the thing let, and as an example is given a case in which rilla non reficitur. On the strength of this passage the defendants' counsel has contended that the mere failure to repair a country house which needs repair was a sufficient ground under the Roman Law, at all events, for the tenants quitting possession, but it is obvious from the context that the failure to repair would only be a good ground in case, without such repair, there could be no use and enjoyment of the house. Van Leeuwen discusses the matter very briefly in his Censura Forensis (1, 4, 22, 17), and says that the lessee of an urban tenement has a just cause for leaving if the house threatens to tumble down. In the case of Albony v. Klemmeyer (3 Moo., P.C.C. 452), the question was raised before the Judicial Committee whether the hirer of slaves is entitled to a remission of the rent when, without any default on his part, he ceased to be able to retain the entire enjoyment or use of the subject let to him. Three of the leased slaves had been manumitted by the act of the lessor himself, and the remaining slaves had been converted into apprenticed labourers, and their hours of labour reduced under the Act for the Abolition of Slavery. The Judicial Committee held that the lessee was entitled to a remission of the rent in respect of the three manumitted slaves, but not in respect of the remaining slaves. I gather from the brief judgment of the Board delivered by Parke, B., that the remission of rent in respect of the three manumitted slaves was based upon the Roman-Dutch Law authorities which had been cited before the Board, but as to the other slaves, it was held that the lessee ought to have put in his claim before the Commissioners of Compensation, and that he was consequently not entitled to claim abatement of rent from the lessor. The case, therefore, is an authority for the view that a lessee is entitled to remission of rent in case of his ceasing to have any use of the thing let, but leaves undecided the question whether such a remission can be claimed in case of a partial or temporary limitation to his use and enjoyment. In this colony, although there have been several cases which recognise the right of the lessee, under certain circumstances, to claim damages for injury sustained by reason of the lessor's negligence in not keeping the premises in repair, there is a singular dearth of authority upon the question now under consideration. In the appeal case of Salisbury Building Society v. B.S.A. Company (21, S.C.C., 238), it was held that the tenant of certain rooms forming part of a house which had been destroyed by fire was not liable to pay rent for the period during which he was deprived of the use and occupation. The nearest approach to a decision of the present question that I can find was made by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal in Lipinski v. Bezuidenhout (T.S.C. for 1902, p. 231). It was an action for rent, and the plea was that there had been no beneficial occupation of the premises, as it was impossible to proceed with the building on the stand owing to the prevalence of hostilities at the time. The learned Judge (Smith, J.) held that the principles of the Roman-Dutch law are not applicable to the case of building leases such as he had to deal with, but he made some pregnant and valuable remarks as to what those principles really amounted to. "Now," said he, "as I understand the principles of the Roman-Dutch law, the lessee is bound to pay rent according to his agreement, unless during his tenancy the property itself becomes worthless for the purposes for which it was hired, by reason of causes independent of his control, e.g., if a house becomes ruinous owing to an earthquake, or, in the case cited from the Digest, of the room hired as a dining-room, the light of which was so obstructed by a building erected on adjoining land as to render the room useless for the purpose for which it was hired. . . . In such cases as these the tenant was justified in quitting the property, and his liability to pay rent ceased." In this state of the authorities the question arises, what workable test should be applied for the purpose of ascertaining, in any particular case, whether a tenant who is inconvenienced by the defective condition of the premises let is justified in quitting possession until the defect is remedied. It is obvious that it is not every inconvenience, however slight, which would so justify him. I said at the outset that the case is of far-reaching importance, and for this reason: The lease was entered into at a time when land was high in price, and when rents were also proportionately high. Land has since depreciated in value, and, consequently, rents have also fallen. The defendants after quitting the premises which they had hired at £60 per month, were able to obtain suitable premises at £35 a month. I do not suggest that this was the reason why they did relinquish the lease, but there are probably many other long leases in existence, which the tenants would be glad to get rid of if they can find a plausible excuse for so doing. It is well therefore that definite principles should be laid down for the decision of this and other cases that may arise. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that in order to justify his quitting possession during the subsistence of his lease the tenant must prove that the defect relied upon by him was of so material a nature as to render the premises practically useless for the purposes for which he had hired them. If he succeeds in his proof he is not liable for rent so long as the defect remains; if he fails in his proof he is liable for the rent, and must counter-claim for any damage done to him by reason of the defect. In taking this view I am glad to be able to adopt the statement of the law made by Smith, J., in the Transvaal Supreme Court, and thus to assist in maintaining the uniformity of the laws of South Africa.

Applying the principle just enunciated to the present case, I am of opinion that the defendants have failed to prove that they were justified in leaving the premises. Much of the evidence given on their behalf was to the effect that structural defects existed at the time when the lease was executed, which might then have been discovered if the defendants had caused an inspection to be made before they hired the premises. But there really was no such structural defect as would render the premises useless for the defendant's purposes. They were no worse and no better at the time when the defendants left than when they took possession, and yet for two years the defendants remained in possession, paid their rent, and used the buildings for the purposes of their business. They from time to time complained about the leakages, and they even began an action for relief, but the action dragged on, and was never brought to trial. The reason is said to have been that at first there was a block of business in the Court, and afterwards Kaiser Brothers were financially so weak that it would have been useless to sue them, but the important point is that during all that time the premises were not in so bad a condition as to be useless for the purposes for which they had been hired. It has been urged on behalf of the defendants that as they sustained damages to the extent of £350, they could not have had beneficial occupation, but I am not prepared, without further evidence, to accept the statement that the damages reached that sum or anything like it. The tarnishing of the goods was not proved to have been occasioned by the leaks, and if any serious reliance had been placed upon the evidence there surely would have been a claim in reconvention for the amount of damage. As the pleadings did not raise the question of damage, the plaintiffs could not have been expected to give rebutting evidence on the point. As to the general evidence regarding the structural defects of the buildings, the plaintiff's expert witnesses probably underestimated those defects, whilst the defendants' witnesses somewhat exaggerated them, but I am satisfied that the premises, although subject to leaks during rain accompanied by heavy wind, are not so materially defective as to be practically useless for the defendants' purposes. It is still open to them if they can prove actual loss to continue their action for damages, and if the plaintiffs should refuse to repair the premises, as repairs are required, the defendants may be entitled to effect the repairs and deduct the expense from the rent, or they may be entitled to claim a cancellation of the lease, but in this action and upon the evidence before the Court, there must be judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, with costs.

Mr. Close (for plaintiffs) applied for the qualifying expenses of certain architects, who, he said, went to the premises for the purposes of making a report and giving evidence.

His Lordship: Architects, I think, would have been required in any case. I think it would be a dangerous precedent to make any special order. Of course, they will be entitled to their expenses as witnesses.

Mr. Benjamin (for Hoeschen): Do I understand that the judgment in this case is against all three defendants? I may say that I only appear for one.

His Lordship: The others are, I take it, in default?

Mr. Close said that was so. Service was made by leaving three copies of the summons with Hoeschen.

His Lordship: The action is brought against the defendants jointly and severally?

Mr. Close said that, according to the second paragraph of the declaration, the defendants were sued individually and as carrying on the business of the company.

His Lordship said that judgment would be granted as prayed.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Zietsman and Bosman. Defendants' Attorney: F. B. Andrews.]

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for the admission of Malcolm Hensley McKenzie as an attorney and notary. Counsel said that the applicant formerly served for a period of four months before the war, and then there was a break of service, but upon the re-occupation of Vryburg he had served a full period of three years.

Application granted, with leave to take the oath before the Resident Magistrate of Vryburg.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ERASMUS V. NXONYE. { 1906.
Dec. 3rd.

Transkeian Magistrates — Jurisdiction.

Under the Transkeian Regulations the Magistrates in those territories "have jurisdiction in all civil suits and proceedings for and against persons residing within their respective districts."

Held, that a claim for the restoration of cattle and failing restoration thereof for the payment of £100 falls within such jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Engcobo in an action brought against appellant by respondent for the restoration of five head of cattle, alleged to have been wrongfully and unlawfully seized, or payment of their value, £100, and for £20 damages for wrongful seizure and detention of the cattle.

From the record it appeared that the plaintiff had bought mealies, and other goods from the defendant, who is a trader. He said that he had only pledged one cow as security for the debt. The defence was that the plaintiff had pledged four head of cattle, and that a written agreement had been entered into. Erasmus said that he had only seized the cattle which he was entitled by the pledge to take.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, expressed some doubt whether the native would have entered into an agreement to pledge cattle very much higher in value than the amount of the debt. Furthermore, the document gave defendant no right to seize the cattle. The defendant admitted that no delivery took place, and the case was clearly one of spoliation, and there would be an order for restoration of the cattle and the payment of £7 10s. damages. Judgment was given accordingly.

Mr. Alexander was for appellant (D. Erasmus); there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. Alexander raised a question as to whether the 23rd regulation relating to the Native Territories was sufficiently wide to enable the Magistrate to order specific performance, having in view the fact that Circuit Courts had now been established in those districts, and that such powers did not vest in the Resident Magistrate's Courts in the Colony proper. The point arose whether under the vague general terms in the regulation the Magistrates in the Territories had got exactly the same power and jurisdiction as the Supreme Court. Proceeding, counsel said that the rest of the case seemed to be more or less a question of fact. He recognised the difficulty of upsetting a Magistrate's judgment on a question of fact, but he submitted that if it were clear from the whole record that the Magistrate was wrong on the facts the Court would not hesitate to reverse the judgment.

The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order the restoration of the cattle Le Roes v. Goldie (5 C.T.R., 392), Reg. 23, p. 117 of Proclamations of 1896.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Assuming everything said by the defendant be true, what right had he to seize the cattle? He had a mere pledge, and the Court has continually decided that there is no real right acquired in property which does not remain in the possession of the pledgee.]

Mr. Alexander: That is so, and if there had been a third party with a claim in conflict with the defendant's claim against the native the defendant would have had no claim, but where there is no third party with a claim I submit that the question is rather different.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It has been repeatedly decided that a person has no right to take the law into his own hands.]

Mr. Alexander: What he says is that the property was left in the native's possession entirely of his own account, and that he went up there and had a discussion with regard to the debt that was due, and the plaintiff said, "You must take all the cattle."

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely, he could not have intended it. Was any counter-claim brought by the defendant in the action?]

Mr. Alexander said that it did not appear so from the record. Counsel having been heard further.

De Villiers, C.J.: The first objection raised in this case is to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. Of course, if this had been a case heard before an ordinary Magistrate in this Colony, the Magistrate would not have had jurisdiction, but the jurisdiction of the Magistrates in the Transkeian Territories is very much wider. The 23rd regulation says that "a Magistrate shall have jurisdiction in all civil suits and proceedings for and against persons residing within their respective districts." It is true that at the conclusion of that clause it says that "the proceedings shall, as near as may be and so far as circumstances permit, be the same as those in the Courts of the Resident Magistrates in the Colony," but that has reference only to the procedure. The wider jurisdiction granted in the earlier part of the clause remains, and the jurisdiction so given is quite wide enough to embrace a case like the present where the defendant was sued to restore four head of cattle taken away from him, or else pay £100. The objection to the jurisdiction, therefore, must fail. In regard to the merits of the case, it seems to me that the Magistrate was perfectly right. Even taking the defendant's evidence to be correct, he was not acting within his rights when he took the cattle. It is said that the plaintiff had said, "Oh, there's all my cattle; take them." But it is clear in what spirit that was said. He was not willing that they should be taken, and the defendant's own cattle were returned, because he wished no longer to keep them. Then, in the same week, the defendant removed these cattle which were said to have been pledged to him. Even if this had been intended to be a pledge, even if this document had been duly executed, defendant allowed the plaintiff to remain in possession of the property, and the defendant had no right to take the law into his own hands by taking these cattle against the plaintiff's will, as I take it, he did, and the Magistrate properly treated the case as one of spoliation and ordered the defendant in the first instance to restore the plaintiff to the position in which he was before the spoliation took place by handing him back the cattle. Of course, if the plaintiff's evidence is to be believed—and the Magistrate clearly believed that evidence—there can be no doubt whatever as to the liability of the defendant. The Magistrate is doubtful as to whether this document which is relied upon by the defendant was ever executed. The only point that might have been raised in the case is this, that the plaintiff admittedly owed the defendant some money, and possibly the amount might have been set off, but then the difficulty of setting off that amount would be that the defendant himself claims a very much larger sum than that which was admitted by the plaintiff, and, consequently, there might have been a difficulty in allowing the set off to be exercised in the present case. The defendant, of course, still retains his right of action. He is still entitled, if the plaintiff owes him this larger sum of money, which he claims, to bring his action, but the fact that he has that right of action does not affect the question of whether the Magistrate was right in his decision in the present case. As I said before, there has been no claim in re-convention by the defendant, and the Court, therefore, was justified in leaving out of consideration the fact that the plaintiff admitted that he owed this sum of money to the defendant. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed.

VENTER V. GRAHAM AND MULLER.

Immovable property—Fixture—Rights of mortgagee.

At the time of the execution of the mortgage of certain land there had been erected on it a corrugated iron building, forty feet by forty in size, attached by bolts to the soil, such bolts going through the foundations into the soil, the foundations being sunk for the greater part about six inches in the soil and the building being used as a store.

Held, that the mortgagee's rights attached to the building.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Elliot in an action brought by appellant against respondents to have a certain building situate on erf No. 445, in the town of Elliot, declared to be attached to the said erf and to be immovable, and for a declaration of rights.

From the record it appeared that the erf in question was sold by appellant to one Montague H. Graham for £350, and that a bond was granted to him by appellant for that amount. At the time a building, composed of corrugated iron, was in course of erection for Graham Bros., of which firm Montague Graham was a partner. Subsequently the firm of Graham and Muller succeeded the firm of Graham Bros., and purchased from the latter the building for a sum of £200. Graham and Muller had given appellant notice of their intention to remove the building from the erf, but Venter claimed that it was immovable, and that it was part of the soil, and had been hypothecated to his bond.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that on two grounds he found for the defendants. Firstly, the power to pass the bond was signed by M. H. Graham to purchase the ground alone for £350. Plaintiff, therefore, had been negligent in not getting the power signed by Graham Bros., as he well knew the firm were starting business there. He considered that the building was movable, as the foundation was superficial. It consisted of two layers of stone. In occasional places the foundation went a few inches into the ground owing to the ground not being quite level, but to all intents it had been placed upon the surface, and might be removed without damage to the erf. He considered that W. H. Graham deceived the plaintiff. He also felt certain that W. A. Graham knew of the bond either at the time the bond was signed or shortly afterwards.

Mr. Gardiner for appellant. Mr. Benjamin for respondents.

Mr. Gardiner contended that the building was pledged by Mr. Graham with the implied consent of Graham Bros., because Mr. Graham was a partner in the firm of Graham Bros., so Graham Bros. were bound by the pledge. Graham and Muller could not be in any better position than Graham Bros. Counsel quoted Coaton v. Alexander (1879, Buch. 17), Van Leeuwen's Consultat. (4-13-4), and Van Leeuwen's Cens. For. (1-14-7-4).

In the second place, the building was a fixture, and could not be removed by the defendants. He quoted Kimberley Mutual Building Society v. Lewis and others (T.H.C. 241) and Grotius (2-1-13).

Mr. Benjamin contended that when Graham and Muller purchased the property they had no knowledge that the building had been pledged. Mr. Graham had no right to pledge a building which belonged to the firm. He quoted Adams v. Moke (16 C.T.R., 652).

The Resident Magistrate had examined the building, and decided that it was movable.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply, quoted the case of Cairncross v. Nortje (21 S.C., 127). The firm of Graham Bros. had paid the interest on the bond and the premiums of insurance, so they must have known that the building was hypothecated by the bond.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the Magistrate has arrived at the conclusion that the building did not form part of the land, he seems to have examined the premises, and his examination confirmed him in this view, and, no doubt, these are circumstances which would strongly weigh with this Court in deciding whether or not this building does form part of the land. But it does not appear that the decision of this Court in the case of Cairncross v. Nortje (21 Supreme Court Reports, 127) was brought to his notice. In that case there was a kraal and inside the kraal was a shed, the roof of which consisted of galvanised iron screwed on to rafters, which rested at one end on the poles to which they had been screwed and at the other on the stone walls of the kraals. The shed had been erected by the lessee, who was still in occupation of the farm. It was held that the shed was a fixture forming part of the farm, which the defendant as vendor was bound to deliver with the farm, and that, failing such delivery, the plaintiff was entitled to damages. Now, what do we find here? This building had been used as a store. It was erected upon a stone foundation which for some six inches in the greater part was sunk into the soil, and the building was attached to the soil itself by means of bolts, which went through the foundation into the soil. Every witness who has been examined said that it would be impossible to remove the building as a whole, it would be necessary to take the building to pieces. Then the Court must bear in mind also the size of this building, and must take all the circumstances into consideration. Certainly the size of the building would go far to lead to the supposition that this was intended to be part of the soil. It was 40 feet by 40, a very considerable structure. It was used for a store, and the parties themselves must have regarded it as a structure which was part of the soil, because it was part of the contract, part of the mortgage contract, that the buildings upon the premises should be insured. Now, that was the only building apparently on the premises that ever was insured, and, at all events, one of the partners, Graham, knew of this insurance, knew of the bond, and knew that this building was insured under the bond. I don't mention this as a reason for holding that the defendant is liable, independently of the property being immovable, but I say that the fact that the parties themselves treated this building as part of the soil which was to be mortgaged, shows that the parties themselves treated it as being immovable property. Therefore, under all the circumstances, notwithstanding the view which the Magistrate has taken, I am satisfied that he has not arrived at a correct inference from the undoubted facts of the case, and upon the questions in this case the Court of Appeal is in as good a position as the Court of first instance to express an opinion. I am satisfied that this building should be considered as part of the soil and subject to the mortgage, and that the Magistrate was wrong in his decision. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs, and judgment entered in terms of the summons with costs in this Court and in the Magistrate's Court.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE LAUS- { 1906.
BERG. { Dec. 4th.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved on the petition of the executors testamentary.

and the surviving spouse of the late Jean L. Lausberg for a rule nisi to issue, calling upon certain parties to show cause why a decision of a commission appointed in terms of Act 7 of 1865 in relation to the boundaries of certain farms in the division of Clanwilliam shall not be reviewed and set aside.

The petitioners were Celius L. C. Lausberg and Joseph M. B. Lausberg, as executors testamentary of J. L. Lausberg, their late father, and Sophia Lausberg, his surviving spouse. There was registered in the name of the said J. L. Lausberg four-sevenths undivided parts or shares in the farm Ratelrug, division of Clanwilliam. During the year 1905 the owners of the farm Bovenbergsvlei, situate to the east of the farm Ratelrug, caused the said farm Bovenbergsvlei to be surveyed, and in the course of such survey a dispute arose as to the correctness of one of the bearings common to the said farms. Thereafter a commission was appointed under Act 7 of 1865 and, despite the objections of the petitioners, the Commissioners proceeded to consider and determine the boundaries of the respective properties. Petitioners complained that there had been an irregularity in the appointment of a surveyor, and that the respondents—the owners of Bovenbergsvlei, Pieter Gideon Smit and the estate of the late Alwyn Johannes Smit—had not complied with the necessary preliminaries so as to secure an independent investigation.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon P. G. Smit, the estate of Alwyn J. Smit, the commissioners appointed by the Divisional Council, and the Divisional Council (through their secretary), to show cause on the 12th January why all proceedings in the said matter, subsequent to the petition to the Divisional Council for the appointment of a commission, should not be set aside, and why the said P. G. Smit and estate A. J. Smit should not pay costs.

Ex parte ROWE.

Rule of Court No. 273—Extension of return day.

Where a return day has already lapsed the Court will not extend the return day and proceedings must be commenced de novo.

Mr. Struben applied for an extension of the return day of edictal citation so as to enable publication to be given in the "Government Gazette." Petitioner was suing his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, and it had been found impossible to effect personal service of the citation upon her in Melbourne.

Hopley, J., asked for what date the rule had been made returnable.

Mr. Struben said that the rule was made returnable on the 15th October.

Hopley, J., put it to counsel that the rule had now lapsed, and that the applicant must proceed de novo.

Mr. Struben said that great efforts had been made to discover the defendant, but apparently without success. It would be unfortunate if the applicant were now to be penalised for having made considerable efforts to trace the defendant. Under the special circumstances, counsel submitted, it would be sufficient if the return day were extended and publication were made in the "Government Gazette" in order to comply with Rule of Court No. 273.

Hopley, J.: It seems to me that I cannot make an order in this case. I think it would be introducing a very lax practice; people would not attend to the return days, they would find that they could come afterwards to cure any defects, and it would seem to me that it would have very far-reaching consequences to absent defendants. Proceedings months afterwards, when they thought the matter had lapsed, might be revived without notice to themselves, by some publication in a paper they have not seen nor are likely to see by an order of Court, and those proceedings would be set on foot which they had no reason to suppose from the Rules of Court would be set on foot against them. The Registrar informs me that he knows of no application like the present one having been granted, and I am not going to be the first to introduce a practice which, it seems to me, would be a wrong one. It is unfortunate for the plaintiff, who seems to be a poor man, that there have been mistakes, but it is not the fault of this Court, and he must proceed in the best way he is advised. No order will be made upon this application.

In re DUSSEAU AND CO.

Mr. Watermeyer presented the second and final liquidation and distribution account, and asked for the usual order as to same lying for inspection, and as to publication.

Report to lie for 14 days at the Master's and Liquidator's offices, usual notice to be given.

VERSTER V. VERSTER.

Mr. Payne moved for removal of trial to the next Circuit Court at Cala.

Case removed to the next Circuit Court at Cala.

BASSON V. KATZ AND OLSWANG.

This was an application calling upon respondents to show cause why taxation should not be authorised of a certain bill of costs incurred by applicant in connection with an action commenced by him in the Malmesbury Circuit Court against respondents.

Mr. Inchbold was for applicant; Mr. Burton was for respondents.

It appeared that applicant had instituted an action in the Circuit Court for damages for trespass by defendants' cattle. A compromise was, however, arrived at before the case came on for hearing, and the question now raised was as to the arrangement arrived at in regard to costs. It was agreed that £8 should be paid to applicant by way of damages. Applicant's case was that he should receive £8 clear, and that all costs should be borne by respondents. Respondents' case was that it had been agreed that the bill of costs should be submitted to the taxing officer, Cape Town, to decide what was meant by the terms of the settlement under which they (defendants) were to pay "all costs to date." The taxing officer decided against the plaintiff's contention, and the bill was thereupon withdrawn from taxation. The respondents' attorney said that when the settlement was entered into it was understood that defendants were to pay the usual ordinary costs, but not those between attorney and client.

Hopley, J., said it did not seem clear to him how the matter really came before the Court. The Court was not there to lay down an interpretation which should properly be made by the taxing master.

Mr. Inchbold urged that the matter was now ripe for an interpretation by the Court of the words, "all costs to date."

[Hopley, J.: I do not see how this Court is called upon at the present stage to adjudicate in this matter.]

Mr. Burton said that the taxing master decided that the words meant that the defendant should pay taxed costs between party and party, and as the plaintiff withdrew from the proceedings, he submitted that the applicant having mistaken his remedy, he should pay costs of this application.

Hopley, J.: It seems to me that at present the order must be refused, for the reason that the person in the first instance to decide this matter is the taxing master. If he decides on a wrong principle and in contradiction to decided cases, then it is for the party aggrieved to come to this Court to have such taxation reviewed. This was a case before the Circuit Court, a compromise was arrived at, and certain costs have been incurred. These would all, therefore, be from the very circumstances of their origin within the purview of the duties of the taxing master. When the matter went before him because of an interpretation that he put upon the words of the compromise, one of the parties withdrew, instead of going on and having the matter taxed under protest. He should have allowed the bill to be taxed, and if he were aggrieved by the taxing master's decision, he ought to have come to this court and asked for a review, and that the taxing master should be set right. But he has not done that, and he now asks the Court, upon affidavits which are somewhat contradictory, to interpret a document which it was, it seems, to me, the duty of the taxing master in the first instance to consider and decide upon. The present application must, therefore, be refused, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DYK.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary in the estate of Christoffel J. van Dyk and Catherina van Dyk, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent their major daughter, Belia F. A. van Dyk, in proceedings to have her declared of unsound mind and a curator bonis appointed. Respondent was now confined in Robben Island under a judge's warrant.

Hopley, J., observed that it was a pity if it were necessary that all these formal proceedings should be gone through in order to give the respondent the benefit of this property that was coming to her. It seemed likely that the bulk of the estate would be eaten up by the expenses. Dirk Petrus Johannes van Zyl would be appointed curator bonis of Belia F. A. van Dyk for such time as she is detained under Judge's warrant as a lunatic and authorised to obtain transfer of the landed property into the name of the said Belia van Dyk and to use the same during such detention on the understanding that he pay all costs and charges arising out of or connected with the said landed property, that the Master be authorised to pay expenses of the said transfers out of the funds belonging to the said Belia van Dyk in his hands, and that the executor pay in to the Master from time to time any sums coming to the said Belia van Dyk.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

VAN DER MEULEN V. { 1906.
GREEFF. { Dec. 5th.

Sheep lease—Dominium—Possession—Spoliation—Interdict.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause why they should not be interdicted from dealing or in any way parting with certain sheep and progeny left by them in the possession of the applicant, and why they should not restore the said stock to the applicant and pay costs of these proceedings.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the applicant had hired a number of sheep and goats belonging to one or both of the respondents on the "halves," and that the first-named respondent had removed them from his possession. The first-named respondent, in defence of this proceeding, alleged that applicant had committed a breach of faith and had not only failed to provide suitable pasturage for the stock, thus endangering their lives, but had infringed the arrangement made between them as to putting his (Greeff's) mark on the stock, and had sold a number to certain people without having first obtained his (Greeff's) consent. Under the circumstances, he submitted that he was justified in removing the stock. The applicant's position was that he had hired fresh pasturage on the farm of Dwars-in-de-Weg, that Greeff had no right to take the stock from his possession, and that 440 of the sheep had been given to him, for consideration, by Greeff. The contract under which he held the other sheep would not expire until January next, and he claimed that respondents had no power to move them at present. It was denied that the applicant had hired part of the farm of Dwars-in-de-Weg. Greeff also said that he had no knowledge until October that Zacks claimed to have bought any of the sheep.

Mr. Roux was for applicant (J. D. van der Meulen, of Laingsburg); Mr. Gardiner was for respondent, Hendrik Thomas Greeff and his wife (to whom he is married out of community); and Mr. Alexander was for one I. Zacks, who claimed to have purchased 100 ewes from Van der Meulen, in whose possession he had left the stock.

While Mr. Gardiner was reading the affidavits filed for respondents, Hopley, J., commented on the fact that there was such an enormous mass of affidavits.

Mr. Gardiner: I am afraid I am to blame just now, but my learned friend (Mr. Roux) has a great mass to follow.

[Hopley, J.: Of course one mass of affidavits involves another mass. I suppose the up-country attorneys have so little to do.]

A moment later his Lordship added that he was afraid he should have to draw the attention of the Taxing Master to the affidavits.

While Mr. Roux was reading the replying affidavits, Hopley, J., interpolated the remark: These affidavits are extending their ambit. We shall be in the middle of the "Agricultural Journal" in a bit.

Mr. Roux: I believe these affidavits were drawn out of us by the voluminous affidavits filed by the other side.

Hopley, J., later on, observed that it was almost impossible to follow the history of the sheep from the affidavits, but as far as he understood, the position was that 900 odd sheep belonged to Mrs. Greeff. The Greeffs handed over these sheep to Van der Meulen for one year certain on the 21st February on the "halves," the same number of sheep to be returned at the end of the year, slaughter sheep to go off and count as ordinary loss and to be made up out of increase, or in any other way Van der Meulen liked. For the rest, Van der Meulen also could slaughter some of them and make them up. Anyhow, they had to be made up to the full number, and that came out of his share, and the increase on the whole flock was to be divided equally between them at the end of the year. Van der Meulen was to hand up the right number with half the increase. The question was, what was the legal position in a contract like that?

Mr. Gardiner said that counsel for the applicant would no doubt contend that this was a case of spoliation. Van der Meulen had a contract under which he specially held the stock as agent for Mrs. Greeff. He really had detention of the sheep, but was not in legal possession. Van der Meulen would have the right to half the increase, and correspondingly he would have the duty of looking after those sheep. As long as they did not deprive him of the right to half the increase, they were entitled to take back the sheep.

[Hopley, J.: Is your position that you could remove those sheep when you wished?]

Mr. Gardiner: I submit that we could, because the ownership of these sheep is in us. He has his rights to the wool and progeny, but he has no right to the sheep themselves.

[Hopley, J.: But what is this contract?]

Mr. Gardiner: It is a contract of letting of services.

[Hopley, J.: Whose services?]

Mr. Gardiner: Van der Meulen's services, in looking after the sheep entrusted to his care.

Hopley, J., said he was sure there must be cases in which these sheep leases had been considered.*

Mr. Gardiner went on to contend that, as to any question of spoliation, the first spoliation had been by Van der Meulen in selling sheep to people without the respondent's authority and sticking to the proceeds. Before the contract was signed by Van der Meulen on the 21st February, Van Niekerk (acting for the respondents) explained to Van der Meulen that, as to the stock he had held for Mr. Greeff and Mrs. Greeff, the whole would belong in future to Mrs. Greeff, and would be left with him as her agent. It was difficult to believe, therefore, that two days afterwards, on the 23rd February, Greeff should have gone to Van der Meulen and made him a present of 400 sheep. The applicant's story was a very improbable one. Van der Meulen said that Greeff had agreed to allow him to remain on his farm until his (Greeff's) son, who was three years of age, should reach his majority, but that Greeff subsequently sold the farm, and, in lieu of paying him a commission of 5 per cent. upon the purchase price, as agreed upon, he gave him (Van der Meulen) the 440 sheep belonging to him. Again, in this matter, it appeared that the applicant did not come into Court with clean hands, because the first-named respondent alleged that Van der Meulen had sold some of the stock, and had not accounted to him for the proceeds. If that were true, applicant had been dealing very improperly with respondents' sheep. On the points as to the fitness of the veld where applicant had the sheep, and whether Van der Meulen had taken part of the farm Dwaars-in-de-Weg, there was a great conflict on the affidavits. Under all the circumstances, he submitted that the person with whom the stock ought to be left was the owner. The applicant himself admitted that one-half belonged to Mrs. Greeff.

Mr. Alexander urged that in any order the Court might make, it should be stipulated that the 100 sheep bought by Zacks would not be affected.

Mr. Roux submitted that this was clearly a case of spoliation. It was with the respondents' consent that applicant had got possession of 900 sheep, with the increase now amounting to 1,175. It was not necessary that the applicant should show that he was the owner of the sheep; it was sufficient, in order to obtain relief, if the applicant showed that he had been in bona fide possession. Van der Meulen was clearly entitled to an order of restitution, and to have possession of the stock, at any rate, until February next. Applicant received from the Greeffs 924 sheep and 1,175 were taken away by the Greeffs, and it was beyond doubt that in regard to a certain number, at any rate, there had been spoliation. Counsel went on to contend that this was a sheep lease, and not, as counsel for respondents had contended, a letting of services.

Hopley, J., said he was not satisfied that it was an ordinary sheep lease.

Mr. Roux submitted that the contract in this case was a sheep lease, and he cited Scott v. Trustee, Insolvent Estate Nicholson (6 E.D.C., 243), and Swanepoel v. Van der Horven (1878, Buchanan 4), and quoted from Maasdorp's Institutes (vol., 2, pp. 224 and 225). Counsel went on to submit that the applicant was the owner of 440 sheep, and pointed out that the contract itself only spoke of a portion of the sheep, and not the whole.

Hopley, J., said that it was most unadvisable to drive sheep about at this season, and he suggested that the sheep should be left in the hands of Greeff, as Van der Meulen's agent, until the 21st February, pending a settlement of the dispute between the parties.

Mr. Roux having been heard further.

Hopley, J.: Recognising all that Mr. Roux has said about spoliation to be perfectly good law, I am not quite satisfied that this is a clear case of spoliation. I think there is very much to be said on behalf of the respondents, for holding that this was not a case of spoliation, but a case of self-protection, a taking of their own property to save it, according to their view of the matter, and it would seem to me to be, not perhaps a harsh, but, at all events, an unwise order that these animals, which have now, apparently, reached a haven of comparative though temporary safety, should at this season, of the year be driven across a considerable tract of country to some other pasturage, about which there is a dispute as to whether or not the applicant in this case has a right, for the purpose of grazing them. I think that, for the benefit of all the parties—there is no doubt that the stock in dispute would be safely guarded by either of the parties. It would be better that the sheep should be left where they are, and the legal aspect of the question can be settled hereafter by an action to be brought by one or other of the parties. I do not think that the sheep would be sold if they were left in the custody of the respondents for the present. But, while I am of that opinion in regard to the temporary custody of the sheep, I also feel that

* See Tucker v. Austin's Trustees (Buch. 1869-145); Swanepoel v. Van der Horven (Buch. 1878-4); Van der Horven v. De Wel's Trustee (Buch. 1878-127); Truter v. Krynauwe (10 C.T.R., 86); Van Niekerk's Estate v. Sandiland (15 C.T.R., 637); Scott v. Nicholson's Trustee (6 E.D.C., 243); Van Druten v. Moete (3 H.C., 276).

Mr. Greeff should be held bound to give security that he will not in any way part with them, or one might simply extend the terms of the rule nisi to that effect. The order, therefore, will be that the rule be made absolute, interdicting Mrs. Greeff and her husband from parting with or in any way dealing with the sheep and goats, and progeny of such sheep and goats, taken by them from the possession of the applicant, pending a final account between the parties, and as to the restoration of the original sheep and the progeny, and the wool and other matters which arise out of the possession of the sheep, and pending an action as to 440 of the said sheep claimed by the said Van der Meulen as being his own individual property, to be brought in the February term by the said Van der Meulen to establish his right to the said 440 sheep, costs of the present application to be reserved.

Mr. Alexander said that the order made no mention of the 100 sheep belonging to his client.

Hopley, J.: In saying that the respondents are restrained from in any way parting with the sheep and goats and progeny in their possession, the 100 sheep claimed by Mr. Zacks are, of course, included, and he also may establish his right to the 100 sheep in any action brought by Van der Meulen and himself. The latter portion of the order will be "pending an action to be brought for such sheep as are claimed by Van der Meulen and Zacks, during the February term, costs reserved."

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte BIDEN. { 1906.
{ Dec. 6th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., mentioned as a matter of urgency the petition of the directors of Henry C. Collison, Ltd., whose affairs, it would be remembered, occupied the attention of the Court last week.

The petition was that of Wm. H. C. Biden, managing director of the company, who said that one, Reginald Francis St. Frere Vaile, was indebted to the company in the sum of £4,440 0s. 9d., which was due and payable forthwith. They had a good cause of action against Vaile for recovery of the said sum. The directors had passed a resolution to sue the said Vaile, who, though he had lately been resident in Johannesburg, Transvaal, was domiciled in England, but who was possessed of certain furniture at present stored in a room in this city leased to the company. The said Vaile contemplated leaving Cape Town, where he was at present, for England either by the next mail, or shortly afterwards. In order to institute an action against him, it was necessary that his furniture, stored at 9, Castle-street, should be attached. Counsel added that there would be no difficulty in regard to effecting personal service upon the respondent.

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, returnable on February 1, personal service to be effected, and furniture mentioned in the petition to be attached ad fundandum jurisdictionem, with leave to serve interdict and notice of trial with citation.

INSOLVENT ESTATE WATSON V. DAINES AND SEYMOUR.

This was an argument on an exception taken by the plaintiff to the defendants' plea in an action in which the trustee in the insolvent estate of William Henry Watson seeks to recover from Daines and Seymour, attorneys, of Mount Fletcher, Matatiele, and elsewhere, in the district of Griqualand East, a sum of money paid to them under certain insurance policy.

It appeared that the Sun Fire Insurance Company paid to respondents £335 14s. 10d., as the assessed amount of loss sustained by Watson by the destruction of his premises by fire. On the 31st July, 1905, defendants paid to the wife of the said Watson £137 8s. 8d., being part of the said amount. Plaintiff claimed the balance. Defendants pleaded non-liability. They said that they had paid Mrs. Watson £137 8s. 8d., and that, as to the balance of the said sum of £335 14s. 10d., the whole of that amount was disposed of by them in the manner set out in the account annexed, and with the consent, where such consent was necessary, of the wife of the said William Henry Watson, who was duly authorised by him to act as his agent.

Mr. Benjamin was for excipients; Mr. Close was for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin said that the estate was sequestrated on the 19th October, 1905. The trustee had commenced an action against the Standard Bank with regard to the sum of £137, which was handed to the insolvent's wife. The Standard Bank had paid the cheque to Mrs. Watson, and that amount had been recovered from the bank. That item, therefore, did not come into the present matter. As to the present action, exception was taken to the plea on the ground that it was vague and embarrassing, in that the account did not set out with sufficient particularity the disbursements which defendants said they had made. These items included fees paid for Resident Magistrate's Court and appeal in Botha at suit of Phillips. It was alleged that the costs in that matter were guaranteed by Watson, but no particulars were given. Then there were certain promissory notes from sundry individuals which were said to be "endorsed to us." He submitted that the plea was so vague that the plaintiff could not reply to it.

Mr. Close submitted that the plaintiff had all the information as to the facts on which the defendant relied put before him in the plea, so as to enable him to know what the case of the defendant was, and how to reply to it. The plea stated that the part of the sum in dispute paid over to the defendants had been disposed of in the manner set out in the account annexed to the plea. They said that the balance remaining, after the aforementioned disbursements, had been paid over to Mrs. Watson. From that it was clear that the items set out in the account were disbursements. It was also stated that Mrs. Watson was the duly-appointed agent of her husband, and that she gave the authority in all cases where the authority for disbursement was required, and that she accepted the balance. He contended that the plaintiff was not embarrassed by the plea.

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, pointed out that the trustee was in a great difficulty, because the insolvent had absconded, and Mrs. Watson was in the Argentine. The plea should have been more specific, and defendant should have set up a claim in reconvention. The items in the account were not set out with sufficient particularity.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with plaintiff's counsel that the plea does not distinctly set out the ground of defence. Whether that ground of defence is sufficient is another question, but the ground of defence, as I understand it, is that certain disbursements had been made on behalf of the plaintiff. I am not sure that the objection I should sustain is exactly the same as that contended for on behalf of the plaintiff. The objection I have to the plea is this, that it does not say that the debts were paid on behalf and at the request of Watson. The only point on which I would like to hear further argument is whether there are any decisions to the effect that a person might pay the debts of another without being requested. Has that question been considered? Here is a distinct allegation that the defendant has, on behalf of Watson, paid certain debts. The question is, was the consent of that person required? If I pay the debts of another, is his consent required? By the law of England it is required. The plea says "where such consent was necessary." I should like to hear counsel further before giving my final judgment, because if a person may pay the debts of another and claim repayment, then there is no necessity for mentioning his consent or for mentioning the request. By the law of England you cannot claim a disbursement, unless you allege that it is at the request of such a person that the disbursement was made. In the present case, it is not said that there was a request from Watson, nor is it said that it was with his consent that his debts were paid, but it is said that it was "with the consent, where such consent was necessary, of the wife of the said William Henry Watson." I do not think there is any other difficulty in the plea, because it says that the money has been paid by the defendants on behalf of Watson.

At a later stage, counsel were further heard in argument on the point raised by his lordship.

Mr. Benjamin said that in all the cases he had been able to find the party paying had some interest in the matter. He cited the recent case of Marais v. Cape Divisional Council (16 C.T.R., 402), Smuts v. Cathcart Divisional Council (6 C.T.R., 384), Bousfield v. Stutterheim Divisional Council (12 C.T.R. 81), and Colonial Government v. Smith (11 C.T.R., 521), and quoted Burge (vol. 3, p. 825).

Mr. Close quoted Voet (46, 3, 1, and 3, 5, 11), and Maurice's English and Roman-Dutch Law (p. 226). He added, however, that he would be prepared to consent to the words "where such consent was necessary" being struck out of the plea.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the best solution of it will be to let this amendment be made, and let costs be costs in the cause.]

Mr. Benjamin asked that the words "endorsed to us" be struck out of the account annexed to the plea.

Mr. Close said that he did not object to that.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plea will be amended by striking out the words, "where such consent was necessary"; and also striking out the words, "endorsed to us," where they occur in the accounts annexed. Costs will be costs in the cause. It is not necessary now to consider the legal question.

REID AND CO. V. LOGAN. { 1906.
Dec. 6th.

Exception—Variance between declaration and replication.

The plaintiff, in an action founded on a contract, referred generally to such contract without stating that it was in writing. The defendant's plea raised several defences bearing upon the exact terms of the contract. Thereafter the plaintiff, in his replication, stated that the contract was in writing and set out some of its terms, but there was no inconsistency in other respects between the declaration and the replication.

Held, that there was no variance, and consequently no ground for excepting to the replication.

This was an argument on an exception taken by defendant to the plaintiffs' replication in an action arising out of work done by the plaintiffs in the erection of the Masonic Hotel at Beaufort West.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that they had entered into a contract with the defendant, whereby they, as contractors, undertook to erect the Masonic Hotel at Beaufort West for £8,000. Payments were made amounting to £6,250. The last certificate was granted by the architects (Messrs. Parker and Forsyth) on February 7, 1906, amounting to £1,250, making a total of £7,500. Defendant, after action brought, paid on the last certificate. Defendant had terminated the engagement with his architects. On February 11 the work was completed, and the premises handed over to defendant, and although the period of four months, during which the defendant was to retain certain percentage of the contract money, had expired, he neglected and refused to pay the sum of £500, retention money, which they claimed. Plaintiff also claimed a sum of £59 odd as extras.—Plaintiffs said that they had offered to submit the matters in dispute to the decision of an impartial architect, or to any referee to be mutually agreed upon; but the defendant had refused to submit such matters to such architect or referee.

Defendant, in his plea, denied indebtedness in the sum of £500, and said that the premises had not been completed. He complained that the work had not been satisfactorily done. He also said that as to extras it was specially agreed that any extra work should be executed upon the authority in writing of the architect. He said he was not in law bound to submit any dispute to arbitration. He claimed to be entitled to retain the sum of £500, owing to the default of the plaintiffs, and said that in any case he was entitled to a reduction of £1,000 in respect of work badly done, or omitted to be done. For a claim in reconvention he claimed damages at the rate of £10 per week by reason of the failure of plaintiffs to hand over the premises completed by December 31, 1905. He further said that the plaintiffs' action was premature.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, craved leave to refer to a copy of the contract annexed, and specially called attention to clause 22 thereof in reference to arbitration.

Before pleading to the replication, the defendant excepted as follows: "(1) In that (a) the plaintiff in his declaration does not sue upon a written contract, whereas in the replication he sues upon a contract in writing, purporting to be signed by the plaintiffs only; (b) the contract so put in the replication contains material terms not set out in the declaration as part of the contract; (c) the replication contains a cause of action differing from that sued upon in the declaration; (2) the defendant says that the replication is inconsistent with the declaration, and is vague and embarrassing, and bad in law. Wherefore, the defendant prays that the plaintiff's declaration may be set aside with costs."

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for the excoipient Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for the respondents.

Sir H. Juta said that the declaration simply set up that there was a contract made by which the hotel was to be built for a certain sum of money, that payments were made from time to time upon certificates of the architects, that the last certificates given by the architects was on a certain date, that the work was completed and handed over, and that it was a part of the agreement that, four months after completion of the work, the retention money should be paid, and that it had become payable, and all things had happened necessary to entitle plaintiffs to claim the same. Then came something which had no reference whatever to the contract, and was not alleged to be part of the contract at all, viz., that they had made an offer to the defendant to go to arbitration. In their replication the plaintiffs set up what they alleged to be a contract, and they referred to a certain clause, No. 22, according to which arbitration was compulsory. Now, the defendant wanted to know what was the position of the plaintiffs in their declaration. Either this arbitration was compulsory, or it was voluntary. If compulsory, then plaintiffs should have sought an order to compel defendant to go to arbitration. If voluntary it should not have been brought in at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But is it not competent, if a party offers arbitration and the other party refuses, for that party to bring an action?]

Sir H. Juta: Then the pleading surely is irrelevant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In his declaration, he said he had offered arbitration, which you have refused, and then in his replication he sets up the arbitration clause. Is that inconsistent with his declaration? The declaration is accompanied with the statement that you have refused arbitration.]

Sir H. Juta said that there was no connection between the offer to go to arbitration mentioned in the declaration and the contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are both parties somewhat similar in that respect, because the defendant claims £10 per week as liquidated damages, which can only come in under this contract.]

Sir H. Juta: We deny that there is this contract which they allege. We say the damages were part of the oral contract between the parties. Counsel went on to point out that one of the prayers in the declaration was that the defendant should be ordered to go to arbitration.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As an alternative.]

Sir H. Juta said that was so, but under the declaration, as it stood, the prayer could never be granted. But, in the replication, the whole matter was altered, and the plaintiff put in clause 22, and said the defendant was bound to go to arbitration. Then the defendant was embarrassed by the replication, because it was not said what were the disputes that should be referred to arbitration under clause 22. Plaintiffs did not say that this was a dispute under clause 22. Counsel submitted that there was no answer in the replication to the plaintiff's allegation with regard to this action being premature by virtue of there being no final certificate of the architect that the work had been completed. Then, in the declaration, plaintiffs alleged that the contract with the architects had been terminated by the defendant. In their replication, plaintiffs alleged that the defendant could not terminate that appointment without their consent. Those statements, counsel submitted, were inconsistent. The defendant had a right to know where he stood in regard to the pleadings of the plaintiffs. In this very clause, No. 22, extras were exempted. Part of the claim was for extras. Defendant pleaded that, according to the contract, they could not claim any extras unless upon the written certificate of the architect. The plaintiffs simply referred to clause 22, which specially exempted those extras. That, at any rate, was not a question that could be sent to an arbitrator. Then there was the question of the completion of the work. Plaintiffs said that any delay in completion beyond the appointed time was not due to any negligence on their part, nor did the architects certify that under clause 17 the work could reasonably have been done within that time. Now, according to clause 17, the contract must be completed within a certain time, unless through certain causes set out in the clause, and if due to one of those causes it must be completed within such time as the architects may consider reasonable, and which they in writing should appoint. The plaintiffs now sought to excuse themselves by saying that the architects had not certified that the work could reasonably be completed within the time. The plaintiffs also specially denied that the action was premature, but they did not say why they made that denial.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would like to hear counsel for the respondents on the question of the alternative order prayed for in the declaration, that the defendant should be compelled to go to arbitration.

Mr. Schreiner admitted that there was only an implication that it was one of the terms of the contract that they should go to arbitration in any disputes or differences that arose. To avoid proximity one did not go and set out a long contract. All that would have been necessary to make the paragraph as to the offer to go to arbitration complete would have been to say "in terms of the contract." He submitted that the defendant must have known that the plaintiffs were there referring to the contract, and that if he did not know then he should have taken an exception to the declaration.

Sir H. Juta having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: Several important questions of law have been raised in the course of the argument, but it will be impossible to decide those questions of law upon a technical exception to the plaintiff's declaration. The exception is "that the plaintiff in his declaration does not sue upon a written contract, whereas in the replication he sues upon a contract in writing, purporting to be signed by the plaintiffs only." Now, that in itself does not seem to me a ground of objection, unless there were an inconsistency between the statements in the replication and the statements in the declaration. Well, I do not think there is any inconsistency. What has taken place is this, that plaintiff, apparently wishing to be as brief as possible, relied upon a contract without stating that it was in writing, and without stating the full terms of the document. I think it would have been better to have referred to the contract, which was in writing, and to have attached it to the declaration. But that was omitted. Then the plea raises several defences, whereupon the plaintiff, seeing that those defences bear upon the exact terms of the contract, for the first time mentions those terms. But it does not appear to me that they were intentionally omitted from the declaration. Certainly it would have been very much better to have inserted them for several reasons. One of them is that it is difficult to see how the second prayer of the declaration could be insisted upon unless there were an allegation that the contract between the parties provided for arbitration, because a person cannot insist upon arbitration unless there were a prior contract, or unless it were part of the contract that the differences arising out of it should be referred to arbitration. Therefore, I quite agree that, with the declaration as it stands, it would have been far better that the written contract should be attached, but I do not see that the exception itself as it stands, is a good one. It says "the contract so put in the replication contains material terms not set out in the declaration as part of the contract, and that the replication contains a cause of action differing from that sued upon in the declaration. The defendant says that the replication is inconsistent with the declaration, and is vague and embarrassing and bad in law." Well, I do not see exactly where it differs. I do not see the inconsistency nor do I see that it is vague and embarrassing and bad in law. But in disallowing the exception I think that the Court should give a direction that the declaration should be amended by referring to the contract, and by attaching it to the declaration, and, seeing that there was this informality in the declaration, this omission from the declaration, although it may not have exactly embarrassed the defendant in the defence, yet I think it was sufficient justification for the defendant raising this point, and, therefore, the question of costs may be reserved, and the costs will be costs in the cause. The order, therefore, will be that the exception is disallowed, but the declaration will be amended by referring therein to the written contract and attaching the same to the declaration, costs to be costs in the cause.

Sir H. Juta said that it might, as a consequence, be necessary to amend the plea.

His Lordship: If there is an amendment in the declaration, you should have leave to amend the plea. Leave also will be given to defendant to amend the plea.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE LIEBENSTEIN.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Johannes Smuts de Villiers as provisional trustee in the estate of Jacob Liebenstein, of the Paarl, which has been voluntarily sequestrated. Petitioners asked that the provisional trustee should be given powers to sell the stock and collect the rents of the property and outstanding debts.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MYERS V. IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY CO., LTD. { 1906.
Dec. 7th.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondents to show cause why a certain interdict restraining John Marcus, auctioneer, from paying over to applicant £85 from the proceeds of a certain sale of furniture at Belle Isle, Norfolk-road, Sea Point, pending an action to be brought by the respondent company, should not be set aside and the respondents be ordered to pay costs.

The interdict was obtained on an ex parte application by the Imperial Company, who said that Myers was indebted to them in the sum of £60 14s. 7d., for goods sold and delivered. Myers was at present in Europe, outside the jurisdiction. The house at Belle Isle was occupied by his sister, and Roberts, an official of the company had presented the accounts to her, but she had declined to pay the same. Deponent had been informed, and verily believed, that Myers did not intend to return to this colony and his sister was about to leave this colony for good, when the furniture had been realised.

The affidavit of Mr. Du Toit, attorney, who holds the applicant's power of attorney, stated that L. M. Myers had been living with his family in Manchester, England, during the last four years, that the debt was contracted by one J. M. Myers, and that the applicant had not been a party to it. The meat in respect of which the debt had accrued was supplied to the said J. M. Myers and Miss Myers.

Affidavits on behalf of the respondents stated that the applicant had since the 30th April, 1902, at the address given, been a customer of the company, and had purchased meat from them. Accounts had been made out against the said L. M. Myers, and from time to time had been paid by him. No notice had been given by or on behalf of the present applicant that he was not responsible for the payment of the said accounts or that he had left this colony.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant, Louis Mark Myers; Mr. Upington was for respondents.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that a prima facie case had not been made out for the interdict, and that the order already granted should be set aside.

Without calling upon Mr. Upington,

Hopley, J.: I do not think it is necessary to hear Mr. Upington in this matter. I do not see that the present applicant has made out so strong a case against the present respondent as to justify me in setting aside the interdict which I had granted. It is said that Myers, the applicant, had been away in England for four years, and that, therefore, this debt could not possibly be his, but it seems to me by no means to follow necessarily that that is so. The man goes away to England, apparently or possibly leaving his butcher, with whom he used to have a running account, without any information that he is leaving and leaving in the house, not strangers, but people bearing his own name, his own father and his own sister, and they have been living there since. It is by no means an improbable thing that a man who has a house and leaves his father and sister in that house, should have left his butcher under the impression that he was still to supply meat to the persons he had left there, and not only under the impression, but it is by no means improbable that a man so going away and leaving his account in this way might, in fact, be legally liable for the people who have gone on trading on that account. It may actually have been his intention that his father and sister should be supplied at his cost and expense, for all I know. Under these circumstances, I do not think I ought to set aside the interdict, but, at the same time, it may be that the allegations are absolutely correct, that L. Myers is not at all responsible for this account, and that the Imperial Cold Storage Company ought to have known that others were now their debtors, and I think, therefore, costs should be costs in the cause.

Ex parte NAPIER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining the Municipality of Sea and Green Point from paying over the sum of £100, or any other sum which may be due from them, to one Leopold Edwin Prideaux, pending an action to be brought by petitioner against the said Prideaux to recover an amount of £108 8s. 2d. Petitioner said that Prideaux had held a contract from the Municipality, and had employed him as his works manager at the Lakeside Quarry. There was due certain money for services as works manager, a promissory note, etc. Prideaux had refused to pay the amount due. Mr. Van Zyl said that he knew this application was somewhat unusual, because the petitioner had not obtained judgment against respondent, and it was not alleged that the latter was about to leave the Colony. He cited Ohlsson's Breweries v. Watson (12 C.T.R., 21), and urged that there were special circumstances in this case, because the money retained by the Municipality was really earned by Prideaux out of work done by applicant, and that the Court should grant relief.

Hopley, J.: I am afraid I cannot make an order in this case. I can see the hardship of the position; I can see that Mr. Napier has done work under his contract with Mr. Prideaux, and that Mr. Prideaux is actually going to get money for work which is very probably partly the work of Mr. Napier's own hands, and yet that is a position in which a great many creditors are, and unless there be some sort of reason why the man's money should be interdicted beyond that, I do not think the Court should intervene in such a matter. The Courts of Law are open to the applicant in this case, and he can bring his action, and, as a matter of fact, he could have brought his action some time ago, and in such case he might have had an unsatisfied judgment, and on very good grounds he might have applied to have the money interdicted. But he has not taken a timeous course, and now he asks at the last moment that money due from the Municipality to Prideaux should be interdicted, or that Prideaux shall not get it until the applicant shall have time to take his judgment. These applications are constantly coming before the Court, and have been refused from time to time, and I am afraid there is nothing in the present case which removes it from the category of the unsuccessful ones which have been previously refused. There will be no order.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte OTTOSTROM. { 1906.
Dec. 7th.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to petitioner to sue in forma pauperis. Petitioner proposed to institute an action against Stephan Bros. to recover £1,000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained owing to the negligence and carelessness of the defendants' servants. He said that he had been seriously injured by the fall of a derrick at Port Nolloth while he was in lighter No. 3 following his duties during the unloading of the steamship Aurora. He alleged that the derrick had not been properly secured by defendants' servants.

Mr. Burton opposed the application, and read an affidavit by the mate of the Aurora at the time of the accident, in April, 1905, who said that applicant had no business to be standing under the derrick, and that it was solely due to his own carelessness that he was injured.

Dr. Greer read further affidavits to the effect that applicant was coxswain of lighter No. 3, and that he was attending to his duties in a proper manner, and was in his proper place when the accident occurred.

Mr. Burton said he felt that, as the affidavits stood, leave to sue could hardly be opposed.

Leave granted to applicant to sue Stephan Bros. in forma pauperis, Dr. Greer to be advocate, and Mr. E. T. Sydney to be attorney of the plaintiff.

MASTER OF SUPREME COURT V. TRUSTEE, INSOLVENT ESTATE NORRIS.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order requiring respondent (Joseph B. Walker) to forthwith file liquidation account and the plan of distribution in an insolvent estate of which he is trustee, and to pay costs de bonis propriis.

Hopley, J.: What are the facts?

Mr. Jones: The usual notice was served upon the respondent, and he has failed to file the account within six months.

Order granted, respondent to pay costs.

Ex parte UNION-CASTLE STEAMSHIP CO.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of the Union-Castle Steamship Company, for an extension of the return day of a certain citation and for directions as to service. Petitioners stated that on the 5th September last they obtained leave of the Court to attach the Norwegian barque Cingalese, her cargo and freight, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, in an action about to be instituted by them against the owners of the ship, cargo, and freight, for the recovery of their claim for salvage, and also obtained leave to sue the owners of the ship and cargo by edictal citation, returnable on the 14th November. Petitioners did not immediately sue out the citation; firstly, because they did not know the name of the owner of either the ship or her cargo, and, secondly, because negotiations were entered into by certain agents of the underwriters which led petitioners to believe that a settlement out of court would be arranged. Nothing, however, came out of the negotiations, and beyond an agreement between the underwriters of the ship and cargo and petitioners, that the ship and cargo should be sold and the proceeds of the sale paid into this court, to abide the result of the petitioners' action for salvage. The authority of the Court was thereupon obtained to sell the ship and cargo; the sale was held in due course, and the net proceeds, a sum of £1,701 1s. 8d., had been paid into court to abide result of the action. Petitioners had made every effort to find out the names and addresses of the owners of the ship, but they had not succeeded in obtaining definite information, although they had been informed and believed that the late owner of the Cingalese was H. A. Kvasse, of Christiansand, Norway, and that the late owners of the cargo were Messrs. Phillipi Bros., of Mozambique. One Heinrich Knorr, of East London, merchant, had throughout the negotiations described himself and acted as the representative of the underwriters of the cargo, and Messrs. Dreyfus and Co., of East London, merchants, had in like manner described themselves and acted as agents for the underwriters of the ship. Owing to the delay which had taken place in suing out the citation, it was necessary that the return day should be extended. Petitioners prayed for an order: (a) extending the attachment to the proceeds of the sale of the ship and cargo; (b) extending the return day of citation to the 1st February, 1907; (c) giving instructions as to service or substituted service, or as to publication of citation and other processes in the aforesaid intended action.

Hopley, J., asked whether the agents who had been acting in East London had refused to inform the petitioners as to who were their principals. The Court was in the position of absolutely not knowing whom the petitioners were going to sue.

Dr. Greer: I do not think it is contemplated that we cannot find out. I think the position is that the Union-Castle Co. are under the impression that they will be able to discover the names of the owners of the ship and cargo, but the point on which they would like your lordship's decision would be as to whether they might not effect service on these people through their admitted agents in East London, viz., Messrs. Knorr and Dreyfus and Co.

[Hopley, J.: But supposing they took up the attitude that they had no right to accept service in actions at law, and so on?]

Dr. Greer: Then, I take it, it would be necessary to come again to the Court, and either have personal service on the owners or substituted service, as the Court might be inclined to allow.

The Court ordered that the proceeds of the sale of the ship and cargo be attached in lieu of the ship and cargo. That the return day be extended to the 28th February, 1907; service may be effected upon Messrs. Knorr and Dreyfus and Co., of East London, respectively, if they are the agents in this country, to accept service on behalf of the owners of the ship and cargo, costs to be costs in the cause.

ISAACS V. BEKKOOMIA.

Dr. Greer moved to make absolute certain rule interdicting respondent from removing certain goods stored at 47, William-street, Cape Town, pending the appointment of a trustee in the respondent's estate, should it be surrendered, and authorising the Sheriff to attach the said goods, and hold them, pending further order of Court, and the inclusion of the said goods in the schedules, and handing over of same for the benefit of his creditors, should his estate be surrendered. Service had been effected upon respondent, but he did not appear to show cause against the rule.

[Hopley, J.: Has his estate been sequestrated?]

Dr. Greer said that he had no information on that point.

The rule was extended to the 12th December, and the matter ordered to stand over until the 12th, pending further information, to be placed on affidavit.

REX V. ADAMS.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch, who, sitting at Somerset West, had convicted the appellant of contravening section 2 (sub-section 1) of Act 12, 1888, by wrongfully and unlawfully exposing for sale certain mineral waters to which a false trade description or trade-mark was applied, as to be calculated to deceive. Appellant had been sentenced to pay a fine of £5 or undergo one month's imprisonment.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones said that he appeared for the Crown to submit to judgment, and that he was not able to support the conviction.

Mr. De Villiers argued that the appellant had not committed any offence with which he could be charged under this section.

Hopley, J.: In this case Mr. Jones, for the Crown, does not support the conviction, and I can quite understand why. The second section of Act 12 of 1888, under which the appellant was prosecuted, states that any person is guilty of an offence who sells or exposes for sale or has in his possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture any goods or things to which any forged trade mark or false trade description is applied. Now, in the present case it seems to me very difficult to see how the facts proved bring the case of the appellant within the mischief aimed at by this section of the Act. It appears that he is a maker of mineral waters under the style or firm of the Crystal Spring Mineral Water Co., and people who deal with him, hotels and others, know perfectly well what they are buying. They are buying the goods manufactured by him, and can it make any difference to them that these goods are placed in bottles which are stamped with the name of some other firm? They cannot be deceived in any way, and it does not seem to me to matter at all whether they get their soda water in Schweppes' or Kops and Rawlings', or anybody else's bottles, provided that they, as purchasers, know perfectly well that they are buying the goods made by the appellant at his Crystal Spring mineral water factory, Somerset West. That was the case here, and it is not alleged that the accused purposely forged or placed a false trade description upon these things for the purpose of deceiving. On the contrary, it is stated in the evidence that, whatever the embossed marks in the glass of the bottles were, he used to send out the bottles with his own labels, such as those produced in evidence, placed on them. The Magistrate makes a point that the label did not completely cover the words which implied that the bottles belonged to somebody else. But surely that does not matter. The label indicated perfectly clearly to the purchaser that he was buying, not the goods of the firms whose letters were embossed on the bottle, but the goods of the firm who had placed a label on it. If they knew that perfectly well, surely they cannot be said to have been in any way deceived, nor can the appellant have contravened the second section of the Act. It seems to me that the Magistrate was misled by the mere fact that the wrong bottles were used, which, apparently is not an unusual thing in the trade. Customers do not return the bottles carefully to the firms who supplied them, and they get mixed, and in the hurry very frequently the bottles of some rival manufacturer are employed, but so long as customers know perfectly well what they are getting it does not seem that this is punishable under the second section of the Act. The conviction must be quashed.

REX V. COHEN.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland, who had convicted the appellant (Benjamin Cohen) of a contravention of section 2, Act 28, 1893, by supplying an aboriginal native, to wit, a Hottentot woman, with a bottle of Cape brandy, without production of a permit from her European master or mistress, in breach of the condition endorsed on the licence of appellant's bottle store.

Mr. Burton was for appellant; Mr. Howell Jones was for the Crown.

The ground of the appeal was that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and that it was not in accordance with true and substantial justice.

Mr. Jones did not support the conviction.

Mr. Burton having been briefly heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: It is clear that this conviction must be quashed. The licence contains a very useful provision that liquor shall not be supplied to aboriginal natives except under certain conditions, amongst others upon presentation of a written order from their employer. In this particular case a servant, known to be working for a woman called Du Plessis, came to the appellant's store and ordered a bottle of brandy verbally for Mrs. Plessis. Now, if the bottle had been delivered to this woman, Truy Percense, carelessly in the store, it might be that although the appellant believed she would carry it to Mrs. Du Plessis, there would be a contravention of the licence in so delivering it to that woman that she could drink it. But the greatest care was exercised, and the liquor was not delivered to this woman at all. It was treated as a sale to Mrs. Plessis, a woman perfectly competent to get liquor. The bottle was not given to Truy Percense, but it was sent to Mrs. Du Plessis, and delivered into her own hand in her house, and, therefore, it was never a sale to this woman, Truy Percense, at all. Mrs. Du Plessis acted a wrong part in that she acted as agent for this woman Percense. It seems that she intended all along that this bottle should be for Truy Percense, and she has been prosecuted and convicted for delivering this bottle to this girl, Truy Percense, but that is not a contravention by the accused of the condition of his licence. The conviction is wrong and must be quashed.

REX V. VAN DER VENTER.

Stock theft—Act 35 of 1893, Sections 22, 28 and 30.

This was an application for review, under Rule 190, of a decision of the Acting Assistant Magistrate of Gordonias, who, sitting at Rietfontein, had convicted appellant of a contravention of section 22, Act 35, 1893.

Van der Venter had been charged in the Court below with the theft of five head of cattle belonging to one H. Matthys, and had been convicted of a contravention of section 22 of Act 35, 1893. The application called on the respondents to show cause why the proceedings and judgment should not be reviewed, set aside, or corrected, on the ground that "the proceedings before the Acting Assistant Resident Magistrate were wholly irregular and contrary to law, in that the said P. G. van der Venter was convicted and sentenced for an offence in respect of which he had not been charged, viz., contravening section 22, Act 35 of 1893."

It appeared that the papers had been sent up for review to Mr. Justice Lange of the High Court, sitting in chambers, but that he had consented to withdraw his certificate in order that the case could be argued before the Supreme Court.

Mr. Gardiner for applicant; Mr. Howell Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Jones said that a report had been received from the Magistrate, in which he said that no summons was issued against the accused, the procedure enjoined by the section 28, Act 35, 1893, having been followed by the police and section 30 by the Court. The Magistrate had said that he was satisfied that the accused's account as to how he came into possession of the stock was correct, but he was also satisfied from his account that he did not take due precautions to ascertain that the man who sold him the stock had the right to sell it.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: The Stock and Produce Thefts Act, No. 35 of 1893, was intended to stretch the net very wide to reach almost any form of dishonest or lax dealing with stock and produce, and it gives a wide definition to the term "theft," so that there shall be no quibbling or getting out of a wrongful act, because it does not fall specifically under the term "theft" as defined by the common law. The first point in this appeal is as to the definition of "theft" in the second section of the Act. "Theft" is said to embrace, besides actual stealing, (1) receiving with guilty knowledge, (2) attempting to steal, and (3), (which is important in the present case), being or having been in unlawful possession, not being able to give a satisfactory account of such possession. Now, that, it seems to me, is especially put there in the interpretation clause of the word "theft," in view of the fact that in a subsequent portion of the Act such possession is specially dealt with, and such explanation is demandable under certain circumstances, and I am inclined to think that that portion of the definition of "theft" has reference to the sections 28 and 29. When we come to section 28, which is the important section in the present appeal, it enacts that "if there be reasonable grounds for believing that any person is or has been in unlawful possession of any stock or produce, it shall be competent for any Justice of the Peace, field cornet, landholder, or police constable, to apprehend . . . such person without warrant, and convey him before any Resident Magistrate having jurisdiction, and if it be found that he is or has been in possession of any such stock or produce, and is not able to give a satisfactory account of such possession to such Magistrate, he shall be deemed to be guilty of the crime of theft of stock or produce, and shall thereupon be dealt with as if he had originally been charged with such crime." In this case the man was originally charged with such crime. He was charged, as I find on the original depositions, with the crime of theft of stock, but it seems to me that, if this section makes the non-ability to account satisfactorily for the possession of such stock one of the modes of being convicted of the crime of theft, its effect is not taken away by the fact that the culprit was properly charged in the first instance with the crime of theft as defined in the second section and as explained in this 28th section. But in the 30th section of the Act it is enacted that if when a person is so charged the Court is satisfied that when he received the stock or produce he had no guilty knowledge that it was stolen he may nevertheless, if his explanation of possession is not fully satisfactory, be punished. He may in such case "be dealt with as though he stood charged with a contravention of the 22nd section of this Act." Looking back at that section, we find that a man may be charged with having got possession of stock by way of purchase, bargain, or exchange from any other person, which stock is stolen, without guilty knowledge at the time that it is stolen, but also without having reasonable cause, the proof of which shall lie upon him, for believing at the time of his acquisition that such stock was the property of the person from whom he received it, or that the person was authorised to deal with it," and in case of his failure to produce such proof he shall be deemed to be guilty of contravening this 22nd section and liable to certain penalties. It seems to me that this is the first course that the Magistrate adopted in this case. The man was charged with theft, and the evidence against him was that he was in possession of stock belonging to somebody else. He was called upon by the Magistrate to give a satisfactory account of his possession, as the Magistrate had right to do under the 28th section. He gave an account, saying that he had purchased, and the Magistrate thereupon found that he was not guilty of actual theft, because he had no guilty knowledge at the time that he received his stock; but the Magistrate acting in accordance with the Act which authorised him to go further held that accused had no reasonable cause for supposing that the person who sold these things to him had any right to deal with them, or was the owner of them, and, therefore, he found the accused guilty, as he might according to the 30th section of the Act. I do not think there is anything irregular in that. I think that the course adopted by the magistrate should be construed in such circumstances by the light of 28th and 29th sections—that is, where a man is called upon to give a satisfactory account of his possession and he fails to do so. In my opinion the judge's certificate was correct in the first instance, and there is no reason for changing the conviction or for granting the present application. The application will be refused and the sentence confirmed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

FEIN AND COHEN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1906.
Dec. 10th.
" 17th.

Immigration Act (47 of 1902)—
Deportation of undesirables
—Notice of motion for release
—Contempt of Court—Restoration to jurisdiction.

The applicants were deported from the Colony as prohibited immigrants under the 8th section of Act 47 of 1902. Before they were actually removed, notice was served on the respondent, viz.: the Colonial Secretary and the Immigration Officer, that an application would be made to the Supreme Court for the release of the applicants: but, as the respondents had already made all their arrangements for sending the applicants away by a steamer on the afternoon of that day, they proceeded to carry out their arrangements.

Held on an application that the applicants be restored to the jurisdiction, that as the evidence shewed that the applicants were prohibited immigrants under the Act and were not domiciled in S. Africa, or otherwise exempt from the operation of the Act, the Court could not order their restoration to the Colony.

Held further, on an application that the respondents be punished for contempt of Court, that, as the respondents had not disobeyed any order of the Court and had deported the applicants bona fide in pursuance of arrangements made before they were served with notice of the application for the release of the applicants and not with the ulterior object of preventing the application from being duly heard, they could not be found guilty of contempt of Court.

In this matter there were two notices of motion. In the first, the respondents were called upon to show cause why they should not release and discharge the applicants from custody and detention. In the second the Colonial Secretary and Immigration Officer were called upon to show cause why they should not restore the applicants to this colony and jurisdiction of this Court, and pay the passage incidental to such restoration, and why both or one of them should not be personally committed, fined, or otherwise dealt with, for contempt of the said court and its process, and pay costs of this application.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the applicants, Jack Fein and Rebecca Cohen, of Cape Town, were deported on an order of the immigration authorities by the steamship Guelph, on the 5th November last, on the ground that they were prohibited immigrants within the meaning of section 2 (sub-section E) of Act 47, of 1902. It was alleged that they had been convicted—Fein of procuring a girl in Natal for the purposes of prostitution and of living on the proceeds of prostitution, and Cohen of soliciting prostitution in Rhodesia. The Immigration Officer (Mr. Cousins) said that both the applicants had admitted these convictions to him, and that he warned them to leave the Colony some time before they were deported, but that they took no steps to do so. The applicants said that they were domiciled in South Africa. Fein said that he was a bookmaker by occupation, and that he had not brought himself within the terms of section 2 of the Act. He was by nationality a Russian. He had been in South Africa seven years, and had intended to acquire a fixed settlement here. Cohen said that she was a Polish Jewess. She was a widow, and came to this country about six years ago, and had resided in the Cape and Bulawayo. She had one child, who was attending a school at Hermanus. In support of the second application, it was alleged that on the day when the applicants were deported, Mr. Brady, their attorney, applied to Mr. Broers, A.R.M., for leave to attend on their behalf a certain inquiry which was held prior to their deportation, but that leave was refused. He also said that he gave notice to the Immigration Department and the Colonial Secretary's Department that he was making application for an order to stay the deportation of applicants pending a decision of the Supreme Court, but that this was ignored, and that, notwithstanding this notice, the applicants were deported later in the day and were thus deprived of an opportunity of having their case considered by the Court.

Dr. Greer appeared for applicants; Mr. Howel Jones was for respondents.

Dr. Greer, in support of the second application, submitted that there had clearly been contempt of the process of this Court, and that these people had been removed from the Colony in a high-handed manner without fair warning to them at a time when an appeal to this Court was pending as to whether they should or should not be deported from this colony. There had been warnings given to the applicants, it was true, but no judicial proceedings had been taken, and if the applicants had come to this Court they could only have said that certain statements had been made orally that they would be deported, or that they must leave the Colony by a certain date. On the morning of the 5th November applicants were arrested, they were brought before the A.R.M. of Cape Town, and their attorney asked for leave to be present at the inquiry, but this was refused, and there was an investigation in camera, a sort of Star Chamber inquiry, and the applicants were detained and were later on deported. He submitted that the one question that had to be decided was that of domicile. There was a prima facie case for asserting domicile. Fein had lived in South Africa for seven years, and Cohen had lived here six years. Clearly, the question of domicile was then raised, and that question apparently must have been decided by the Magistrate. Then the legal adviser of these people gave verbal notice to the Immigration Officer, which was not denied, that he intended having recourse to the Supreme Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When?]

Dr. Greer: Immediately after the investigation of November 5. They were arrested, tried, and deported all on the same day. Proceeding, counsel pointed out that notice was given of the application to the Immigration Officer and the Colonial Secretary's Department a few hours before the vessel sailed. Both these applicants had prima facie a domicile in this country, and were entitled to come to this Court for relief. He cited in re Willem Kok and Nathaniel Balie (Buchanan, 1879, 45), and Sigrau v. the Queen (12, Juta, 256). He went on to submit that once the question of domicile was raised before the Magistrate his jurisdiction was ousted.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How does it appear that the question of domicile was raised before the Magistrate?]

Dr. Greer: I think it appears from the affidavit of Mr. Cousins.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is only an inference on your part that, inasmuch as the question of domicile was raised before the Immigration Officer, it must also have been raised before the Magistrate?]

Dr. Greer: I understand from Mr. Cousins's affidavit that the question of domicile was raised. Perhaps I should say that if the question of domicile were raised before the Magistrate, the Magistrate clearly had no jurisdiction (R.M.'s Courts Act, No. 20 of 1856, sec. 8. subsec. 3).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you contend that any person who is deported under the Immigration Act may raise the question of domicile and then the Immigration Officer and the Magistrate are impotent to act.]

Dr. Greer: I submit that every person has got the right under the Charter of Justice to appeal to the Supreme Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, that is another point. On the question of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, surely he could decide the question of domicile?]

Dr. Greer: This case is complicated by the fact that there was no audience given at all to the legal representative of the applicant. I submit that where there is a genuine bona fide question of domicile raised, that would be sufficient to remove it out of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

[Hopley, J.: But was his jurisdiction ousted if the Magistrate had come to the conclusion that it was a bogus claim?]

Dr. Greer: The assumption is that it was a bona fide claim.

[Hopley, J.: The assumption is rather against you, because the only assumption is that everything was properly done.]

Dr. Greer: Unless it were shown that there were things that were improperly done.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you say Mr. Broers refused to allow Mr. Brady to appear before him at the inquiry?]

Dr. Greer: That is the allegation, and it is not denied. Proceeding, counsel said that there was really a more serious question arising in this case, and that was, it was not denied that at the time the respondents, in their official capacity, knew that the legality of their actions was being tested by an application to the Supreme Court they removed the applicants beyond the jurisdiction.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What the respondents say is that all arrangements had been made, that these people knew beforehand that they were going to be removed, and that they took no steps until the arrangements had been made, and the passage had been taken, and what, then, were they to do with these applicants?]

Dr. Greer: As a matter of fact, there was nothing on which the applicants could have come to the Supreme Court.

[Hopley, J.: Why not? Why shouldn't they have come before the 31st October?]

Dr. Greer: How could they have come, my lord?

[Hopley, J.: They could have said that they were threatened with deportation, and that they were domiciled in South Africa.]

Dr. Greer (continuing) cited the case of Harris v. Colonial Secretary (22 Sup. Ct. Reps., 378). He also cited Li Qui Yu v. Superintendent of Labourers (Transvaal Law Reps., 1906, vol. 2, 181), and submitted that that was sufficient authority for the present application. The ground of the present application was that certain persons, well knowing that the parties were making an application, yet in contempt of the process of this Court, removed the applicants from the jurisdiction. He also cited Tye's case, Queen v. Barnardo (25 Q.B.D., 305), and the Gossage's case, Queen v. Barnardo (24 Q.B.D., 283).

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel whether he contended that there would have been contempt of Court in deporting the applicants irrespective of the question of whether it were shown whether that deportation was justified or not?

Dr. Greer submitted that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the Court would find that there had been contempt of the process of the Court. It was, of course, impossible at the present stage to enter into the merits of the case, because the Court had no evidence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The question is, whether a person, knowing that an application was going to be made, who does that which prevents the application from taking effect, does anything that would be contempt of Court?]

Dr. Greer submitted that this was a case in which the Court would mark its sense of the conduct of the persons concerned in removing the applicants from the jurisdiction.

Mr. Jones said that his case was rendered a good deal simpler by the fact that counsel for applicants did not attempt to set up the position that these persons were not prohibited immigrants.

Dr. Greer (interposing): Oh, yes, I do. I simply did not argue that part of the case, because there are no facts before the Court.

Mr. Jones said that, as to the facts of the case, the applicants had had ample opportunity of being heard. They knew why they were being deported. They knew that they were charged with living on the proceeds of prostitution.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that counsel should argue the question of the removal of the applicants out of the jurisdiction by the Colonial Secretary's Department, when it was known that they were moving the Supreme Court against their removal.

Mr. Jones: I submit that if they had an action at all it was an action for damages.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But does the question of contempt of Court depend upon whether a person has a good case or not?]

Mr. Jones submitted that it did not; the question of contempt depended upon whether there had been actual contempt of any order of Court. The respondent was called upon to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of the process of the Court. Where was the process of Court of which contempt had been shown? Was a bare notice a process of Court? At the last moment, just as these people were about to be deported, their attorney came to the Immigration Officer with a bare notice of motion, in which not one single reason was set out as to why it was proposed to ask the Court to restrain the deportation of the applicants. Furthermore, no cause had been shown why the application could not have been brought before the Court on the very afternoon of the vessel's departure with the applicants. It was said that the Court was engaged with another matter, but that was no reason why this should not have been brought before their lordships as a matter of urgency. As to the Transvaal authority quoted by his learned friend, he (Mr. Jones) confessed that he could not follow Mr. Justice Mason's decision, a decision certainly that was not supported by any of the English cases that had been referred to by his learned friend.

[Hopley, J.: We may order you to bring these people back, and if you fail to do so you will be guilty of contempt.]

That may be, but the Court will not grant such an order in the case of prohibited immigrants.

[Hopley, J.: That is the whole question: they say that they are domiciled here.]

There is no evidence of domicile. A person cannot be domiciled merely in South Africa, he must have a fixed abode. He submitted that there had been no contempt of Court by respondents.

[Hopley, J.: What is it then?]

Mr. Jones: It is an act which a man takes upon his own shoulders, and it would make him liable in damages if it be held that he acted illegally. Counsel proceeded to cite Rex v. Crystal (13 "C.T." Reports, 1001) and Salie and Mahomet v. Colonial Government (16 C.T.R., 324). He contended that the Court had now sufficient information before it to decide the question of domicile, and that the facts showed that the applicants were not domiciled in this country. If they were not domiciled, then they were clearly prohibited immigrants. These people were aliens, prohibited from entering the country, and as such they could not invoke the aid of the Court in deciding a question as to whether the Colonial Secretary had been guilty of contempt of court. No alien can claim as a matter of right to enter a foreign country. Chung Tien Toy's case (Eng. Ap. Court 1891-272).

Dr. Greer, in reply, submitted that the process of the Court was initiated by the notice of motion which was given. It was not quite correct to say that the notice was served at the last minute, for there was a considerable interval before the vessel left. The cases cited by his hon. friend did not touch the point in the present matter because there the Court had all the facts before it and itself decided that the applicants were not domiciled in South Africa.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 17th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for an order on the Colonial Secretary and the Immigration Officer to restore the applicants, Fein and Cohen, to the jurisdiction of this Court, and for an order to attach, fine, or otherwise punish the respondents for contempt of this Court or of its process. The first applicant is a Russian who arrived in this colony about seven years ago and has lived in South Africa ever since. During part of the time he lived in Johannesburg and also in Durban, Natal. At the latter place he seems to have been convicted of procuring a girl for prostitution, and once of having lived on the earnings of prostitution. After serving a period of imprisonment he was deported from Natal, and for three years he has lived in Cape Town, where he carried on the occupation of a professional bookmaker. According to the statement of Head Constable Grant, the applicant Fein has been the habitual associate of persons of ill-repute, pimps, and prostitutes, and is known to the police as a man of most undesirable character. On the 2nd of November he was summoned to appear before the second respondent for the purpose of an inquiry as to the circumstances of his re-entering into this Colony. He claimed exemption from the operation of the Act on the ground that he was domiciled in South Africa, but he was warned that as he had entered the Colony in violation of the Immigration Act it would be necessary for him to leave. This he declined to do, and he was accordingly warned that if still in Cape Town at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 5th November, proceedings would be taken under the provisions of the Act to deport him by the first available boat. Being still in Cape Town on the morning of the 5th, Fein was arrested and charged before the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town in terms of Regulation 23, framed under the provisions of the Act, as a prohibited immigrant, and ordered to be detained pending deportation. It is not clear at what precise time he appeared before the Magistrate, but it was probably about noon. Mr. Brady states that he applied to the Magistrate for permission to be present at the investigation, but was refused, that the investigation took place in his absence, and that Fein was removed in custody to Roeland-street gaol. Mr. Brady's clerk states that at 12.50 p.m. he served the second respondent with a notice that the Court would be applied to on the following day for the release of Fein, that the second respondent refused to accept notice, and that he (the clerk) thereupon placed the notice on the desk in front of the second respondent. The clerk further states that at 2 p.m. he applied at the Colonial Secretary's office and showed the notice to the assistant Under-Colonial Secretary, who said it was useless to serve the notice on him, and that it should be taken to the Immigration Officer. According to the statement of the Immigration Officer, when the Magistrate had ordered the detention of the applicant all arrangements were made for securing a passage for him to England, and a ticket at the cost of the Government was taken by the S.S. Guelph, due to sail that afternoon, and the man was placed on board and removed from the Colony. In all substantial respects the second applicant, Cohen, stands on the same footing as the first applicant. She was a Pole, and arrived in the Colony about six years ago, and has, during the interval, lived at Bulawayo, where she seems to have earned a living as a prostitute until she was warned by the police in Rhodesia to leave that territory, which she did. After her return to this colony she also was warned by the immigration officer as far back as October 11 that she must leave the Colony before the 31st. On the latter date she appeared before him and stated that she declined to leave, and she was finally warned that if she did not leave before the Monday following she would be deported. On that day she was deported under the same circumstances as have been mentioned in regard to Fein.

I am bound to say at the outset that it is difficult to understand upon what ground Mr. Broers, the Magistrate of Cape Town, refused to permit the applicant's attorney to be present at the inquiry. The 8th section of the Immigration Act (No. 47 of 1902) enacts that "any person immigrating into this Colony by land or sea in violation of the provisions of this Act shall be liable to be removed at any time from within the limits of the Colony, and be kept in such custody as may by regulation be prescribed pending such removal." Among the regulations framed under the Act, the 23rd reads as follows: "In the event of a prohibited immigrant having entered this Colony in contravention of the Act, it shall be lawful, after due inquiry into the facts by the Magistrate of the district . . . to order such immigrant to be detained and accommodated in such place as the Minister may from time to time direct, pending the removal of such immigrant." The framer of this regulation could surely not have intended that the inquiry shall be a secret one, from which even the unfortunate immigrant's legal adviser should be excluded. At such an inquiry questions of the greatest difficulty and importance may have to be decided, and outcasts of society as people like the applicants may be, they were entitled to claim that their legal advisers be allowed to assist them. They seem to have raised the question that they were domiciled in South Africa, and that consequently they were excluded by section 3, sub-section (f) from the operation of the Act. Presumably evidence must have been taken on this point at the inquiry, and the Magistrate should have welcomed rather than refused legal assistance in such a matter. The respondents, however, are not responsible for the Magistrate's mode of conducting his inquiry, and I proceed to consider whether, in case the motion for the release of the applicants had been heard before they were deported, the Court would have been justified in interfering.

For the purpose of this application every facility has been furnished by this Court to the applicant's legal adviser to bring forward every fact that might bear in their favour. They have been deported, but they have left affidavits behind stating the circumstances upon which they relied to establish their South African domicile, and they had full opportunity before they left to instruct their legal adviser as to the further evidence available here in support of their claim to such a domicile. The question to be decided is whether at the time when they immigrated into this colony, about three years ago, they were domiciled in South Africa, and the evidence appears to me conclusive that they were not. It follows that, as they were, under the 8th section of the Act, liable to be removed from within the limits of the Colony, the Court would not, if the case had been heard before their arrival, have prohibited such removal.

It follows further, that the Court cannot now accede to the application for an order that the applicants be restored to the jurisdiction of this Court. It has been contended, however, that inasmuch as the respondents removed the applicants after they had notice that an application for the release of the applicants would be made, they should now be compelled to restore the applicants to the jurisdiction. In support of this contention the case of Barnardo v. Ford (L.R.A.C., 1892, p. 326) was relied upon, but there the only point decided was that a parent whose child had been removed out of the jurisdiction by the head of an institution in which the child had been placed by the parent, was entitled to a writ of habeas corpus directed to such head, on the ground that the parent was entitled to require a return to the writ in order that the facts might be fully investigated. It was made clear that the writ should not be used as a means of compelling one who has unlawfully parted with the custody of another person to regain that custody, or of punishing him for having parted with it. In the present case, the applicants would presumably be quite willing to return if the respondents are ordered to restore them to the jurisdiction, but no good purpose would be served by such a course, because the result would be that a fresh order for their deportation would be made after their return.

It has been urged, however, that even if the respondents are not ordered to restore the applicants, the Court should punish them for their alleged contempt of Court. It does not appear from the affidavits what part the Colonial Secretary took in the matter, but I am bound to say that the Immigration Officer would have been better advised if he had shown greater readiness to assist the applicants in bringing the matter before the Court, and had even postponed the removal of the applicants until the Court had been appealed to. It was no light matter for them, however undesirable denizens they may have been, to be hurried out of the Colony at such short notice. The second respondent stated in one of his affidavits that no reasons for appeal were disclosed, and no affidavits were attached to the notice served upon him, but in another affidavit he admitted that the applicants had themselves, when they appeared before him, claimed exemption from the operation of the Act on the ground that they were domiciled in South Africa. This was not a wholly frivolous claim, and the second respondent certainly sailed perilously close to the wind in the course he took, but was he guilty of contempt of court? That question must be decided under our own law, and not, as has been suggested, under the law of England. It is true that by the second section of the Charter of Justice this court was constituted a Court of Record, and that, according to the decision of the Privy Council, in McDermott v. Judges of British Guiana (L.R., 2 P.C. 341), such a court has power to commit for contempt without any appeal to the Privy Council, but it does not follow that the Charter of Justice introduced the whole of the English law relating to contempt of court into this colony. In the decision of the question whether, in any particular case, there has been a contempt, this court should be guided by well-established principles of our own law. It is surprising how little information is to be found in the text-books as to the Dutch practice in cases of contempt. Voet (5.1.2) mentions the power of a Judge to punish for injury done to him in his judicial capacity, quite incidentally, and as an exception to the general rule that no one should be a Judge in his own cause. "It is not," he said, "unjust for a Judge, by the imposition of a fine, to punish those who do not scruple by word or deed to inflict an injury on him as Judge, and while discharging his duty as such, provided only the case be treated as one for inflicting punishment in the interest of the public, and not for the benefit of the injured Judge." In another passage, Voet (2.2.3) points out how necessary it is for the due administration of justice that the decrees of a court of competent jurisdiction should be implicitly obeyed, and he adds that even where the Judge makes an unjust decree it must be submitted to. Again, in his title on the crime of falsum (Voet, 48.10.4), he mentions, as an instance of such a crime, a case in which a person, dolo malo, steals away in order to evade process compelling him to give evidence in a court of law. The principle underlying these and other statements of the law made by Voet, is this—that the public interest requires that no one shall be allowed with impunity to wilfully impede or obstruct or otherwise interfere with the due course of justice, or to bring the administration of justice into contempt. There is no difficulty in applying this principle where there is a direct interference with the course of justice, as where a Judge is abused or obstructed in open court, or where his decree is disobeyed. In such cases it is of the very nature of the act that the offender must have intended the consequences of his act, and he cannot be heard to say that he did not wilfully impede the administration of justice, or bring it into contempt. Where, however, the alleged interference is of a more indirect nature, it must often become necessary to inquire into the intentions of the person charged with the offence. In the case, for instance, of Queen v. Foye and Curtin (2 Buch, A.C., p. 121), where the appellants had been convicted of the offence of defeating and obstructing the due course of justice, the Court of Appeal held that it was an indictable offence, although it might also be summarily punished as contempt of court, and that in order to support the conviction it must be shown not only that the necessary consequence of the appellant's acts was to prevent the due administration of justice, but also that he committed those acts knowingly and wilfully. The indictment in that case stated that one Eatwell had been duly summoned before the Special Court on a criminal charge, that one Jonas, a detective was a necessary and material witness for the Crown, and that the appellants, knowing that he was such a necessary and material witness, and was kept in the charge of the detective department did wrongfully, unlawfully, and with intent to defeat and obstruct the course of justice, entice the said Jonas away from Kimberley and did prevent him from appearing to give his evidence before the Court. Upon the evidence the Court held that the facts charged in the indictment had been proved, and consequently the Court had no difficulty in dismissing the appeal. The ground of the appeal was that the indictment did not allege that Jonas had been subpoenaed to give evidence, but seeing that the facts showed that the appellants had by their conduct enabled Jonas to evade the service of a subpoena, the non-service thereof could really not affect the decision. But supposing it had been proved in that case that before it was known to the appellants that Jonas would be required as a witness, they had engaged him as a servant to accompany them on a journey, and that after this fact became known to them they had called upon him to fulfil his engagement, not because they wished to obstruct the course of justice, but because they required Jonas on their journey, no jury could have convicted them, and in case of a conviction no Court would have supported the verdict. There would have been no proof of the dolus malus which Voet considers essential to convict a person who steals away from the jurisdiction in order to evade a subpoena. It might have been different if a subpoena had to the knowledge of the appellants, been actually served on the witness. A person who, after having a subpoena served on him and reasonable expenses tendered to him, fails, without any lawful impediment, to appear, is liable under our Rules of Court to be attached, fined, and imprisoned for his contempt of the process of the Court. His failure, like any other disobedience of an order of Court, is in itself a contempt, and it may well be that a person who, knowing that a witness had been subpoenaed, persuades him to fulfil a prior engagement, renders himself equally liable to punishment. But there is no necessary contempt in inducing a witness who has not been subpoenaed to fill an engagement which may prevent him from attending as a witness in case he should be subpoenaed, and such conduct could only become a contempt if it were manifest that there was an ulterior object, namely, to obstruct the due course of justice. In the present case I am satisfied that the respondents had made their arrangements for deporting the applicants before the notice of motion was served on either of them. I quite agree with the applicants' counsel that the legality or otherwise of the deportation cannot affect the question whether or not the respondents were guilty of a contempt of Court. They honestly believed that they were acting within their powers, they disobeyed no order of the Court, and, although they deported the applicants after receiving notice of the motion, they did so bona fide in pursuance of arrangements previously made, and not with the ulterior object of preventing the application from being duly heard. But for the Transvaal case, therefore, which has been cited, I would have had no doubt that the respondents are not liable to be punished for contempt of Court. The case I refer to is that of Li Kui Yu v. Superintendent of Labourers (Transvaal L.R. for 1906, p. 181), and I am bound to say that, if the remarks of the learned Judge (Mason, J.) have been correctly reported, the case is a direct authority in favour of the applicants. The applicant there was a Chinaman, who had been illegally deported, but the illegality of the deportation, although it was the ground for ordering him to be restored to the jurisdiction, appears not to have been the ground on which Mr. Jamieson, the respondent, was found guilty of contempt of Court, and fined accordingly. The ground on which he was found guilty was that, knowing or having reason to know that an application would be made for the release of the Chinaman, he carried out his intention of deporting the Chinaman before the Court could be approached. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge said: "I do feel with reference to this matter that Mr. Jamieson ought to have known that an application was intended to be made to this Court for the purpose of requiring the production of this coolie. His actions have all the effect of defeating any such application, and I think that he did wrong in sending the coolie out of the Colony with a notice like that hanging over his head before he had given the solicitor specific intimation that he was going to repatriate the man, and give him every opportunity of applying to the Court." Further on the learned Judge said: "I propose to act in this case upon those English authorities which were quoted by Mr. Smuts, and which I think represent in substance our own law. Perhaps our own law may not go so far as the English authorities, but I certainly think it goes to this extent, that where a person knows or has reason to believe or ought to know that an application is being made to the Court for a certain purpose—where he has that knowledge or that suspicion, then, if he takes any action before the Court can be approached, the Court will regard that as an interference with the administration of justice, and will exercise its powers to prevent itself being defeated by anything of that kind." If by this was meant, as it apparently was, that the offender would be punished for contempt of Court, the proposition is certainly a very startling one. Take the case of a person who has sold a certain property, and has arranged with the purchaser to give transfer on a certain day at noon. A third party serves a notice on the seller on the morning of that day that he intends to apply to the Court on the following day for an interdict to restrain the transfer to the purchaser. According to the learned Judge it would be a punishable offence for the seller to give transfer at the time fixed, because he has taken action before the Court could be approached. The practical result would be that every notice of an intention to apply for an interdict would really operate as an interdict, because, with the danger of punishment hanging over his head, no person could venture to take action before the application could be heard. Nay, more, if the seller has a suspicion that an application will be made, or is being made, he must stay his hand lest he should do any act which might subsequently interfere with the power of the Court to prevent that act. The liberty of the subject, of course, stands on a higher plane, but the principle is the same. Where an order is made for the production of a person who is in custody, that order must, of course, be obeyed at all cost, but, until the order is made, the rights and powers of those in whose custody he is cannot be limited by an order which has not yet been made, although it may thereafter be made. If thereof the custodians in the exercise of the rights and powers which they believe themselves to possess, part with the custody, not with the object of defeating an application which they know will be made, but with the bona fide object of carrying out a resolution which they had formed before they acquired such knowledge, I cannot agree in the view that they are guilty of contempt. The only authorities cited before the learned Judge, according to the report, were the cases I have already mentioned, and two other Barnardo cases, previously decided by the Court of Appeal. The majority of the Lords who heard the case of Barnardo v. Ford did not accept the views which had prevailed in the Court of Appeal, and the only Lord who dealt with the question of contempt in the House of Lords was Lord Watson, and I presume, therefore, that the learned Judge in the Transvaal Court referred to his dicta as representing in substance our own law. "A man," said Lord Watson, "who parts with the custody of a child after he is served with the process of the Court, or who evades service in order that he may get rid of such custody, commits a plain contempt for which he is answerable to the Court." The process of the Court here referred to is the writ of habeas corpus, and of course a person who parts with the custody after being served with such a writ, or who, knowing that service will be made, evades it with the mala fide object of getting rid of such custody is guilty either of direct disobedience or of such a degree of dolus malus as would justify his committal. Further on, however, Lord Watson says: "I think it right to add that, in my opinion, no contempt is committed by a person who, lawfully or unlawfully, absolutely gives up the custody and control of a child from the mere apprehension that by retaining it he may become liable to a writ of habeas corpus, and without any notice that such a proceeding will be taken." I presume that the inference made from this passage was that with notice that such a proceeding will be taken the person giving up the custody would be guilty of contempt, but it is not a necessary inference, and it is quite consistent with the whole context that the learned Lord would not have held conduct like that of the respondents to amount to a contempt of Court. Whether this be so or not, the present case must be decided under the law of this colony, and no Roman Dutch law authority or decided case in any South African court was quoted from the Bar, or by the learned Judge in the Transvaal case in support of the conclusions arrived at by him. There was no disobedience of any order of the Court, but, on the contrary, the direction of the Court that the Chinaman must be restored to the jurisdiction was implicitly obeyed. On the return of the rule the learned Judge remarked that he accepted Mr. Jamieson's statement that in this matter he acted bona fide—that is, that there was no malicious desire of injuring the Chinaman and there was no intentional desire to show disrespect to the Court. Notwithstanding this finding, the learned Judge found Mr. Jamieson guilty of contempt of Court, and sentenced him to the payment of a fine. I regret to say that, much as I desire to maintain the uniformity of law and practice in South Africa, I cannot agree with the learned Judge that in a case of a charge of purely constructive contempt of Court, the bona fides of the accused is not a good defence to the charge. No question of bona fides can arise where there is an act of wilful disobedience of an actual order of the Court, or where there is a direct insult to a Judge while acting in his judicial capacity, but where it is attempted to construe an act which, on the face of it, shows no disrespect to the Court, into a contempt of Court, it appears to me that the mala fides of the alleged offender is an essential ingredient of the offence. I quite agree with the learned judge that it is in the interest of the public that every one should have free access to the Courts of Justice, and that the authority of the Court should be fully maintained, but it is equally in the interest of the public that judges themselves should not exceed the powers entrusted to them, by fining or imprisoning people without appeal or review, and without the intervention of a jury or other usual procedure, except in those rare cases in which the due administration of justice absolutely requires such an abnormal mode of procedure. Under the Roman-Dutch system the powers of judges in this respect were always carefully limited, as would clearly appear from the excellent summary by Melius de Villiers in his Treatise on Injuries (p. 166), and, although in the process of time those powers may have been somewhat enlarged in this colony, I am not prepared by one leap to adopt a doctrine of constructive contempt which is neither countenanced by our law nor required by the necessities of the case. If the deportation of the applicants had been found to be illegal, the Court would certainly have directed the respondents to facilitate their return, and if they refused, there would have been a clear case of punishable disobedience. If, on the other hand, in consequence of such order of Court, the applicants were restored, they would have been entitled to full compensation for the injury done to them. In this way the authority of the law would be vindicated, and the respondents made to suffer, not for a supposed contempt of Court, but for the illegality committed by them in deporting the applicants. As it is, however, the Court finds, on the evidence, that the deportation was not illegal, and consequently there will be no order either for the restoration of the applicants or for the punishment of the respondents. There will be no order as to costs.

SMIT V. PHILLIP. { 1906.
Dec. 10th.
" 20th.

Magistrate's Court—Civil jurisdiction—Liquid and illiquid claims in the same action.

In an action in a Magistrate's Court for damages for £20, the defendant filed a counter-claim for £4 10s. and another counterclaim for £20, both being illiquid. The Magistrate, after dismissing the counter-claims, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, gave judgment for the plaintiff and decided that the second counter-claim could not be sustained on the merits.

Held, that a plaintiff may in the same action include liquid and illiquid claims, provided that the total sum of the liquid claims does not exceed the Magistrate's jurisdiction in liquid cases and the total sum of the illiquid claims does not exceed his jurisdiction in illiquid cases.

Held further, that as the total sum of the illiquid counter-claims in this case exceeded £20, the Magistrate would not have had jurisdiction if the defendant had been the original plaintiff.

Held further, that it would have been competent for the Magistrate to allow the defendant to elect to proceed on one of the counter-claims, and that as he had given a decision on the second counterclaim after dismissing both counter-claims and without hearing the defendant's evidence thereon, the case should be remitted for the purpose of a decision, after due evidence, on the second counter-claim.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Prince Albert in an action for damages brought against the appellant by respondent.

Respondent had sued appellant in the Court for below for £20 damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the defendant's failure to supply plaintiff with water for domestic purposes, though repeatedly requested so to do by the plaintiff, on the Market-square, Gilletville, in the division of Prince Albert. Defendant in reconvention claimed £4 10s., charges for water alleged to have been supplied, and also claimed £20 damages by reason of the defendant in reconvention having sunk a cess-pool on the ground. At the hearing, exception was taken by defendant to the summons on the ground that it was vague, by reason of no copy of the conditions of sale on which the alleged claim was based having been served with the summons and supplied to the defendant. A further exception was taken by the defendant that the matter was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction, in that future rights were involved.

The Magistrate had found for plaintiff for £2 damages and costs. He refused to hear either of the counter-claims, and said that there was in point of fact only one claim for £24 10s., and that it had been collusively split into two claims in order to bring the matter within the jurisdiction of the Court. As to the exceptions raised by defendant, he overruled the first since the section of the conditions of sale defendant was alleged to have failed in was set forth in the summons. The second exception was, he held, entirely without ground. The alleged breach by the plaintiff of the 18th section of the conditions was proved at the trial to have been bogus. The 12th section of the conditions made it compulsory upon the defendant to lay water for domestic purposes on the Market-square. This he had failed to do.

Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for appellant. Dr. Greer for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the Magistrate was wrong in upholding plaintiff's exception, as it was clear law that defendant could counter-claim for the two sums of £4 10s. and £20 in one summons. In support, he cited the cases of Van der Heever v. Van Rooyen (11 J., 51), Dalc v. Windship (9 J., 509), and Joffe v. Fraser (T.S.C., 1903, p. 104). The Magistrate could not dismiss both counter-claims. He had to try at least one of them. The case should be remitted to the Magistrate to try the counter-claims on their merits.

Dr. Greer said that with regard to the Transvaal case cited, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate differed in the Transvaal from what it was here. In the case of Dalc v. Windship, the counter-claims both arose out of the same cause of action, but here the counter-claims arose from different causes. He cited Joubert and Jones's Book on the Resident Magistrates' Court Act (p. 24).

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (December 20th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate in an action for £20 damages, alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's failure to furnish a supply of water in the Market-square of Gilletville, to which the plaintiff, as an erf-holder, claims to be entitled under certain conditions of sale. Two exceptions were taken to the summons, but they were overruled, and there is no appeal against this part of the judgment. The defendant filed a counter-claim for £4 10s. for water rates, alleged to be due to him under the conditions of sale, and also a counter-claim for £20 as and for damages alleged to have been sustained by the defendant by reason of the plaintiff having sunk a cesspool on his erf in contravention of one of the conditions of sale. The plaintiff excepted to the counter-claim as being beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and the Magistrate allowed the exception. Against this judgment the defendant has appealed. In support of the appeal the defendant's counsel has mainly relied upon the decision of this Court in Van der Heever v. Van Rooyen (11 S.C.C., 51), the contention being that the effect of that decision would be to allow the defendant if he had been the plaintiff to join in the same action two separate demands, even if they exceed the sum of £20, provided only that there has been no improper splitting of claims. I have read and re-read the judgment in that case, and I confess I am unable to follow the reasoning which leads to such a conclusion. The summons in that case was on a promissory note for £174, in respect of which the Magistrate would have jurisdiction, but inasmuch as there was a further disputed account claimed by the plaintiff, but not in that summons, the defendant objected that there had been an improper splitting of claims. The Court held on appeal that as the two claims were based on different causes of action there was no objection to the plaintiff proceeding separately on each. In the course of my judgment I said: "No Court would allow a plaintiff his costs in two actions if he could have the disputes settled in one action, and the Supreme Court has sometimes exercised the power of compelling a plaintiff to amalgamate different suits against the same defendants, although arising out of different causes of action. It does not follow that the bringing of different suits in a Magistrate's Court against the same defendant in respect of separate causes of action can be objected to on the ground of want of jurisdiction." My language may perhaps have been somewhat too general in its terms, but I certainly did not mean to express the opinion that a plaintiff can, in a Magistrate's Court, include in one and the same action two or more liquid claims, which, taken together, would exceed £250 or two or more illiquid claims, other than for the price of goods sold and delivered, which, taken together, would exceed £20. Under the Magistrates' Courts' Acts these Courts have civil jurisdiction in three classes of cases, viz., in cases founded on liquid documents, in which the sum demanded does not exceed £250, in illiquid cases in which the debt or damages demanded does not exceed £20 (with an exception in the case of claims for the price of goods sold, where the limit is £100), and in cases of ejectment. There can be no objection to cases falling under these three classes being included in the same action, provided only that in none of these classes the jurisdiction be exceeded. Let me illustrate my meaning by a few examples. A is the holder of two overdue promissory notes made by B for £125, he has also a claim for £50 against B for goods sold, a claim for £30 for damages sustained, and a claim for ejectment. There is no objection to A suing B in the same action for the amount of the promissory notes, for the price of the goods, and for ejectment, but if A were to include in the action the claim for damages, the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction, because in illiquid cases, except for the recovery of the price of goods, the jurisdiction is limited to £20. In the case of Falconer v. Behr and Co. (11 S.C.C. 48), it was held that a seller of goods is not entitled to include a percentage chargeable against the defendant for collection in an action for the price of the goods, if the amount demanded exceeds £20. The reason for this decision is obvious. The jurisdiction of Magistrates' Courts in illiquid cases is limited to £20, and a plaintiff cannot take advantage of the circumstance that he is suing for the price of goods by adding another illiquid claim, forming no part of the price of goods, and thus increasing his claim in a case which is not wholly for the price of goods to over £20. It must be observed that no exception was taken in that case before the Magistrate to his jurisdiction. It was only on appeal that the objection was raised, and as the Court could not affirm a judgment in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, the only course left was, in accordance with previous decisions, to affirm the judgment to the extent of the jurisdiction. As to the sum in excess of the jurisdiction, the Court gave absolution from the instance, so as to enable the plaintiff to proceed afresh for that amount. The case is certainly no authority for the view—as is suggested in Sir H. Juta's Selection of Leading Cases (p. 243)—that an exception to his jurisdiction could not have been validly taken before the Magistrate. All the case decides is that, as no such exception was taken, the Supreme Court would not set aside the judgment altogether, but, as the two claims together exceeded the jurisdiction in illiquid cases, the Court would affirm the judgment to the extent of the jurisdiction, and give absolution for the balance. It would have been different if the additional claim had also been for the price of goods, for then the Magistrate would have had jurisdiction up to £100. In the case of Joffe v. Fraser (T.S.C. for 1903, 104), Mr. Justice Solomon correctly pointed out the distinction between that case and the case of Falconer v. Behr. In the Transvaal case several claims had been joined in the same action in a Magistrate's Court, but the liquid claims, taken together, did not exceed the jurisdiction in liquid cases, nor did the illiquid claims, taken together, exceed the jurisdiction in illiquid cases, and it was held on appeal that the Court below had properly overruled an exception to its jurisdiction. In the present case both the counter-claims are illiquid, and as the total sum claimed is in excess of £20, the Magistrate would have had no jurisdiction to entertain them both if the defendant had been the original plaintiff.

Different considerations, however, arise where a defendant, having been brought into court, seeks to set up counter-claims to the plaintiff's demand. As defendant, he may make an unliquidated demand in excess of £20, in case the plaintiff's action, being for the price of goods sold or on a liquid document, is in excess of that sum. Where the plaintiff's claim is for not more than £20, the defendant cannot himself make an unliquidated claim for more; but if he does so upon different causes of action, the practice has been not to dismiss his claims altogether, but to allow him to proceed upon one or other of them. Thus, in the case of Dale v. Winship (9 S.C.C., 509), the defendant being sued for rent, filed a counterclaim for £20, and afterwards seems to have stated in his plea that he was claiming a further sum of £100 as damages. On the ground that these counterclaims existed, the Magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction, but as both of them were for unliquidated demands, he was not precluded from hearing the plaintiff's case. There is, however, a degree of inconvenience, if not of injustice, in giving judgment for the plaintiff, and ignoring altogether a defendant's claim which is within the jurisdiction, even if it be unliquidated. Accordingly, as the defendant elected to proceed on the first counterclaim, the Court remitted the case to the Magistrate with the direction that he should try the claim in convention as well as the first counterclaim. In the present case, although the Magistrate gave no choice to the defendant to proceed with one or the other counterclaim and dismissed both of them, he proceeded to take evidence on the second counterclaim, and decided that it was a bogus claim. This was most unfair to the defendant, who was precluded from giving evidence on the counter-claims because they had been dismissed before he gave his evidence. The only course therefore for this Court will be to remit the case to the Court below, with a direction to the Court to try the counter-claim for £20, and hear the evidence in support thereof. The question as to costs in this Court, and as to all the costs in the Court below, is also remitted to the Court below.

Hopley, J.: I have had an opportunity of seeing the Chief Justice's judgment, and I concur.

DE VILLIERS V. MOLLENDORF.

Acknowledgment of debt—Promissory note—Exception—Misdescription.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court for £37, said to be owing "by virtue of a certain acknowledgment of debt or promise to pay." The document put in was, in effect, a promissory note, and the exception was taken that "the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, as the document had not been described in the summons to be a promissory note."

Held on appeal, that the description in the summons was sufficient and that there was no valid ground for the exception.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Prince Albert in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover a sum of £37, with interest.

The summons called upon defendant in the Court below to show cause why he should not pay plaintiff £37, with interest from the 17th January, 1903, which the said plaintiff complained that defendant owed upon and by virtue of certain acknowledgment of debt or promise to pay, signed by the defendant on the 17th January, 1903, for the said sum, of which document the plaintiff was the legal holder. Defendant excepted to the summons that, firstly, the promissory note had not been stamped as by law required, and, secondly, that the action was wrongfully brought, the document sued upon being a promissory note and not, as stated, an acknowledgment of debt, or promissory note. The second exception was sustained with costs, the Magistrate holding that the plaintiff had sued upon a promissory note and that the action should have been founded upon a promissory note, and not an acknowledgment of debt, or promise to pay.

Dr. Greer was for appellant, D. D. de Villiers; Mr. Sutton was for respondent, J. W. Mollendorf.

Mr. Sutton submitted that the exception was good, seeing that the plaintiff had not called the document by its right name, and that he had not applied for an amendment to the summons. He also contended that the document should have been stamped at the time when the note was made, and that it was not sufficient that it should be stamped subsequently. Plaintiff had made a mistake in his summons, and if he wanted to proceed with his action he must proceed anew.

Without calling upon Dr. Greer, De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the court below for the sum of £37, which he complained was owing to him upon and by virtue of a certain acknowledgment of debt or promise to pay, signed by the said defendant to the said plaintiff at, etc. The document was put in, and it certainly is a promissory note. There is a promise to pay on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff, and if the Magistrate had based his judgment upon the fact that this note was not stamped—well, different considerations would have arisen. But the Magistrate upheld the exception, not that it was not stamped, but the exception that it was a promissory note, and, therefore, the plaintiff cannot sue, because he had stated in the summons that it was an acknowledgment of debt or promise to pay. It is certainly an acknowledgment of debt, and because the summons fails to state that it is also a promissory note, therefore the plaintiff was found not entitled to recover the amount due to him. As to the question of the stamp, that is a different question. It would probably require a stamp, and it would not be admitted as evidence unless it were stamped, but it had a stamp placed upon it at the time when it was produced, and it seems to have been admitted as evidence. The whole argument proceeded on the assumption that the document which was before the Court had been duly admitted as evidence. I think this exception, which is really only a quibble, ought not to have been allowed, and the Court will allow the appeal and enter judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs in this court and the court below.

Mr. Sutton applied for the case to be remitted to the Magistrate, to be determined on the merits. He said that his client had not pleaded to the claim, and it was possible that he had a good defence.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems a pity that there should be further expense, but I see there has been no plea. Under these circumstances, I think it is better to remit the case. The appeal will be allowed, with costs, in this court and the court below, and the case will be remitted to the court below to be tried on the merits.

Lease—Transfer of property—
Interdict.

The applicant, who stated that he had hired certain property from the respondent at £1 per annum for 20 years, applied for an interdict to restrain the transfer of the property to a purchaser who was not a party to the application.

Held, that as there was no proof of a refusal on the part of the purchaser to recognise the lease, and as the applicant might have secured himself by a registration of the lease in the Deeds Office, there was no ground for the application.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Maurice S.

Lipschitz and Adolf Toooh, trading as Lipschitz and Toooh, for an interdict restraining the respondent Sarah Samson, otherwise Sarah Salomon, from passing transfer of certain land at Dyzeidorp, division of Oudtshoorn, pending result of an action to be brought by petitioners to have a certain lease between the parties established. Petitioners alleged that the respondent had agreed to lease the land to them for a period of 20 years at £1 per annum, upon payment of £20 down, and that a collusive arrangement had been entered into between respondent and one Mendel Sapiero to defeat the just rights of the applicants, and escape the respondent's contractual obligations to them, the intention being to give transfer to the said Sapiero.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You could bring your action against Sapiero to recognise your lease.]

Mr. Benjamin: The peculiar position is that the lease has not been executed; it had only reached the stage of being agreed upon.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did the purchaser (Sapiero) know of your right of lease?]

Mr. Benjamin: We say that there was collusion between him and the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court is not inclined to grant this order. If the applicant in this suit and the purchaser are in collusion in the matter, then the applicant would have a remedy against them hereafter. But, according to the applicant's own statement, he has made an agreement of lease for the payment of £1 per annum for twenty years for this property at Dyzeidorp, and he now seeks to restrain the respondent from transferring the property to the purchaser. It does not appear that the purchaser will refuse to recognise the lease; it is quite possible that he will, and if he should recognise the lease, then there is no ground of complaint. If he refuse to recognise the lease, then it is quite clear that he should be made a party to the action. In any case, a lease of 20 years ought to have been registered in the Deeds Office. No order will be made upon the application.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte BENNING. } 1906.
 } Dec. 10th.

Mr. Uppington moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining the sale of certain furniture in the estate of the late Augusta Julia Chalmers, at premises in Military-road, Tamboer's Kloof, or removal of same from petitioner's premises, until his claim for rent has been satisfied. Petitioner said that the furniture was advertised for sale by public auction to-morrow (Tuesday). He had a claim for £71 rent. The premises had been occupied by Mrs. Chalmers until her death recently, and rent was owing for November, 1904, to April, 1905, at £7 10s. per month, and for October, 1906, to December, 1906, at £6 10s. per month, and also for January, 1907, in lieu of notice. Petitioner had demanded payment from the executor testamentary, but without success. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that his client would be satisfied if a sufficient sum were interdicted in the hands of the auctioneers to meet his claim.

Rule nisi granted, to serve as an interim interdict, restraining Messrs. Gliddon and Co., auctioneers, from parting with an amount of £100, or any less amount realised by the sale of the said furniture, pending action to be brought forthwith for the recovery of the rent and costs, rule returnable on the 1st February, 1907, and to be served on the said auctioneers and the said executor.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

Ex parte THE CASTLE WINE & BRANDY CO. { 1906.
AND BRANDY CO. { Dec. 11th.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of the Castle Wine and Brandy Co., for an interdict restraining one John Marsh from disposing of or parting with certain property at Sterkstroom, pending an action to be brought by petitioners for recovery of a debt of £72. It was alleged in the petition that Marsh, who had lately carried on business at the Royal Hotel, Sterkstroom, had gone away, and that his whereabouts were unknown. His power of attorney was held by one Lorie, of Sterkstroom. Certain of the stock had been removed to the railway station. Marsh had money standing to his credit at the Standard Bank, Sterkstroom, and he was the proprietor of an erf.

Rule granted calling upon respondent to show cause on the 12th January why an interdict should not be granted as prayed, rule to operate as an interim interdict, and to be served on the Standard Bank, Sterkstroom, on Lorie, who holds respondent's power of attorney, the stationmaster at Sterkstroom, and the Registrar of Deeds, with leave to telegraph the order, and leave reserved to respondent to anticipate the return day and apply for the discharge of the order.

HOMAN V. BARKLY EAST MUNICIPALITY.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Barkly East in an action brought against appellant by the respondent municipality to recover a sum of £5 8s. 4d. as arrear rates in respect of an erf which he had occupied during 1905.

Mr. Roux was for appellant, William Homan, sanitary inspector; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondents.

The Magistrate had given judgment as prayed for the plaintiffs, with costs.

Mr. Roux said that any agreement made between the landlord and tenant as to the payment of rates had nothing to do with the municipality. According to the Act 45 of 1882, section 135, the defendant could not now be liable for these rates. The Town Clerk said that the rate became due on the 9th July, 1905. The Act said that within one month after the demand had been made the municipality must recover from any occupier liable to pay. His submission was that if the municipality wanted to recover they should have taken steps within one month from the 5th May, when they gave notice of demand to defendant. The plaintiffs only took out their summons on the 16th August, considerably over a month—therefore, after the date of demand. The section must be strictly construed, and plaintiffs were not, after the lapse of more than one month after demand had been made, entitled to sue the occupier for the rate.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not necessary to hear Mr. Bisset. I quite agree with the learned counsel for the appellant that the fact of the tenant having agreed with the landlord to pay the rates has nothing to do with the decision of this case. But the important question is whether, under the 135th section, the defendant was liable for the payment of rates. It is true that he is only the occupier, and, therefore, he cannot be held liable unless the provisions of the 135th section have been complied with. Well, have they been complied with? The section says that when the owner of immovable property has been rated, and the rate remains unpaid for three months, the Council, through their collector, may at any time within twelve months after the making of the rate demand the amount of such rate from the occupier for the time being, and on non-payment thereof, may, after one month from the date of such demand, recover the same in like manner as rates may be recovered from any occupier liable to be rated. The dates given by counsel for the defendant are these: The rate was made payable on the 9th July, 1905; demand was made on the 5th May, 1906, and the summons was issued on the 16th August, 1906. Therefore, three months elapsed after the demand had been made. The contention is that the action ought to have been brought within one month after the demand had been made, but that is not what the Act says, but "on non-payment thereof after one month from the date of such demand." The Legislature required that there should be the expiration of one month after the demand, and at any time after that date the action may be brought. It makes no difference whether the action were brought three months after the demand. There is a strict compliance with the terms of the 135th section, and upon that ground I am of opinion that the appellant must fail. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

HALL V. MASEA.

Injury by bull—Culpa—Damages

One of the plaintiff's oxen, which were drawing a wagon on a public road, was gored by a full-grown bull belonging to the defendant, which had been allowed to wander abroad without a herd.

Held, that as a full-grown bull is ordinarily an animal with vicious propensities, there was such a degree of culpa on the part of the defendant as to render him liable in damages.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Mount Fletcher in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £13 damages, in respect of an ox alleged to have been gored and destroyed by defendant's bull.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said it was admitted that the defendant's bull gored the ox. Knowing as he did the part of the road where this was alleged to have occurred, it was impossible for the bull to turn or get out of the road when met by the plaintiff's wagon and oxen. He believed the defendant's witnesses when they said that the bull was cornered by the ox. There would be absolution from the instance.

Mr. Watermeyer was for appellant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. Watermeyer submitted that a bull was an animal which must be kept in by the owner, and if it escaped and did damage, then the owner was liable.

Should the Court be against him on that point, he submitted that there was ample evidence of negligence in this case. The bull was a trespasser. The leading case was Parker v. Reed (14 C.T.R., 720), in which one horse had inflicted injuries upon another while standing outside a farrier's shop. Counsel also cited Beattie v. Donnelly (1876, Buchanan, 57), Spires v. Scheepers (3 E.D.C., 173), Le Roux v. Fick (1879, Buchanan, 29), but he relied more particularly upon Graham v. Viljoen (1878, Buchanan, 127), and submitted that if a dog were held to be an animal which must be kept in at the owner's peril, as in that case decided, much more so was it the case in regard to a bull. A bull was a much more dangerous animal than a dog, and much more likely to inflict damage and injury. A bull, he contended, was clearly ferae naturae. The bull in this case was a trespasser on the public road, and an element of culpa attached to the owner. Addison on Law of Torts (5th Ed., 110) was quoted. There was evidence on the record that defendant was negligent in allowing the bull to be roaming about without a herd on what was admitted to be a dangerous road.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What became of the carcass?]

Mr. Watermeyer: The plaintiff is a transport rider, and I understand that he had to leave the carcass behind.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there any evidence of his giving notice to defendant that the carcass was there for him to take possession of?]

Mr. Watermeyer said he could find no evidence on that point on the record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the ox were worth £13, the meat must have been worth something. The question is, has plaintiff done anything to minimise the damage?]

Mr. Watermeyer said it appeared from the record that plaintiff's driver made efforts to find a herd and ascertain who was the owner of the bull. Appellant, he contended, was at least entitled to have the judgment of absolution from the instance set aside.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is to be regretted that there has been no appearance on behalf of the defendant on appeal. I am bound to say, upon the evidence, after hearing the reasons of the Magistrate read, that I find it impossible to support this decision. A full-grown bull is ordinarily an animal with vicious propensities, and if the owner allows it to wander abroad and injure the cattle of others on a public road there is such a degree of culpa on his part as to render him liable for damages. It appears that the plaintiff's wagon was passing peacefully and lawfully along the road, and, whilst so passing, this bull, which had not trespassed upon the road, but had come upon the road where it might lawfully go, this bull there gored one of the oxen in the wagon. It is well known that a full-grown bull, however apparently tame it might be, has times of excitement, when it becomes dangerous to other animals. The bull here seems to have been annoyed on being driven, as it were, into a corner, and then in his annoyance he seems to have gored one of the plaintiff's oxen. The Magistrate apparently must have held that there was some negligence on the part of the defendant, but then he said that there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, inasmuch as the driver of the wagon did not drive away the bull. But it was all done in a moment. The driver could not have known that the bull would take it into his head to gore the ox, and there was no duty on the driver to drive away bulls on the road, and I consider that the Magistrate was quite wrong in holding that there was negligence on the part of the driver of the plaintiff's wagon in not driving away the bull. It is not everyone who would venture to drive away a bull from a road, and there certainly was no duty on the driver so to do. Anyhow, I consider that the Magistrate erred in his judgment, and that judgment ought to have been given for the plaintiff for the amount of damages which he has actually sustained. The plaintiff says that the ox is worth £13, but there is no evidence as to what was done with the carcase of that ox. It surely had some value. It is quite consistent with the evidence that the carcase may have been removed by the plaintiff, and that he might have eaten the meat, and in that case there ought certainly to be a deduction from the amount of damages to be awarded to the plaintiff. He cannot have his cake and eat it, and he should certainly not have the full £13. I consider that it would not be advisable to have any further expense in sending the matter back, and I think a deduction of £3 would be a fair deduction, and the appeal is, therefore, allowed, and judgment entered in the sum of £10, with costs in this court and the court below.

Bills of Exchange Act (19 of 1893) — Promissory note — Presentment at place of payment — Liability of maker on non-presentment.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court as maker of a promissory note. The defendant was in default;

but as the note had not been presented at the place of payment at the time when it fell due, judgment was given for the defendant

Held on appeal, that as there was no averment by the defendant that the note would, if presented at the due date, have been paid; it was competent for the plaintiff at any time after the due date to present the note for payment, and the Court accordingly altered the judgment into one of absolution from the instance, so as to give the plaintiff an opportunity of presenting the note for payment before again suing the defendant thereon.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of George, in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £25 ls. 11d, with interest, upon an overdue promissory note, and £1 2s., balance of account for forage supplied.

The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff for £1 2s., and held that the defendant was not liable on the promissory note sued upon. He said it was the duty of the plaintiff, in order to render the defendant liable, to present the note at the place where it was made payable within a reasonable time, whereas 16 months had lapsed since the note was due, and it had not been presented at the place where it was payable. The note was invalid in consequence of plaintiff's own negligence.

Mr. M. Bisset was for appellant, who is a shopkeeper at Klipdrift; there was no appearance for respondent, Johannes Zwiegelaar.

Mr. Bisset submitted that the Magistrate, on being applied to for a postponement to enable due presentation of the note to be made at the bank, should have allowed postponement, directing plaintiff to pay the costs of the day. There would have been no prejudice to the defendant in allowing the postponement since he did not appear, although he had been personally served. The Magistrate refused the application on a wrong ground. The Magistrate held that the note was invalid because it had not been presented within a reasonable time, sixteen months having elapsed. Counsel submitted that the Magistrate had erred. In Reitz v. Kork (1 Meuzies, 38) a promissory note was presented four years after the due date, and judgment was given upon it. As further authority, he cited Villiers v.

De Kock (2 Menzies, 285), and Oriental Bank v. Shaw and Honey (1 E.D.C., 187). The Magistrate, he submitted, ought at any rate, when refusing a postponement, to have given judgment of absolution to enable plaintiff to bring a fresh action.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the defendant did not appear in the Court below, but allowed the case to go by default. Accordingly, the defence was not set up at all that the defendant had funds at the bank on the day on which the note fell due, and the proof of presentation was not of much importance. At the same time, the law had to be complied with, which provides that where a note is in the body of it made payable at a particular place it must be presented for payment at that place in order to render the maker liable. Such is the clear provision of the 86th section of Act 19 of 1893, and the question is, whether the maker is discharged if the presentment is made at the due date. In the case, for instance, of Oriental Bank v. Shaw (1 E.D.C., 187), it was held that when there is no allegation that the maker of a promissory note had funds at the place of payment specified in the note, it is no defence or provision that the notarial protest showed that the note had been presented at the place named and dishonoured only after summons was issued. I am not prepared to hold that the Act of 1893 was intended to alter the practice in this respect. Before the passing of the Act presentment at the place of payment was required before the maker could be sued; but, as the sole object of the requirement was to make it clear that the note would have been dishonoured if it had been duly presented, the maker could not rely upon the non-presentment if he did not aver that there were funds at the place of payment to meet the note if presented on the day when it fell due. In the present case, as I have observed, there was no defence to the action; and yet the Magistrate seems to have given judgment for the defendant. The juster course, however, would have been to give absolution from the instance. This course would have enabled the plaintiff to present the note at the place of payment, and if upon such presentment, it appeared that the defendant had no funds there at the time when the note fell due, the plaintiff could have proceeded afresh. The Court will now amend the judgment by altering it into one of absolution from the instance. As to the costs of appeal, I do not consider it equitable that they should be borne by the defendant. He raised no objections in the Court below, nor did he defend the Magistrate's judgment on appeal, and the plaintiff should pay the costs occasioned by his omission to cause the note to be presented at the place of payment before suing thereon.

Pledge — Hire-purchase — Dominium—Delivery—Possession.

The plaintiff delivered a cart to the first defendant on the hire-purchase system; the agreement being that the price should be payable in instalments and that the cart should become the property of the first defendant on payment of the last instalment. Before all the instalments had been paid, the first defendant, with the consent of the plaintiff, delivered the cart to S., and a year afterwards the plaintiff induced the first defendant to substitute another cart, belonging to the first defendant, for the first. The second cart was delivered to the plaintiff, and by him re-delivered to the first defendant. Thereafter the first defendant pledged this cart to the second defendant, who had no knowledge of the previous dealing with the plaintiff. The evidence showed that the dealing between the plaintiff and the first defendant in regard to the second cart was in the nature of a pledge rather than a sale.

Held, that the plaintiff could not, after parting with the possession, claim re-delivery from the second, who was in possession.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Hopefield in an action brought by respondent against appellant and another in respect of restoration of a certain Scotch cart, or payment of the balance of the purchase-price (£8 10s.).

Plaintiff, in the court below, in his summons, complained "that the first-named defendant, Heydenrych, the original purchaser, held from him under the hire-purchase system a certain Scotch cart, of the value of £23, as per contract attached, marked "a," which said cart was subsequently substituted by a second Scotch cart, with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, as per contract attached marked "b," which second cart the first-named defendant unlawfully, unjustly, and fraudulently, and without the knowledge and against the will of the plaintiff, sold to the second defendant (Lange) during the month of March last, or thereabouts, which said cart the second-named defendant refused to restore to the plaintiff, who was still the legal owner thereof, in terms of the above-mentioned contracts hereunto annexed." Plaintiff prayed, as against the second defendant, that he be adjudged to restore to him the said cart, or, in the alternative, against both defendants jointly and severally, one paying the other to be absolved, to pay him the value of the cart, £23, less £14 10s., already paid on account of capital and interest, together with interest from the 1st February, 1901.

The judgment of the Magistrate was for plaintiff, with costs.

Mr. McGregor was for appellant, Leopold Lange, Sen.; Mr. Van Zyl was for respondent.

Mr. Van Zyl submitted that this was not a case in which delivery of the second cart was necessary. Counsel cited Mills and Sons v. Benjamin's Trustees (1876, Buchanan, 115) on the doctrine of constitutum possessorium. If the case were decided on the documents merely—and he submitted that it should be decided upon the documents—from contract "b" it was clear that an exchange was effected, that Abel and Heydenrych agreed to substitute the old Scotch cart for the original Scotch cart, and that Heydenrych then agreed in future to hold this old Scotch cart under the same conditions, viz., as Abel's property, until the balance of £8 10s. was paid.

Mr. McGregor said that this was different from the ordinary cases. The facts must be borne in mind in considering this case. The second cart was not legally the same cart as that which was acquired by Heydenrych on the hire purchase system. The old cart was practically made into a new one, the repairs and alterations costing about £18, whereas a new cart could have been bought for £24. Counsel went on to submit that the second agreement ("b") showed that credit was given, and that it was not a case of hire purchase. Abel allowed Heydenrych to sell this cart to one Sadie, and it was not until twelve months afterwards that he told Heydenrych to bring him another cart for the £8 10s. Furthermore, he submitted that no consideration was given for the second agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There was consideration in this sense, that it was given as security, so that the plaintiff would not sue Heydenrych.]

Mr. McGregor admitted that that was so.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 20th).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it appeared that the plaintiff, who was the owner of a Scotch cart, made an agreement with the first defendant that on payment of £23 there should be a sale of the cart to the defendant, and that in the meantime the price might be paid in instalments. Before all the instalments had been paid, the first defendant, with the consent of the plaintiff, sold the cart to one Sadie. About a year afterwards the first defendant bought another cart, and the plaintiff then required that this cart should be substituted for the first cart as security for the instalment still due. The first defendant consented to this course, and, according to the plaintiff's evidence, he (the plaintiff) was in possession of the cart for two days before it was restored to the first defendant's possession. Thereafter, the second defendant paid some debts owing by the first defendant to Stephan, and it was arranged between the two defendants that certain property, including the second cart, now in question, should be sold to the second defendant, but should, after such sale, remain in the possession of the first defendant. For some reason, however, the cart seems to have been delivered by the first to the second defendant, and thereupon an action was brought in the Magistrate's Court of Hopetown against both defendants to recover the cart or its value. The Magistrate held that the same conditions attached to the second as to the first cart, and that, consequently, as the plaintiff had not lost the ownership, he was entitled to recover the cart from the second defendant.

I cannot agree with the Magistrate that the second cart stands on the same footing as the first. The plaintiff had permitted the first defendant to sell the first cart. When he afterwards found that the first defendant had another cart, he naturally wished to have it as a continuing security for the instalment still owing, but he never became the owner of the second cart, as he had been of the first. The transaction that ensued was no more than a pledge. The first defendant pledged the cart, and allowed the plaintiff to have possession for two days, but the security was lost when the plaintiff redelivered the cart to the first defendant. It is true that the transaction between the two defendants may also have been no more than a pledge, but the difference is that when the plaintiff sought to recover the cart the second defendant was in actual possession. His pledge, if such it was, had been made good by delivery, and in the absence of proof of knowledge on the part of the second defendant of the plaintiff's prior claim, the second defendant cannot be deprived of his possession. The doctrine of constitutum possessorium has been relied upon as justifying the view that the first defendant really possessed the cart on behalf of the plaintiff, but on this point I would only refer to the views expressed in the case of Payn v. Yates (9 S.C., 497). The evidence in this case satisfies me that no more than a pledge was effected in favour of the plaintiff. When he parted with the second cart he enabled the first defendant to pledge it to another creditor, and without proof of such knowledge on the part of such creditor of the plaintiff's prior claim, the plaintiff has no right to claim a restoration of the cart. The appeal of the second defendant will, therefore, be allowed, and judgment for him entered, with costs in this Court in the Court below. The judgment against the first defendant will, of course, remain, but it will not be a judgment for the restoration of the cart, but for £8 10s., being the instalment owing to the plaintiff, with costs in the Magistrate's Court.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton. Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

COLLINS V. KING. { 1906.
{ Dec. 11th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Piquetberg in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover the amount of his fees for preparing plan and supervising the erection of a certain residence on behalf of the respondent.

Appellant alleged that he had been employed to prepare a plan of a house at Piquetberg for defendant, and that he supervised the building operations and granted certificates from time to time. He claimed £19 12s., viz., £5 for the plan and 2 per cent. of the cost (£730) for supervision of the work.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the parties were prominently associated with the A.M.E. Church. Plaintiff's own evidence made it quite clear that he did not intend to charge for his services. If he had expected any remuneration for his services, he was depending solely on the generosity of the defendant. There was no contract between the parties, and the judgment of the Court would be absolution from the instance, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner was for appellant; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that it was clear the defendant had intended to employ an architect. Neither defendant nor his wife, for whom, it was said, the building was erected, could mention any other architect. Plaintiff's plans having been used, and he having supervised the work, he was entitled to a quantum meruit. Payments were made to the builder by defendants on notes of hand given by plaintiff.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the plan had been drawn by Collins in order to oblige his friend Bell, who built the house. He supervised the work also on Bell's behalf. Collins and Bell were intimately associated in Church matters. The notes of hand given by Collins were not signed by Collins as architect. Collins was one of the sureties on behalf of Bell, and it might be that he gave these notes in protection of himself. The question resolved itself into one of credibility, and the Magistrate had believed defendant and his witnesses.

Mr. Gardiner, in reply, said that as to the question of suretyship it was significant that three notes were actually given by plaintiff before the suretyship was signed. Bearing this in mind, in conjunction with the words of the contract, "architect's note of hand," he submitted that appellant was clearly employed by respondent as architect. The Magistrate's error in this case was that he had given no force to the words of the contract, "architect's note of hand." The Court of Appeal was better able to construe a written contract than the Court below. That was the question in this case, not a question of credibility.

Hopley, J.: I think the case had better go back to the Magistrate to inquire into the following points: (1) Why three certificates, if they were certificates of surety merely, were given before the clause of suretyship was added to the agreement; (2) the exact date of the agreement; (3) for how much did the plaintiff give certificates, and why did he cease giving them. The case will be remitted to the Magistrate for further inquiry and evidence on these points.

REX V. BRAFF AND ANOTHER.

Hopley, J., said that two matters had come before him as Judge of the week last week from the Magistrate's Court at Ladismith, in which two sisters called Aletta and Sanna Braff respectively were each charged on a separate indictment, with the theft of a lamb belonging to a Mr. Vosloo. The women said that they picked up these lambs on a farm where they were living with their father, and on which Vosloo had stock running. They said that Vosloo's mark had been put upon them because he had agreed to buy them from these women, but had backed out of the bargain. After a while these lambs were sold to other people. The Magistrate did not believe their explanation, and he found the accused guilty. The part that he (the learned Judge) had to comment upon was the sentence. The accused were each sentenced to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and to pay a fine of 7s. 6d., or in default another fortnight's imprisonment. There was no evidence as to the value of these lambs. The only evidence was that the lambs were sold to the people in whose possession they were found by these women for 6s. Section 2 of Act 7, 1906, authorises the Magistrate, in all cases in which the stolen stock has not been recovered or has been reduced to half its original value, in case the owner does not proceed under Section 8 of Act 35 of 1893 for compensation, to impose on every person convicted of such theft a fine not exceeding the full market value at the time of the theft; and Section 4 provides for imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. In the cases now under review, however, the stock has been recovered. In each of these cases the lamb was found, and it is only for the owner to re-claim his property. The lambs have been recovered, and they had not deteriorated, according to the Magistrate's own finding, by more than half their value. That portion of the sentence must be quashed. For the rest, both the sentences will be confirmed.

LAWRENCE AND CO. AND OTHERS V. KOPELOWITZ AND BERMAN.

Dr. Greer moved for the provisional order of sequestration of the defendants' estate to be made final.

Order granted.

WALKER V. BUTCHINSKY.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BLEIBERG AND CO. AND OTHERS V. GETZ.

Mr. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

Mr. Lewis moved, at a later stage, for the appointment of Edward C. Fitzpatrick as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate, with power to realize the stock and collect outstanding accounts. Defendant had carried on business as a retail draper, and it was to the interests of the creditors that the stock should be offered during the Christmas season, without waiting until the creditors' meeting.

Mr. Fitzpatrick was appointed provisional trustee, with power to sell the stock and collect outstanding.

BATE AND CO. AND ANOTHER V. ROCHESTER BRICK CO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.

Provisional order discharged.

RUST V. LEVI.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Defendant appeared, but did not oppose.

Order granted.

VACUUM OIL CO. V. SANDHAND.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £255 11s. 1d., balance due on a mortgage bond, £12 13s. 3d. interest, and interest on the balance claimed from the 1st November, bond due on notice given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

LOTZ V. BRAAF.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £240, with interest from the 1st September, 1903, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted

DIVINE V. SALIE.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,900, with interest from the 1st July, less £73 10s. 6d. paid, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

OLIVIER V. GOOSEN.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Rand High Court.

Mr. Roux (for defendant) applied for a postponement until next term.

Ordered to stand over until later in the day.

Later on Mr. Roux read an affidavit in support of the application for a postponement to the effect that the defendant claimed to have paid the debt.

Mr. Swift opposed the application, and said that this appeared to be merely a ruse on the part of defendant to gain further time. Defendant had only satisfied a portion of the judgment, and now he had removed out of the jurisdiction of the Rand High Court, and was living at Mafeking.

The case was postponed until January 12, costs to be costs in the cause.

VAN NIEKERK V. LE RICHE.

Mr. Pohl was for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin was for defendant.

This was an application for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes.

The matter was ordered to stand over to enable plaintiff to file replying affidavits.

Later on Mr. Pohl applied for a postponement until the 12th January, and urged that defendant should be ordered to pay the costs of the day.

Mr. Benjamin asked that the case be postponed until the first day of next term. He opposed the application for costs.

Postponed until the 1st February, costs to be costs in the cause.

FEATHERSTONE V. TRUSTEES OF EAST LONDON ANGLING SOCIETY AND PEEL.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence against the first and second defendants upon a mortgage bond for £431 11s. 5d., with interest at 8 per cent. from the 7th July, 1905, and against the third defendant upon a deed of suretyship for £414 3s. 5d., with interest, cession of action being tendered to him (Peel) by plaintiff. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for defendant Peel) said that the claim was on account of non-payment of interest on the bond. Peel had signed simply as surety in solidum, but that did not make him a co-principal debtor, and accordingly, as the principal debtors had not been excused, and as the property which was specially mortgaged had not been executed upon, the plaintiffs could not now get their judgment against him. He applied that the case against Peel be dismissed, with costs. Counsel read an affidavit by E. J. Boyes, of Ruchanan and Boyes, attorneys, Cape Town, who said he found that the trustees for the time being had not yet been excused, and that the said Peel had not renounced the benefits of excussion under the bond, nor did it appear that he was a co-principal debtor. The property had not yet been declared executable.

Mr. Louwrens submitted that the fact that the property hypothecated had not yet been declared executable was not a ground for refusing provisional sentence.

[Hopley, J.: Not so far as the two first defendants are concerned.]

Mr. Louwrens: I am speaking as to Pee'. I submit further that there has been a renunciation of the benefits. Peel is surety in solidum, and I submit that that would cover renunciation of the benefits of excussion.

Hopley, J., said he did not take it that "in solidum" meant anything of the kind. Provisional sentence would be granted as against the trustees in their capacity as such, and the property hypothecated would be declared executable. Judgment would be given for defendant Peel, with costs. As to costs other than Peel's, plaintiffs would have costs against the trustees.

ESTATE COUTTS V. FREDERICK.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £120, with interest from the 24th March, 1884, Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable. He stated that defendant had not been heard of for many years, and he was now being sued by edictal citation, the citation having been published in the "East London Dispatch." No interest had, as a matter of fact, been paid on the bond ever since it was issued.

Hopley, J., said that, of course, the Court could not grant judgment for a greater amount of interest than the capital of the bond. There would be provisional sentence for the amount of the bond and for an amount of interest not exceeding the capital, and property declared executable, with costs.

SEELIGER V. JACOBS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, less £300 realised under sale of the property, together with interest. Judgment was applied for as against the third and fourth defendants only (the sureties), the first and second defendants being insolvent.

Order granted.

FLETCHERS' WHOLESALE V. BASSON.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest from the 1st November, 1904; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BAX V. ABRAHAMS AND CO.

Mr. Pohl was for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin was for defendant.

Mr. Pohl said that affidavits had been filed in another matter, which contained certain statements dealing with this matter.

Hopley, J., said that separate affidavits must be filed relating to the matter before the Court only, and not encumbered by references to other matters.

Mr. Benjamin said that his client had a defence on the merits, but he also repudiated the signature, and counsel, therefore, applied for a day to be fixed for hearing evidence as to the genuineness of the signature.

The Court fixed the second Friday in February for hearing evidence.

STRUBEN V. LOEWENSTOCK.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, less £150 paid on account, with interest, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property and rents to be declared executable.

Order granted.

WILLIAMS V. EIDELBERG.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, from the 1st July, and for £1 11s. 6d. insurance premiums, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property to be declared executable and rents attached.

Order granted.

WHITE RYAN AND CO. AND OTHERS V. ABRAHAMSON.

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WILLIAMS V. SWART.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

CELLIERS V. BADEROEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GORDON MITCHELL AND CO. V. HEIBERG.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant admitted insolvency, but said that he disputed a certain claim.

Order granted.

COSMELLI, MEYER AND CO. V. TAYLOR AND MYLES.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

Mr. Bailey applied for the appointment of J. M. P. Muirhead as provisional trustee pending the election of a trustee.

Mr. Muirhead was appointed provisional trustee, with power to sell the perishables.

VAN BREDA V. BOOYSEN.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st January.

1900, less £4 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Ordered to stand over for proof of service.

Later on Mr. Louwrens produced proof of service, and moved for judgment, and applied for the property hypothecated, and rents accruing, or to accrue to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HARCOMBE AND ANOTHER V. COSAY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £25,000, with interest from the 1st January, 1905, less £64 12s., paid on account of interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant applied for an extension of time.

Hopley, J., said that he must grant an order, but he suggested that the defendant should have an interview with the creditors, and see if they would not be a bit merciful towards her. Judgment would be granted.

HARCOMBE V. GROWAN AND SCHWALBE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from the 1st July, 1905, less £22, paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE NOBLE V. TOMS.

Mr. Palmer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £48 0s. 8d., being amount of interest overdue, and for the rents to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE VAN RYN V. RIFKIN.

Mr. Inghbold moved for provisional sentence for £76 10s., being interest due on a mortgage bond, and for rents to be attached.

Order granted.

JUTA AND CO. V. MARTO, ALIAS MUNRO.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. He stated that defendant had clandestinely left the Colony, and that substituted service had been effected by fixing the summons on the door of the Supreme Court, and publication in the "Gazette."

Order granted.

HIDDINGH V. EXECUTORS OF ESTATE MERRINGTON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant estate as insolvent.

Hopley, J., said that service had only been effected on one of the executors, and that the summonses to both defendants had been left with him. Mr. Hopkirk apparently had not been found. He thought counsel should look into the question of whether this was good service.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

Hopley, J., once more urged attorneys to regularly brief counsel with particulars as to service.

Later on Mr. Gutsche said he was informed that service had been effected upon both the executors.

His Lordship said he found that there were two summonses, and that service had been made upon both defendants.

A final order would be granted.

NORWICH UNION V. REYNOLDS AND OTHERS.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest from January 6, and premiums of insurance, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE DE WET V. DE WET AND ANOTHER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from January 1, 1906, and £4 insurance premium. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ROUX AND OTHERS V. DE LANGE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300.

Defendant confessed judgment.

Order granted.

LIBERMAN AND ANOTHER V. GELB.

Mr. Lewis moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged. Provisional order discharged.

WILSON AND MILLER V. JACKSON.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a Resident Magistrate's Court judgment for £20 4s. 10d., less certain sums paid on account, leaving a balance of £5 7s. 8d. A writ had been issued in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Simon's Town, and a return of nulla bona had been made. Application was made for a certain pension to be declared executable.

Defendant said that in the summons he was described as of Waterloo Green, Wynberg, and late of Muizenberg. He had not removed from Muizenberg, and had not lived at Waterloo Green. The Resident Magistrate of Simon's Town, therefore, had full jurisdiction, and the proceedings in this court were unnecessary.

Mr. Close submitted that in any event the plaintiff was entitled to come into this Court. Plaintiff sought to attach certain pension money becoming due to defendant, and such an order could not be obtained in the Magistrate's Court when the pension was still in the hands of a third party. Summons had actually been issued in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Simon's Town, and then it was found that defendant had gone to Observatory-road.

Defendant said that he had to go temporarily to Observatory-road. He had offered plaintiffs £2 in cash and 10s. per month towards the discharge of the debt. If his pension were attached he should have to surrender his estate, in consideration of the arrangement he had made with his principal creditors.

Mr. Close said his clients had an answer to this.

Hopley, J., advised the plaintiffs to consider the position, and ordered the matter to stand over until to-morrow. He suggested that the parties should meet and see if they could not come to an agreement. If necessary, however, they must have the facts put on affidavit, and have all the expenses of a contest over this wretched debt.

ESTATE WELLS V. ROBERTSON.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st April, 1906, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BAETHAKE V. WOLFAARD.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

THORNE V. WOLFF.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,800, with interest from the 1st January, 1906; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

PICKARD V. KAROW.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, with interest from the 30th September, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

COHEN BROS. V. LEVINE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £85 15s. 11d.

Order granted.

GROENEWALD V. HALL.

Mr. De Waal moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

GUTTOCH AND CO. V. KRESER.

Mr. Bailey moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

SWART V. SWART AND CO.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £398 16s. 2d., with interest, and for commission for collection, at 5 per cent., as stipulated for in the note.

Hopley, J., granted an order as prayed, except as to the claim of £19 8s. 9d. for commission, which he declined to allow.

BENJAMIN V. VISSER.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a dishonoured cheque for £100, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

THORNE V. PINKERS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest from the 31st December, 1905, and £4 12s. premium of insurance, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

TURNER V. TURNER. { 1906.
{ Dec. 12th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order of separation in terms of consent paper. Hopley, J., said that he did not approve of this method of obtaining a judicial separation, but he supposed that as the Court had granted an order in such circumstances before, he should now have to do the same.

Order in terms of consent paper.

LEVIN AND ANOTHER V. GORDON.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to sign judgment against plaintiff (Gordon) for not proceeding with his action within the time stipulated by the 25th Rule of Court.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. DE PAARLSCHIE KUIP MAATSCHAPPIJ.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment under rule 329d for £308 16s. 4d., less £100 paid on account, for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

VAN NOORDEN V. MATTHEWS.

Mr. Payne moved for judgment under rule 329d for £191 11s., proceeds of sale of certain stock sold by defendant on account of plaintiff, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WELT V. HAUMANN.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under rule 329d for £135 12s. 5d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

DE WIT V. VAN GERWE.

Mr. Bailey moved for judgment under rule 329d for £221 16s. 6d., for professional services, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. CHRISTIASEN.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment under rule 329d for £627 10s. 1d., goods sold and moneys disbursed on account of defendant, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

INSOLVENT ESTATE BITTER V. MACKINTOSH.

Mr. Pyemont moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £89 18s., balance of rent due, and in arrear, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

CASCIO V. PRIDEAUX.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £50, money lent and advanced, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

CROWTHER AND ANOTHER V. GILES.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £25 9s. 2d., goods sold and delivered, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

PEDERSEN V. WILKIE.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £18, money lent, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

MAXWELL V. FILLIS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £147 2s. 6d., less £75 paid on account since issue of summons, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs.

STEPHAN V. CADSWELL.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £225, as commission, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

CARTER V. RYDER.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £61, rent collected by defendant as plaintiff's agent, and for an account of rent collected during certain period and debate of same. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that he had authority for an application of this kind under Rule 329d.

Order granted.

DOLD AND VAN BRED A V. KATZ.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £32 8s. 2d., balance of account for professional services and moneys disbursed, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WATSON AND ANOTHER V. FREEMASONS' CLUB, MIDDELBURG.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £241 4s. 2d., balance of account for work and labour done and moneys advanced, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

ESTATE BOSMAN V. KEYZER.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £440, being purchase price of certain share in sale of land, in the district of Stellenbosch, or, alternatively, for cancellation of the sale. Counsel said that service had been made upon defendant by leaving the summons at the Masonic Hotel, Stellenbosch, where he appeared to have been staying for some time.

Hopley, J., read a letter by the defendant's attorney, who said that Kaiser would shortly be returning to this country from England. This matter had not been brought to defendant's notice.

Dr. Greer said that, in face of this letter, he felt that he could not ask for judgment at this stage, and he applied for the case to stand over until the 12th January.

Ordered to stand over sine die.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. VOGES.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £61 8s. 6d., less £20, goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. SWART AND CO.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £1,170 2s. 2d., being balance of amount due by defendants to plaintiffs upon an account rendered of charges for goods sold and delivered to defendants at their special instance and request, from the month of September, 1898, to date, together with interest at the rate of 7½ per cent., as would more fully appear from statements rendered from time to time and from the statement annexed, and for costs of suit.

Hopley, J.: I do not think that judgment should be given for interest brought into an account like this in a bald sort of way, as being a sufficiently liquidated claim to meet the requirements of Rule 329d. If the summons had stated that interest was charged according to agreement between the parties or anything like that, which would have liquidated the claim, it is quite possible that judgment would have been given, although I do not think previous cases have gone so far that it is only necessary to say "and interest at 7½ per cent." That claim does not seem to me to be sufficiently liquidated without any evidence being called. This rule is to facilitate judgment for things that appear on the face of documentary evidence produced to be liquidated without any further evidence. This 7½ per cent. interest might be charged upon an account, but that is a matter that seems to me to require some evidence, some proof, and therefore the plaintiff may take judgment for the amount of the goods sold and the exchange, and in fact everything claimed except the interest, but the interest on both sides of the account must be struck out, and for the amount of balance arrived at judgment will be given. You may still bring your action for interest. Of course, interest a tempore morae will be allowed.

LOTZ V. LOTZ.

This was the return day of a summons calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be declared of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own affairs, and why a curator bonis should not be appointed.

The case presented some peculiar features. Mr. Nicolaas Cornelis van der Hoeven had early in November been appointed provisional curator bonis of Mr. Lotz, another aspirant for the office being Mr. Snyman. The curatorship was evidently a matter of strife still. It was now stated by Mr. Buchanan that Mrs. Lotz did not desire to have Mr. Van der Hoeven appointed curator bonis, while, on the other hand, it was alleged that she was the prey of the last person who made a request to her.

The question arose as to Mr. Buchanan's position in the case, seeing that Mrs. Lotz was the plaintiff in the action, and his lordship said that he would treat Mr. Buchanan as an amicus curiae.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for plaintiff, Mrs. Lotz; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan also appeared for Mrs. Lotz; Mr. De Waal appeared as curator ad litem of the defendant, Jan Coenraed Lotz, of Prince Albert.

Evidence was led by Sir H. Juta.

Dr. Luttig said that Mr. Lotz was 79 years of age, and Mrs. Lotz was about 70 years of age. Mr. Lotz was suffering from senile dementia. His memory had failed, his speech was affected, and he had delusions. Mrs. Lotz was infirm physically, and would not be able to look after her husband. She was not a strong-minded woman, and was easily persuaded. Snyman was living on Mr. Lotz's property, and, as far as witness knew, he was without property. Van der Hoeven was a man of good position in Prince Albert.

Nicolaas C. van der Hoeven, farmer and landed proprietor, said that he was the owner of considerable property, and was executor under the will of Mr. and Mrs. Lotz. Snyman was working two erven on the halves belonging to Mr. Lotz. Mr. De Beer was constantly present when witness had an interview with Mr. and Mrs. Lotz.

Mr. Neethling, Mayor of Prince Albert, also gave evidence.

Sir H. Juta observed that it was a pity his lordship did not hear a libel case which recently came before the Court, and in which some interesting sidelights were thrown upon this matter.

Mr. Buchanan: I think it is a pity, too.

Mr. De Waal, as curator ad litem, reported that Mr. Lotz was not fit to manage his own affairs. He had had two private interviews with Mr. Lotz, but on other occasions De Beer was always there, both when he saw Mr. Lotz and Mrs. Lotz.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you order him out of the room?]

Mr. De Waal: I did, eventually. As regarded the two names mentioned, Mr. De Waal said that Mr. Snyman was not to be compared to Mr. Van der Hoeven as curator bonis. Counsel added that Mrs. Lotz's only fear seemed to be that if Mr. Van der Hoeven were appointed, he would chase away certain tenants, but that idea seemed to have been suggested to her by others.

Mr. Van der Hoeven (recalled) said that if he were appointed, he should consult Mrs. Lotz in anything that he did to the estate.

Mr. Buchanan read affidavits in support of his application for the appointment of Mr. Snyman as curator.

Hopley, J., granted an order that Jan Coenraed Lotz be declared of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, that Nicolaas Cornelis van der Hoeven be appointed curator bonis to the estate of the said J. C. Lotz, with power to manage the joint estate of the said Lotz and his wife, the said N. C. van der Hoeven to give security to the satisfaction of the Master, and to receive such commission as the Master shall allow, costs of the applicant and respondent to come out of the estate. He added that that, of course, would not include the costs of the amicus curiae.

Sir H. Juta said that his learned friend would enjoy the honour of having occupied that position, and he urged that the costs to which he had been put in this matter should not be borne by the estate.

Mr. Buchanan said that he was quite willing to enjoy the honour thrust upon him, but he submitted that the costs of the affidavits should be borne by the estate.

[Hopley, J.: I think the history of the whole case rather seems to me—well, I don't like to say exactly what about these affidavits, but it seems to me there has been a good deal of scheming going on.]

Mr. Buchanan: On both sides, my lord.

Hopley, J., said that the costs of the applicant, respondent, and curator ad litem would come out of the estate, but there would be no order as to the costs, if any, of the amicus curiae.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ILLIQUID ROLL.

FALCONER V. WILLIAMSON. } 1906
} Dec. 13th.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 32nd, for immediate delivery of certain furniture ordered and purchased by plaintiff from defendant, or, alternatively, for a refund of the sum of £100 paid for same. Counsel applied for an amendment of the defendant's name in the summons in accordance with notice given to him by registered letter. Service had been made upon one "Harry Williams," the name given in the summons. The address at which the summons was served was the same as that to which the registered letter had been sent giving notice of application to amend the summons.

Hopley, J., said it would have been better if the letter had been delivered personally into the defendant's hands, and an affidavit had been made to that effect. Application granted and judgment as prayed.

MARAIS V. MARAIS AND KLOPPER.

This was an action to have the first-named defendant, Maria Helena Petronella Marais, declared incapable of managing her own affairs, and curator bonis appointed.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for plaintiff) read affidavits in support of the application, and a report by the curator ad litem.

Order granted declaring the first-named defendant, M. H. P. Marais, of unsound mind, and incapable of managing her own affairs, and appointing Ernest Jacobus Marais and Frans Krige Siebert as curators bonis.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

COOKE V. COOKE. { 1906.
{ Dec. 13th.

Mr. Swift moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel, in answer to the Court, said that plaintiff was residing in England, and her husband was residing in Cape Town.

Hopley, J., said that, as far as he remembered, he granted a rule upon the authority of previous orders made under similar circumstances. He added: Plaintiff had better be very careful if she re-marries in England, because they may prosecute her for bigamy. She gets a divorce here on grounds that would not be sufficient in England. I suppose you must have your order; it is a very good order, so far as this Colony is concerned. Decree of divorce granted, with costs.

BRINK V. BRINK.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Decree granted, with costs.

BICKETTS V. BICKETTS.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of divorce, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. Defendant had been served in Kimberley with the order of the Court. Plaintiff prayed for custody of the minor children.

Decree granted, with costs, plaintiff to have custody of the minor children.

RUMSEY V. RUMSEY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of divorce in default of compliance by defendant in reconvention (the wife), with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. Plaintiff prayed for a declaration that defendant had forfeited all benefits under the ante-nuptial contract.

Decree granted with costs, and defendant declared to have forfeited all benefits under the marriage conferred by the ante-nuptial contract.

KUPKE V. KUPKE.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. Plaintiff also prayed for an order that defendant had forfeited benefits under the marriage.

Decree granted, with costs, and defendant declared to have forfeited any benefits accruing from the marriage.

SHEAR V. SELLEY AND SOKOLICH.

Mr. Roux moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi calling upon respondents to show cause why moneys due to them in the hands of the Colonial Government should not be paid in satisfaction of the judgment obtained by petitioner against respondents, in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Uniondale.

Rule absolute, with costs.

PATERSON AND CO. V. HARTMAN.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a certain rule interdicting respondent from removing furniture and machinery from premises situate at 119, Bree-street, pending an action to be brought by applicants for £106 8s. 1d., rent owing.

Respondent, who appeared in person, said that he only owed about £89, and that petitioners must have been under a misapprehension when they applied to attach the property. The furniture was presented to respondent after the bankruptcy proceedings. The machinery, which was a printing plant, belonged to another party. Patersons themselves had sold the machinery to a third party.

Mr. Sutton applied for a postponement to enable applicants to reply to the respondent's allegations.

On its eventually transpiring that one of the applicants was also in court, his lordship decided to hear evidence at two o'clock to-morrow (Friday), his lordship, however, urging the parties to endeavour to come to a settlement and thus avoid further costs.

Ex parte ESTATE JOSEPH.

Mr. Russell moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent certain minor children in an action to be instituted by Jenny Joseph to determine construction of a will.

Order granted appointing Mr. Benjamin as curator ad litem of the minors, question of costs to stand over.

Ex parte TOWNSEND.

Dr. Rainsford moved for a certain rule nisi, authorising petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights to be made absolute.

Rule absolute, Dr. Rainsford to be counsel, and Mr. C. E. Bradfield attorney to the petitioner.

Ex parte MAREE.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to petitioner, who resides at Aliwal North, to sue her husband, Ignatius J. Maree, in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner stated that her husband deserted her some years ago. Counsel said he was prepared to certify probabilis causa. He asked that the citation be made returnable at the Circuit Court.

Upon counsel certifying probabilis causa, rule granted calling upon respondent to show cause on January 12 why petitioner should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, rule to be served personally on respondent, failing which one publication in the "Volkstem."

Ex parte GROEBELAAR.

Mr. Howes moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Johannes Jacobus Grobbelaar, in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner resides at Graaff-Reinet, and respondent resides in the division of Clanwilliam.

Upon counsel certifying probabilis causa, rule to issue calling upon respondent to show cause on the 12th January, personal service to be effected.

De Villiers, (C.J.), commenting on the fact that applicant did not appear personally, said that there was need for greater strictness in regard to these applications, and that lax practice seemed to be creeping in.

Ex parte ESTATE GIBSON.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on behalf of the executors in the estate Gibson for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property forming part of the Park Estate, Observatory-road. The Registrar of Deeds, in his report, said that the matter was purely one of arrangement between the executors of Wrensch's estate and the petitioners. Counsel said that the authority of the Court was necessary in order to eliminate certain words from the general plan. There was a possibility that Mr. E. J. Sherwood might feel that his rights were affected in connection with certain adjoining ground owned by his wife. Other persons might possibly be interested.

Rule granted calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the 12th January why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, rule to be published once in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte DU PREEZ.

Mr. Pohl moved for leave to petition to mortgage certain property to enable her to stock a wine farm.

Order in terms of master's report.

Ex parte DOUALLIER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to petitioner to raise a loan on mortgage of certain property. The matter had previously been before the Court (16 C.T.R. 1043), and had been ordered to stand over for further information. Counsel now read an affidavit by the petitioner's attorney, who said the petitioner and her husband were in such poor circumstances that they could barely support themselves, and the loan was necessary in order to put the property in repair.

Ordered to stand over until next term pending production of an affidavit by petitioner.

Ex parte ESTATE BOUWER.

Mr. Gutsche moved on behalf of the executors of estate Bouwer for conformation of a sale of certain estate property in Bedford.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE SCHOEMAN.

Mr. Louwrens moved on the petition of the executor of estate Stephanus J. Schoeman, Sen., of Oudtshoorn division, for leave to sue one Henry Nourse, of Johannesburg, by edictal citation, for balance of the purchase price of a certain farm in the division of Colesberg.

Petitioner said that Mr. Nourse had paid a portion of the purchase price, but that there was still a balance of £586 13s. 9d. owing, with interest. He applied for leave to attach certain movables on the farm, and tendered to pass transfer against payment of the balance.

Ordered that the property be attached ad fundandum jurisdictionem, and leave granted to sue Henry Nourse by edictal citation, returnable on January 12, citation to be served on Nourse personally.

WORCESTER MUNICIPALITY V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application upon notice by the Worcester Municipality to the Secretary for Agriculture representing the Colonial Government and the Worcester Agricultural Society, for an interdict restraining the Government issuing a grant in favour of the Agricultural Society of a certain piece of land alleged to be Crown land, or disposing of or alienating any portion of such land or commonage land, save and except, subject to, in terms of, and in conformity with the requirements of sections 160-163, inclusive, of the Municipal Act, No. 45, of 1882.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.) was for applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the Colonial Government; Mr. Burton was for the Worcester Agricultural Society.

Mr. Schreiner said that the whole question of the right of the Worcester Municipality to the commonage of the municipality was incidentally involved in this application. It was a matter of what, one might say, first-rate importance, with regard to the rights of municipalities in regard to commonage lands. The land was admitted throughout the proceedings to be commonage, and the Government had acted on the basis, putting it shortly, that, notwithstanding that this was commonage land, they were entitled under the Crown Lands Disposal Act, with the authority of Parliament, and without reference to the municipality, to make a grant of a piece of that land to the Worcester Agricultural Society. Counsel said that the Government appeared to have acted with what he might call a "high hand." He expressed the opinion that the matter was one that could be decided on motion without the necessity of going to trial, as all the facts which were necessary to decide the case had been set forth on affidavit.

Mr. Searle said that he did not think the matter could be disposed of by the Court on affidavit.

Mr. Burton, speaking as counsel for the Agricultural Society, said that he was of a like opinion, but, a moment later, he informed the Court that his clients thought the matter could be disposed of on affidavit.

De Villiers, C.J.: The order I make is that, the Colonial Government undertaking not to dispose of the land mentioned in the notice of motion, pending final decision of the Court thereon, the case be postponed until next term. As far as I can judge, from reading the notice of motion and from what counsel has stated, I am satisfied that this is a case that could be heard on motion. More than that I cannot intimate at present; I have not sufficient information. Costs will be costs in the cause.

Mr. Schreiner applied for leave to any of the parties to file further affidavits.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Any of the parties will be at liberty by consent of the opposite party to put in further affidavits.]

Ex parte STEYN.

Mr. De Waal moved for release of petitioner from his appointment as curator of the estate of F. H. Muller of Swellendam, and the appointment of F. Reed in his stead.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE KRUMMECK BROS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising transfer to one Truter, of certain property in the district of Beaufort West. Mr. Truter was one of the trustees in the insolvent estate, and his co-trustee joined in the petition.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would sanction the sale of the first property mentioned in the petition, but not the sale of the two other properties, the prices for which were wholly inadequate, even with the low price of property as it was at present. The matter might be mentioned again on the 12th January in regard to the other two properties. The order would be that the sale of the property in paragraph (a) would be allowed, but refused as to the other two properties, with leave to petitioners to produce independent evidence as to their value, and as to the probability or otherwise of better prices being obtained for the same in case a further sale by auction takes place. His lordship added that he thought it was a wrong principle for trustees to buy properties in respect of which they were trustees.

Ex parte ESTATE VORSTER.

Mr. Swift moved on behalf of petitioner, who is executor in the estate of his parents, for an order authorising transfer of certain of the estate property to the petitioner.

Order granted as prayed.

VAN DYK AND MARAIS V. ABRAHAM AND CO.

This was an application to have a certain order of Court set aside, so as to enable an execution by petitioners to be carried out.

Mr. McGregor was for applicants; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin said that the real respondents were the creditors of Abraham, who were well-known firms in Cape Town.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that some modus vivendi should be devised, pending an action to be brought by Abraham.

Mr. Benjamin urged that the matter might well stand over until the 1st February, and that, meanwhile, the portion of the order restraining respondents from dealing with their property in the meantime should be set aside. The applicants would be amply secured.

Mr. McGregor said that the respondent had already threatened sequestration twice, and there was nothing to show that the estate might not even yet be sequestrated.

De Villiers, C.J., ordered that the rule of the 6th November last be discharged, on condition that the respondent goes to trial next term in the action instituted by him, and that in the interval there should be no sequestration of his estate, question of costs to be reserved.

ROSSOUW V. ROSSOUW.

Mr. Inchbold moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising petitioner to obtain transfer of certain property without the assistance of respondent.

Rule absolute.

ERLANK V. ERLANK.

Mr. Burton applied for this matter to be postponed until the 12th January. The application, he said, was to set aside an order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan in September last, upon the motion of the present respondent, on the ground that the parties were domiciled in the Orange River Colony, and that the order, therefore, should not have been obtained. The applicant (Mrs. Erlank) had died since the proceedings were commenced.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) appeared for respondents, and opposed the application.

Mr. Burton said that respondent fled from writs of civil imprisonment in the Orange River Colony, and came over the border, and he had then commenced an action in the Supreme Court to obtain payment of £500 from his wife under the ante-nuptial contract, and had got leave to sue by edictal citation, and had had a sheep lease attached. The estate, Mr. Burton added, claimed that the case should be tried in the Orange River Colony and that applicant must go there with his suit. Respondent was a man of straw.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the question of domicile might well be decided upon exception when the action came on, and the affidavits might then be produced which had been filed for the purposes of the present application.

Mr. Upington said that the domicile of origin was the Cape Colony, the parties were married here, and the ante-nuptial contract was registered here, and he was perfectly clear on the point that this Court had jurisdiction.

De Villiers, C.J.: I understand that the learned judge has granted leave to sue by edictal citation, and I am asked now to make an order setting aside that order already made. I consider that the better course will be, for the convenience of both parties, that there should be no order upon the present application, and that, therefore, the action instituted by respondent should proceed, but with leave to the applicant, in case he should except to the jurisdiction of the Court, to produce evidence on affidavit as to domicile before any evidence on the merits is given, costs to be costs in the cause.

HANNAY V. HANNAY.

This was an application brought by Alice Adelaide Hannay, calling upon her husband, Robert F. Hannay, to show cause why he should not provide her with funds to institute an action against him for divorce, and for alimony pendente lite and custody of the child.

Mr. Upington was for applicant; Mr. Russell was for respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., said that only matters that would not brook delay should be set down for the 12th December and the 12th January. It appeared to him that there was no real urgency in this matter.

Mr. Russell explained that respondent had made a certain offer to the applicant.

De Villiers, C.J., said that, unless the terms offered by respondent were accepted, the application would have to stand over until next term.

Mr. Upington said that he had no authority to accept the respondent's offer.

The matter was ordered to stand over until next term.

INSOLVENT ESTATE VAN DER MERWE V. THORNE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order compelling respondent to show cause why he should not proceed with an objection he had lodged with the Master to the liquidation and distribution account framed by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Andries P. van der Merwe, of Graaff-Reinet, or why he should not withdraw the same.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for applicant, R. A. Jansen; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondent, Sidney Herbert Thorne.

The respondent disputed an allowed claim by the applicant for a lien by the Graaff-Reinet Board of Executors upon a certain farm in the insolvent estate. Applicant is secretary of the Board.

De Villiers, C.J.: It would appear that in this case the respondent's reason for not proceeding at once was that he wished to obtain some further information from the trustee which was not very quickly forthcoming. Upon the whole, I think that this case had better stand over until next term, with leave to the applicant to file replying affidavits, and the question of costs to stand over.

CHAMBERS V. ROSE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a certain award of arbitrators to be made a Rule of Court in terms of the award.

Order granted accordingly.

RETIEF AND ANOTHER V. LOTTER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain award of arbitrators to be made a Rule of Court, costs to be borne by the parties in equal portions.

Order granted accordingly.

STEPHEN V. ESTATE CROUT.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain award of arbitrators to be made a Rule of Court, costs to be paid by the parties in equal portions.

Order granted accordingly.

Ex parte MANNELLY.

Mr. Swift moved for an order authorising the amendment of petitioner's name in an ante-nuptial contract and the Debt Registry.

Order granted as prayed.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PURCELL V. VAN ZYL AND f 1906.
BUISSINNE. { Dec. 14th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of the plaintiff, and her son-in-law, Dr. J. A. S. Witty, in London.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., opposed the application.

It appeared that applicant had instituted an action against respondents to recover a sum of about £2,000, which it was alleged that they illegally detained. The respondents claimed that the money had been properly retained by them.

Affidavits having been read and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., ordered the matter to stand over until February 14, and directed that in the meantime medical evidence be obtained as to whether Mrs. Purcell was or was not fit to make the journey out to the Cape, so as to enable the Court to decide whether she should give her evidence in court. He suggested that further information should also be given as to whether her son-in-law would be able to come out to give his evidence.

GREEN BROS. V. ZACKS.

Mr. Rowson moved for an order calling upon plaintiff in the action (Zacks) to find security for costs, plaintiff being a general dealer, residing in London, England, and having no business or domicile in this colony. The respondent, counsel said, appeared to have taken no notice of this application.

Order granted requiring respondent to furnish security to the satisfaction of the defendant, or failing that, satisfaction to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, proceedings to be stayed in the meantime, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte ERASMUS.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain moneys for the purpose of petitioner's farming operations in the Orange River Colony. Petitioner desired to avail himself of a favourable opportunity of purchasing the farm.

Ordered that the sum of £950 be paid out of the Guardians' Fund for the acquisition by the minor of the property described, and payment of incidental expenses, as prayed.

Ex parte HARVEY.

Mr. Inchbold moved for leave to petitioner, who resides at Woodstock, to sue her husband, Alfred B. Harvey, by dictatorial citation for restitution of conjugal rights. Respondent was stated to have been lately residing in Essex, England, but to have recently removed.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on the 15th April, and to be served personally, failing which, one publication in the "Daily Telegraph" (London) and "Cape Times."

Ex parte ESTATE HAMILTON.

Mr. Inchbold moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary, for leave to mortgage certain landed property at Claremont.

Order granted as prayed.

OLOETE V. ESTATE LEVY.

Mr. Upington moved for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond. Counsel said that the application was of an unusual nature. The money due under the bond had been paid to Levy long before he died. The executrix, Mrs. Levy, was residing in England, but the petitioner was in the unfortunate position of finding no one in this colony whom he could sue. Counsel suggested that the court should authorise the Master to appoint an executor dative, for the purpose of the cancellation of the bond.

Hopley, J., said that the matter might be mentioned again on Monday.

Postea (December 17th).

Hopley, J., granted a rule nisi, returnable on January 12th. Rule to be served on respondent's agent in the Colony and on the Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of the executrix of the late M. J. Esterhuizen, for confirmation of the sale of certain farms in the division of Willowmore. The matter had previously been before the Court, and was standing over for an amendment of the conditions of sale, for which a consent paper was now put in.

Order granted as prayed.

LIQUIDATOR COOPER AND CO., LTD. V. COOPER.

This was an application for delivery of possession of certain premises and goods belonging to the applicant company.

Mr. Upington (for respondent, the managing director of the company) applied for a postponement of the matter.

Mr. Pyemont (for applicants) opposed any postponement.

Mr. Upington said that negotiations had been proceeding between the respondent, and a large number of shareholders, with a view of taking over the business, and he had, as a matter of fact, paid out a considerable sum of money towards the purchase price. Counsel also took the objection that the applicant had not given due notice of the application.

Mr. Pyemont submitted that the application was in the nature of a matter of urgency.

Hopley, J., decided to hear the application.

It appeared that the company's registered office was in Sheffield, England, and that the company had been placed in voluntary liquidation, and Mr. Wood, of Leeds, had been appointed liquidator. The assets in Cape Town consisted of goods valued at about £200, lying at premises in Castle-street, and the liquidator had appointed Mr. E. R. Syfret as his agent in Cape Town.

Mr. Upington, in argument, quoted Pyemont's Company Law, p. 284.

Mr. Pyemont submitted that the liquidator should at once be put in possession of the premises and goods.

Hopley, J., granted a rule nisi, to operate as an interim interdict, calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from interfering with, or retaining possession of, the premises, 20 and 22, Castle-street, Cape Town, and the goods therein, and why he should not hand over the said goods and premises to applicant, rule returnable on January 12, respondent to have his costs of appearance.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDOEP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BULAWAYO MUNICIPALITY
V. BULAWAYO WATER-WORKS CO., LTD. } 1906.
BULAWAYO WATERWORKS
CO. V. BULAWAYO MUNI-CIPALITY. } Dec. 17th.

In the first matter, the Bulawayo Municipality applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a judgment of a full bench sitting in appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, in an action brought by the respondents against the Municipality for a declaration of rights in respect of certain electric lighting concession. There was also a cross-motion by the Waterworks Co.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. Porter Buchanan) was for the Municipality; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) was for the Waterworks Co.

The only questions raised were as to security and an amendment of the order made upon the judgment of the Appeal Court, so as to give more adequate effect to the findings of the Court.

After hearing counsel.

The Court made the usual order as to security, and directed an addition to be made by consent to the judgment in the following terms: "that the term 'actual cost of generating the light' means the actual expenditure incurred for the purpose of such production and distribution, and includes depreciation and insurance."

HOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application for leave to appeal from a judgment of a full bench, sitting in appeal, from a judgment given by Mr. Justice Buchanan, sitting as a Divisional Court, in an action brought by the present applicants against the Government for demurrage of certain colliers in Table Bay.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close and Mr. Struben) was for applicants (Houlder Bros.); Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C., and Mr. Burton) was for respondents (the Colonial Government).

Mr. Schreiner said that there was no objection to the order being granted, the only point for the consideration of the Court being as to security. The order of the Court of Appeal effected a reduction in the amount of the judgment of the Court of first instance, which reduction would entitle the Government, if Houlder Bros. did not appeal to the Privy Council, to a refund of not less than £2,687. It might be a larger sum, but not less. He suggested that the applicants should give security de restituendo.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have the defendants paid?]

Mr. Schreiner replied that the Government had paid. The plaintiffs had got the money and, therefore, they asked for security for the margin between the judgment of the Court of first instance and the judgment of the Court below.

Sir H. Juta said that he did not raise any objection.

Application granted, Houlder Bros. to give security for costs and £2,700.

REX V. HOOD.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, sitting in appeal from a judgment of the R.M.'s Court, Umtali.

Appellant was charged in the R.M.'s Court, Umtali, with having stolen on the 2nd January last 10s. 6d. sterling, the property, or in the lawful possession of a native, named Madanza. The money was alleged to have been removed from the counter at the Post Office by Hood, whilst the complainant was about to deposit it in the Savings Bank. Appellant pleaded not guilty to the charge, but he was convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of £2, or seven days' imprisonment. The case was taken in appeal to the High Court, Southern Rhodesia, where the judgment of the Court below was upheld.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant (Alexander Young Hood); Mr. Pyemont appeared for the Attorney-General of Southern Rhodesia.

Mr. De Villiers said that this Court was in as good a position to decide the matter as the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, and he submitted that the appeal would, therefore, be treated as if it had come direct from the Resident Magistrate's Court. He admitted that a question of fact was involved, and that, looking at the evidence, there seemed to be a prima facie case of theft against accused. But when one remembered the strong presumption existing in favour of innocence under our law, and when one analysed the evidence shortly, he thought it would be possible to see that there was not such conclusive evidence as was necessary in law to found a conviction of theft.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is your suggestion that the native was lying, and that he may never have had the money?]

Mr. De Villiers: He may have had the money, but the native himself may have taken it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When could he have taken it?]

Mr. De Villiers: It is not easy to discover, but it is equally difficult to discover when my client may have taken it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But what could have been the native's motive?]

Mr. De Villiers admitted that he was not aware of any motive that the native may have had to trump up a charge against accused. Counsel, having examined the evidence in detail, submitted that the story of the native was not corroborated, and said it was a question of the native's oath against Hood's.

Without calling upon Mr. Pyemont,

De Villiers, C.J.: The learned counsel has urged many arguments in favour of the accused, which, no doubt, were urged before the Magistrate who tried the case, but, after all, it is a question of credibility in this case. If the Magistrate believed the witnesses, then there can be no doubt as to the guilt of the accused. Now, quite independently of Madanza's statements, there are circumstances in the case which might lead one to suppose that the only person who could have committed this offence of taking the 10s. was the accused, supposing that Madanza did place the money on the counter, and why should not Madanza be believed when he says that he did place the 10s. there? If Madanza had been sent by his master to deposit the 10s., and had come back and said to his master that he had lost the money, then there would be some motive proved on the part of Madanza to swear that somebody had taken the money, but it has not been suggested that he did not go with his own money, which he appeared honestly to have done. But, then, there comes the statement of Madanza, who says that he saw the accused take the money. Well, it is said, why didn't he there and then claim the money back? But he explains it as a native would. The Magistrate heard the witnesses, saw the witnesses, and there can be no reason why he should prefer the evidence of the Kafir to the white man. That is the conclusion that he arrived at, and it would be exceedingly dangerous if this Court now were to alter that decision. The appeal must be dismissed.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte WARD. { 1906.
{ Dec. 17th.

This was an application for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner's husband, an inmate of Valkenberg Asylum, in an action to have him declared of unsound mind, and a curator bonis appointed. The matter had been standing over with a view of ascertaining whether a less expensive process was not possible, but Mr. Upington said that, as the value of the estate exceeded £500, he did not think there was any way of achieving the object in view, except by the customary proceedings.

Mr. Van der Byl was appointed curator ad litem, summons to be returnable on January 12, and to be served on the curator ad litem and the alleged lunatic.

Ex parte GILLANDERS.

Mr. Upington moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi, calling upon the Peiserton Diamond Mining Co. to show cause why petitioner should not be granted leave to sue them in forma pauperis. Petitioner was proposing the institution of an action against the company to recover £5,000 damages for the loss of her husband through falling down a shaft, left unfenced, it was alleged, owing to the negligence of the defendants or their servants.

Mr. Burton appeared for the respondent company to show cause, and produced affidavits by Mr. F. Wiener (chairman of the company) and by the proprietor of Claridge's Hotel, to the effect that applicant had been staying at the hotel with her children since July last. The second deponent, however, admitted that she had paid no money to him since September last.

It was also alleged that she had received an inheritance from her father's estate, and that a portion of this had been paid to her, and that she was not entitled to sue in forma pauperis.

Mr. Upington presented replying affidavits by applicant, in which she said that she had no means to prosecute her action, that her late husband had mortgaged her expectancy under her father's will, and that she had removed her children from the hotel. She repeated that, apart from wearing apparel, she was not possessed of property of the value of £10.

Mr. Burton said that the company had no desire to be unreasonable with the applicant, but they did not wish advantage to be taken of an opportunity of speculating in an action against them.

The matter was ordered to stand over pending further information as to whether applicant was married under ante-nuptial contract, as to the amount of the inheritance, etc.

COSMELLI, MEYER AND CO. V. TAYLOR AND MILES.

Mr. Payne moved for leave to amend a certain summons calling upon defenddants to show cause why their private estates should not be sequestrated. Counsel said that the partnership estate of the defendants had been finally adjudicated, but it was desired to also have their private estates finally adjudicated, and he applied for an amendment of the summons accordingly. He added that the provisional order embraced the private as well as the partnership estate.

The papers in the provisional case were produced, and it was found that the partnership and private estates had been provisionally sequestrated.

Hopley, J., remarked that there had apparently been an omission on the part of the plaintiffs' attorneys.

Leave granted to plaintiffs to issue fresh summonses upon defendants, calling upon them to show cause on the 12th January why their private estates should not be sequestrated, respondents not to be liable for wasted costs.

Hopley, J., said that the respondents or their estates must not be charged with the costs occasioned by the inadvertence.

LABUSCAGNIE V. LABUSCAGNIE.

Mr. Pohl moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of plaintiff and his witnesses at Jamestown, division of Wodehouse, in an action instituted by him against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Petitioner said that the nearest Circuit town was Dordrecht, about 24 miles distant.

Hopley, J., said that it seemed very absurd to bring an action and then apply for a commission, when the case could have been taken in the first instance to the Circuit Court, only a comparatively few miles away.

Mr. Pohl said that there were precedents for this application.

Hopley, J.: I do not think this is a case in which any circumstances have been shown to justify the Court in granting a commission de bene esse. If the application were on notice to the respondent to show cause why this case should not be heard on Circuit, either at Aliwal North or Dordrecht, whichever was more convenient, then, of course, the Court would grant it at once, because that is the natural course to take in a case of this kind. The affidavits made in this application may be used, in that if you give the respondent notice that you are going to make such an application. No order will be made.

In re THE EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Dr. Greer presented the first report of the official liquidators. He specially called the Court's attention to the following paragraphs: "The liquidators have received from Messrs. Davis and Sons, Natal, an offer of £3,600 for the whole of the machinery and plant, stock and furniture, which cost, as shown, £6,460. This offer was submitted to a meeting of the Cape Town creditors held on the 29th November, who unanimously decided in favour of its acceptance. Attached hereto is also a list of the principal creditors in East London, representing claims amounting to £1,027, who have notified their approval of the acceptance of the offer. The only dissenting creditor is the landlord of the premises, whose claim for damages owing to the breaking of the lease, which has still a little over nine years to run, at the rate of £60 per month, has not yet been lodged with the liquidators. As the landlord was also a director, the liquidators are investigating his connection with the company and his claim for cancellation of the lease. Expert opinion has been taken as to the value of the offer and, according to Mr. Timberlake, general manager in South Africa of Messrs. John Dickenson and Co., printing material merchants, the offer of £3,600 is a good one considering the great difficulty that now exists in disposing satisfactorily of machinery and plant. . . . It should also be pointed out that the longer the premises are occupied the greater will be the landlord's preferential claim for rent. A further recommendation in favour of the acceptance of this offer is the fact that the terms offered are cash within one month from date of delivery. The liquidators now wish to apply for the sanction of the Court for the exercising of the necessary powers under section 149, and especially its sanction to enable them to accept the offer of Messrs Davis and Sons of £3,600 without first submitting the assets mentioned to public competition." The liquidators also asked for power under section 151 to appoint Messrs Sauer and Sanden, of Cape Town, as their legal advisers. Dr. Greer said that he was not aware of any authority for asking the Court to sanction the sale before the report had lain for inspection. It was desirable that the liquidators should have power to at once close with this offer, as there appeared to be a danger that it might be withdrawn if not accepted within a very brief time.

Hopley, J., said that if he sanctioned the sale at the present stage, it seemed to him that it would be very much like granting a final order on an ex parte application.

Dr. Greer pointed out that all the creditors except one, who had not yet filed his claim, had consented to the proposed sale.

Hopley, J., said that he could not grant an order sanctioning the sale at the present stage, but he might express informally his opinion in such a way that it would be of some assistance to the liquidators. It would be ordered that the report lie for inspection at the Master's office for 14 days, and that publication be made in the "Cape Times," "South African News," and "East London Dispatch." He added: All I can say is that I think it is very desirable that such a bargain should be concluded on the evidence of the experts before me, but that this is not the stage at which to finally consent to such matter, and I think the liquidators would be safe under the circumstances in provisionally accepting the offer. The right time to make an order, however, will be when the report has lain for its normal time.

Ex parte ATTENBOROUGH.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Louis H. Attenborough, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Respondent had, in November last year, left the applicant, and he was now believed to be in New South Wales. The parties were married in England, and came out to this Colony in 1901.

Hopley, J., said that a letter had been sent by respondent to his wife couched in very affectionate terms. He did not seem to have left his wife with the intention of deserting her.

After hearing counsel further,

Hopley, J., said that he did not see any reason why this application should be granted at present. The application might be renewed later on if there were good grounds for it. There was also a question as to whether the parties were domiciled in this colony.

Ex parte ESTATE THORNE.

Mr. Gutsche moved, on the petition of Gus. Trollop, as agent of the executrix testamentary, for leave to sell certain property at Bedford.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INDWE MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to petitioners, the trustees of the Society, to obtain transfer of certain erf at Indwe, which they had purchased at public auction. The petitioners had granted certain first and second bonds to one Gert Johannes Botha, who had fallen into arrear with his capital and interest. They claimed to be entitled in terms of the bond to sell the property hypothecated by reason of the failure of Botha to pay the instalments of the capital and the due interest. Counsel applied for a rule similar to that which was granted in the case of Cape of Good Hope Permanent Building Society v. Rode and Others (9 C.T. Reports, 198).

Hopley, J: It seems to me from the reported cases in this matter, that the proper course for secured mortgagees with a clause like this in their mortgage bonds, is not that they should have the right to sell at once the property hypothecated, but that they should come to the Court and ask leave to sell the property, and then the Court safeguards the position of the debtors by granting only a rule nisi asking these debtors to show cause why their property shall not be sold, and if they do not show cause, then the rule is made absolute. Then the creditors have the right to sell, and I suppose the Registrar of Deeds would probably have no difficulty in granting transfer. You may take a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why this property shall not be sold and transferred in due course, rule to be returnable on January 12.

In re THE EQUITABLE FIRE AND TRUST CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., presented the official liquidators' report and applied for the usual order as to lying for inspection, and also as to publication.

Report ordered to lie 14 days at the Master's Office, and publication once in the "Cape Times" and "South African News."

In re THE ORANGE RIVER IRRIGATION CO., LTD.

Mr. Sutton presented the liquidators' report, and moved for the usual order as to lying for inspection and as to publication.

Report ordered to lie for inspection for fourteen days at the Master's Office, publication once in the "Cape Times" and "South African News."

In re THE RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Struben presented the official liquidators' report, and applied for the usual order.

Similar order granted to that in the previous case.

EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO. (IN LIQUIDATION) V. GOULDEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to the liquidators to sue one Wm. Goulden, of Johannesburg, by edictal citation, and for the attachment of a certain landed property at East London ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Petitioners proposed to institute an action against respondent for payment of £87 10s., in respect of unpaid calls on shares. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that he did not apply for leave to serve the intendit with the citation.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, citation and notice to be served together, personal service, returnable on the 12th January.

"Master" of Supreme Court—
Moneys of minors paid into his hands—Ord. 105 of 1833, Secs. 26 and 31.

The applicant, being the surviving spouse and executrix of the late H., administratrix of his estate and guardian of their minor children, had paid over to the Master of the High Court, and through him to the Master of the Supreme Court certain moneys to which the minor heirs were entitled, she acting under Sec. 26 of Ord. 105 of 1833. The Master had invested these moneys in the Guardians' Fund, from which applicant now wished them to be withdrawn, in order that they might be invested in another trust company. The Master having reported unfavourably.

Held, that the Court had power under Sec. 31 to sanction such re-investment.

Mr. McGregor moved, on behalf of the executrix testamentary, for an order authorising the payment of certain moneys deposited to the credit of the minors in the Guardian's Fund, in order that the same may be reinvested by the petitioner as administratrix. The money had been put into the hands of the Master by the petitioner for investment, and she now applied to withdraw it for reinvestment as she might chose. Counsel submitted that the petitioner had not parted with her control of the money when she deposited it in the Guardian's Fund, and that she had a right, when she elected, to require that the money be paid out to her by the Master. The new investment proposed by petitioner was estimated to produce about £37 per annum more than the fund did at present. The Master reported that the course suggested would introduce a very inconvenient practice.

The application was ordered to stand over.

Postea (December 20th).

Mr. McGregor again mentioned this matter, and cited a number of cases and quoted Voet and Grotius, but he admitted that he had been unable to find any authority touching the specific point raised in the present case.

Hopley, J.: This application raises a point of some importance with regard to the administration of moneys which reach the Master's hands by virtue of the 26th section of Ordinance 105. The applicant is the surviving spouse and the administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband and guardian of the minor children of their marriage. She herself inherited one-half of the estate, and as to the other half she is administering it for the minors, whose guardian she is. During the years after her husband's death, from 1901 to 1903, liquidation and distribution accounts were filed, and under those accounts various sums were paid in to the credit of the minors to the Master of the High Court of Griqualand, in whose jurisdiction the property had been realised. The amounts come, roughly, to somewhere between £900 and £1,000 to each child, and the Master of the High Court has, in due course, passed on these moneys to the Master of the Supreme Court, who, under the 26th section of the Ordinance, is authorised to receive such moneys. That section says, "it shall and may be lawful for any tutor testamentary or curator nominate to whom it shall seem expedient so to do . . . to pay over to the Master of the Supreme Court any money belonging to the person or estate under the guardianship of such tutor or curator, and which by law such tutor or curator might lend out on interest." Under that section the tutor paid in and the Master received this money. It will be observed that the section says "pay over to the Master of the Supreme Court," not deposit it with the Master of the Supreme Court temporarily, or any words of that sort, but to pay over to him, and then, in the 27th section, it talks of a ward book, which the Master must start for all such moneys as have come into his hands, moneys under this 26th section, and in such ward book to open an account, with a debit and credit side to it, in the name of each person interested in moneys which come into his hands. Therefore, not only is money paid over to him, but he is at once told that he must administer these moneys and keep an account, and he is vested, it seems to me, with such responsibilities that, as far as the immediate administration of these moneys is concerned, he is the only person to whom by the act of the testamentary guardian or administratrix these moneys have been confided. There is nothing in the Ordinance, however, which would preclude the Court from dealing with moneys like these and authorising a more advantageous investment than the one afforded by the Guardians' Fund, which, though absolutely safe, provides only an interest of 4 per cent. on such capital as comes into their hands, and I think that the words of the 31st section, which section gives the Master power to prohibit or to veto any expenditure of such moneys as are in his hands, show that there is a way by which moneys like that may be got if the Supreme Court is petitioned, and the Supreme Court or some judge thereof makes an order directing the payment to be made to the tutor of any moneys in his hands. Now, in a case like this, where it is suggested that a more advantageous investment has been found, the proper course, is, we think—and I have spoken on the subject to the other judges of the Court who are at present in Cape Town—to petition the Court and to show that it is a better investment and to ask the Court, on referring the matter to the Master of the Court, to sanction the change of the investment, that is, to authorise the Master to pay the money out of the Guardians' Fund, and to invest it in this other new investment, which the administratrix apparently has found. I think in the present case that might be done, and such an order might be made. It is suggested that the money might be invested with the Paarl African Trust Company, Limited, who are ready to receive it, and to give 5 per cent. interest, which is one per cent. more than the present fund produces. At the same time the Master points out that this would raise an inconvenient practice; he is not against this on any other grounds, except the precedent so established. I do not think there is any great inconvenience if only it be borne in mind that the Supreme Court is to be approached by petition before such reinvestment and alteration of investment can be made. At the same time once the moneys have come into the Master's hands, and under the guardianship of the Court as upper guardians of minors, it is incumbent upon us, in authorising such reinvestment, to investigate the scheme and the stability of the institution in which it is proposed to put the moneys, and, therefore, while in this particular case not being unwilling to authorise reinvestment, and without saying a single word as to the stability of the company mentioned—about which the Court knows nothing—as a matter of precedent we think it ought to be subject to the satisfaction of the Master as to the absolute security afforded by the company, or such security given by the company or by others as will satisfy the Master that the moneys will be absolutely safe in the new investment to which it is proposed to divert them. The Court, therefore, authorises the Master to pay these moneys or reinvest them in the said company, provided that the said Master is satisfied by the security of such investment, or receives ample security outside the assets of the company for the securing of such moneys as are so reinvested. It would leave the Master open, I suppose, to make any inquiries that he might feel necessary in the circumstances.

Mr. McGregor: I take it that, pursuant to the order, if there should be any difference, the parties are always at liberty to come to the Court?

His Lordship: Yes, they may.

GROENEWALD V. NEWMARK.

Mr. Louwrens moved, as a matter of urgency, for leave to applicant to appeal in forma pauperis from a decree of civil imprisonment granted against him by the Resident Magistrate of Bredasdorp, in an action brought by the present respondent. Applicant resides at Napier, division of Bredasdorp. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon respondent to show cause on the 12th January why leave should not be granted as prayed, the order for civil imprisonment to be stayed meanwhile.

Mr. Pohl moved for leave to the petitioner to mortgage certain property in which minors are interested.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ENGEL.

Mr. Lewis moved, on the petition of Eliza Engel, for leave to sue her husband, William Adolf Max Engel, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner alleged that while she was temporarily absent in Johannesburg, respondent deserted her, and that he was now believed to be living in Dresden, Germany. The parties were married in London.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation to be returnable on the 28th February, and to be served personally.

Ex parte ROWE.

Mr. Struben moved for fresh directions as to service of citation upon petitioner's wife, Alice Rowe, in an action to be brought by petitioner for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The matter had recently been before the Court on an application for an extension of the return day, when Mr. Justice Hopley declined to make an order. The rule had been published in a Melbourne newspaper. Counsel called his Lordship's attention to an extension of return day granted on the 7th December on the petition of the Union-Castle Co., Ltd., although the actual return day was the 14th November (16 C.T.R., 1098). He submitted that there would be no necessity now to give further publication in a Melbourne newspaper and that it would be sufficient if the citation were published in the "Government Gazette" and "Cape Times," and sent by registered letter to a certain person in Victoria, who knew the respondent, but who declined to disclose her whereabouts. The respondents had, no doubt, already been made acquainted with the citation.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the difficulty in the way of having a further publication in a Melbourne newspaper?]

Mr. Struben: It is a matter of funds.

Maasdorp, J., directed the citation to be published once in the "Government Gazette," "Cape Times," and a Melbourne newspaper, as on the previous occasion, return day to be extended to the 14th April.

Ex parte ROWAN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent a certain minor in an action to be instituted by applicants concerning the construction of a will.

Mr. M. Bisset (for the executors of the estate) consented subject to the appointment of Mr. Benjamin as curator ad litem.

Order granted appointing Mr. Benjamin curator ad litem, costs to be costs in the cause.

THOMPSON V. BATAYI.

Interpleader—Execution on pledge in the hands of a third person.

N., a native woman, married by Christian rites in community to respondent, had obtained a loan of money from plaintiff, for the repayment of which one M. signed a promissory note as surety, and N. delivered to him certain cattle, part of the joint estate of her husband and herself as security that she would pay the note. There was no proof that respondent had consented to these arrangements. Thereafter appellant sued N. and M. jointly and severally on the note, and obtained judgment against M. only, who thereupon handed over the cattle to be sold in execution. In an interpleader suit brought by N. and respondent, the Magistrate gave judgment against appellant.

Held on appeal, that the cattle were not executable.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town in an interpleader action brought against appellant by respondent to determine the ownership of certain cattle.

It appeared that respondent and his wife are natives married according to Christian rites. Nowillis Batayi (the wife) had contracted certain obligations under a promissory note to the plaintiff, and this note had also been signed by a native headman named Johnny Mpaffa, as surety. In consideration of this, Nowillis had handed certain cattle belonging to herself and her husband over to the headman. Plaintiff sued in the Magistrate's Court upon the promissory note, but the Magistrate only gave judgment as against the headman, and held that Nowillis could not be sued alone, and that she must be assisted by her husband. The cattle were, however, seized in execution of the judgment against Mpaffa. Respondent then brought an interpleader to have the cattle declared his property, and the Magistrate found in his favour.

Mr. Burton was for appellant (John Thompson); there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. Burton said that the Magistrate seemed to have been induced by ethical rather than legal grounds to come to this decision. He did not appear to like the 2s. 6d. per £1 per month interest. He thought that this was an ignorant and improvident woman, and that she had been rather taken advantage of. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that the appellant had not obtained judgment against the respondent's wife. Mr. Burton having been heard further,

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that in this case Nowillis obtained certain moneys by way of a loan from Thompson, and gave him in return a promissory note, signed jointly by herself and a man named Mpaffa. Mpaffa seems to have come forward in this matter merely as surety for Nowillis's debt, and in order to secure Mpaffa, Nowillis handed over to him certain cattle belonging to herself and her husband. There is no proof that the husband was a consenting party to these proceedings. When the promissory note fell due, Thompson sued Nowillis and Mpaffa, and obtained judgment against Mpaffa, but failed against Nowillis, on the ground, as given by the Magistrate, that Nowillis had not authority to deal with the joint estate or to appear in Court on her husband's behalf. After the judgment was given, Mpaffa seems to have handed over the cattle to be sold in execution for the satisfaction of the debt, and upon a claim being set up by the wife on behalf of the joint estate of herself and her husband, the parties went into an interpleader suit. The Magistrate found in that interpleader suit that the property was that of her husband, Sentsi Batayi, and that it was consequently not executable. It seems to me that it is quite probable that, if the proper proceedings had been taken, it might have been found that there was some claim upon the wife in respect of the promissory note, and that there was some claim against the property in respect of the judgment debt. It so happens that the Magistrate gave judgment in favour of the wife. She gave her property in security for the debt. The Magistrate has declared that she is not liable for the debt, and consequently the property cannot be taken in execution in satisfaction of a debt in respect of which the Magistrate has declared the wife not to be liable. It has been pointed out also by Mr. Burton that Mr. Thompson himself seems to have seen the difficulty of the position in this case, and that, when he found that the question was raised as to the liability of the property for the debt, he renounced his claim by giving back the property to Mpaffa, who held it as security for the debt for which he had intervened on behalf of the wife. It seems difficult to understand why Mr. Thompson should have taken up subsequently the position that he was entitled to have the cattle sold in execution, when he had previously intimated his intention of making no claim in respect of them. Upon the whole, I think there are grounds for supporting the finding of the Magistrate that the property is not executable, and the Court will not interfere with that finding. The appeal will be dismissed.

LANGEVELD V. LANGEVELD.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Specific performance—Ejectment—Act 20 of 1856, Sec. 10.

A R.M. Court summons issued at the instance of the proprietor of a certain erf called upon the occupier thereof to vacate it. A notice was endorsed on the back of the summons, calling upon the defendant to produce certain documents.

Held on appeal, that as this notice was no part of the summons, it could not oust the Magistrate's jurisdiction as a claim for specific performance.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court of district Hay, held at Griquatown, in an action brought by appellant against respondent for an order to forthwith yield and deliver up to plaintiff's possession a certain erf No. 123, situated at Griquatown, of which plaintiff was registered owner, and which defendant unjustly retained from plaintiff.

In the Court below defendant excepted to the Magistrate's jurisdiction, on the ground that the action was for specific performance, and this the Magistrate upheld. He said it appeared to him that he had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the action was for specific performance, viz., the production of a certain original deed of grant, with diagram annexed, and also deed of transfer. He had the record produced of a previous case between the parties, and he considered that the action should have been brought in a higher court.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that under section 10 of Act 20, 1856, the Magistrate clearly had jurisdiction in this case, which was an action of ejectment at the suit of the registered owner against an occupier of the land. He said, however, that this was an action for production of an original document. Defendant admitted that the erf was his owner's property, but said that he had a claim for £180 improvements. He said that he had been allowed by his brother to occupy the ground for a considerable period. The so-called "specific performance," counsel said, was a notice endorsed on the back of the summons calling upon defendant to produce the documents. This was nothing more than a notice to produce the documents. The Magistrate had shown no reason why he should not grant plaintiff an order of ejectment.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the registered proprietor of a certain erf sued the occupier in an action for ejectment. Now, it appears that there is a special provision for such proceeding under section 10 of the Magistrates' Court Act, jurisdiction is given to the Magistrate to try such issues, and as far as the summons is concerned, this is all that the plaintiff now claims—that he, as the registered proprietor, should be put in possession of this property and that the defendant, who is now in occupation, should be ejected. It is quite possible that certain defences may be set up and exceptions may be raised even within the terms of the 10th section. It is provided, however, that the Magistrate shall have jurisdiction unless questions of title are in dispute, or unless the defendant is in a position to prove that the right of occupation which he claims is of a greater value than £40, so it is quite possible that the defendant in this case may have sound exceptions to raise to this summons, or may have some special plea which he is in a position to set up. But the exception raised in this case is that the matter is substantially one for specific performance. Now, that exception must be overruled, because it is not one which affects the claim of the plaintiff in this case, as it is stated upon the summons. The Court will, therefore, overrule that exception, and order the Magistrate to proceed with the case. The order will not be now that the Magistrate shall proceed with the case upon its merits, because there may be other sound exceptions which the defendant is in a position to raise, or special pleas which he may set up. The order the Court will now make is that the exception appearing upon the record must be overruled and the Magistrate proceed with the case. The Magistrate seems to have fallen into an error with reference to the meaning of the exception by interpreting it to signify that the demand endorsed upon the back for the production of documents when the trial took place was a demand for delivery up of the documents to the plaintiff, and that that constituted an order which would amount to an order for specific performance. Well, the endorsement, as it appears on the back, is no portion of the summons. Exception overruled, with costs.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie. Respondent in default.]

REX V. AHAMED.—REX V. EBRAHIM.

These cases came on appeal from judgments of the Acting Assistant Resident Magistrate of Woodstock, who had convicted appellants of contraventions of the General Dealers and Other Licences' Amendment Act, No. 35, 1906, in that, being general dealers, carrying on business at Woodstock, and no hours of closing and opening having been fixed by the Municipal Council, they did, on the 29th September, keep open their shop after 11 p.m., against the terms of section 17.

The appellants carry on business respectively at shops in Queen's-road and Duke-street, Woodstock, and the two appeals were heard together, inasmuch as the evidence for the Crown was the same in both instances.

Mr. Van Zyl was for appellants, who are Indian traders; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Van Zyl said he knew that these appeals raised questions of fact, and that the Court was always loth to disturb the findings of Magistrates on questions of fact. In these cases, however, he submitted that the evidence on the records was not strong enough to justify the findings of the Magistrate. On the one hand, they had only the evidence of the constable (Edwards), and, seeing that Edwards had had transactions with these Indians, it was conceivable that the account which the appellants gave was true, and that they did close their premises at the proper time, and that these charges were the result of personal spleen on the part of the constable, who had been refused further credit. In cases of this kind the police had great power, which could only be properly carried out if the members of the force kept themselves above suspicion. The probabilities, counsel submitted, were very much in favour of the version given by the Indians.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones, Maasdorp, J.: I do not see how the Court can interfere in this case. The decision of the case depends altogether upon the view taken of the credibility of the witnesses. The accused is charged with having contravened the 17th section of Act 35, 1906, in having kept open his shop for the purpose of trade after eleven o'clock. The evidence against him is given by a policeman, and the case for the prosecution mainly, but not wholly, depends upon the evidence of the policeman. The policeman states that he was on his beat, and it appears that he was on special duty that night, because he had received special instructions from his sergeant, Roodewald. Roodewald says that he had been sent out to observe certain shops, and that he (the policeman) came to report to him at about eleven o'clock. He said it might have been about five minutes before eleven, or about eleven, when the policeman came and reported to him what he had observed. He thereupon sent him off again to keep proper watch. Well, so far, therefore, the evidence of the policeman is corroborated. He said that, having made observations, he went back to his superior officer to report what he had seen, and that was about eleven o'clock. He seems to have reported to his superior officer, because, upon giving warning at one at least of these shops, he was laughed at, and met with a refusal to close at eleven o'clock. A warning was given before eleven that the shops ought to be closed at eleven, and the shopkeepers signified that they would not observe that order. The report was made to the superior officer, Roodewald, and he says thereupon, at about eleven o'clock, he sent the policeman back. That confirms the policeman's evidence that he must have gone back to the shops somewhat after eleven o'clock. It is said that in this particular case the evidence of the policeman should not be accepted, because he had a motive for giving false evidence, and the motive is alleged to be that he owed money at these shops. Now, the mere fact of owing money would rather be an inducement not to report on the part of the debtor the person to whom he is under an obligation, in so far as he received credit from him, and it is also said that it is not only the fact of his owing the money that there is due upon his evidence, but the refusal on the part of the shopkeepers to give him further credit. I may say that the policeman denies this statement. He admits that he did at one time owe money, and that he was still dealing with the other shop, but he denies the statement that he has had unpleasantness with these people. These matters were before the Magistrate, and the main point that was insisted upon before him, if one regards the evidence, was the fact that there were circumstances which would lead to the conclusion that the policeman had very strong motives for false evidence. But, after taking those circumstances into consideration, he accepted the evidence of the policeman as supported by his sergeant as credible, and I see no ground to interfere with his finding in that respect. The appeals will be dismissed.

REX V. HOLLAND AND OTHERS. { 1906.
Dec. 18th.
" 19th.

"Close season"—Act 36 of 1886, Secs. 3, 5 and 11—Gov. Proc. 25 of 1905.

The term "close season" used in Sec. 3 of Act 36 of 1886 is also applicable to such close times, even should they exceed an entire year, as the Governor may proclaim under Sec. 11 of the Act, and any person contravening such Proclamation may be rightly charged and convicted under Sec. 5 of the Act.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Caledon, who had convicted the appellants of having contravened section 5 of Act 36, 1886, in that on the 25th of June, 1906, and at Fransch Kral, in the district of Caledon, they did kill certain antelopes known as steenbok, the said antelopes being specially protected in terms of Proclamation No. 25, 1905, issued in terms of section 11 of the said Act, such proclamation creating a close season for all kinds of antelope in the division of Caledon for a period of two years commencing from the 1st March, 1906. Accused were each sentenced to pay a fine of £4 sterling.

The grounds of appeal as set out in the notice to the Law Department were: That appellants were wrongly charged in that the offence referred to was not one contemplated by, referred to in, or in any way amenable to section 5 of Act 36, 1886; that the evidence adduced as to the locality where the alleged offence took place was not the best evidence, and was improperly admitted and not conclusive; that the evidence adduced was insufficient to substantiate the charge; and that there was gross irregularity on the part of the presiding Magistrate in the conduct of the said proceedings, in that the said Magistrate also acted as prosecutor.

Mr. Upington was for appellants, Holland, Van Broda, and Wreusch; Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Maasdorp, J., asked whether the man who signed the statement of grounds was an attorney and one of the appellants.

Mr. Upington: I think he is. One of the appellants is a European retired Civil Servant, and another is a farmer.

Mr. Upington said that the appeal was brought on three grounds: (a) The appellants had been wrongly charged, because the offence was not one contemplated by section 5 of the Act; (b) the evidence of locality was not the best evidence and had been improperly admitted; (c) the Magistrate had acted both as prosecutor and as judge.

In support of (a), counsel said that proclamation 25 of 1905 annexed to the record was not a proclamation in terms of section 3 of the Act, fixing a close time for the district of Caledon. The proclamation was one under section 11 of the Act, proclaiming a close season for a number of years, and not under section 3, proclaiming a close season for a part of every year. So the offence, if any offence was committed, was not a contravention of section 5, but of the proclamation under section 11. Section 5 applied only to the close season referred to in section 3.

In support of (b), he said that the evidence of locality was a census map, and a quitrent register. It was not proved where the map came from, and it was not a certified map. The Magistrate said he was entitled to take judicial notice of the boundary line of the district of Caledon. He said he knew the locality and was entitled to use his own local knowledge, but he was quite wrong in doing so.

Mr. Jones said that the fifth section was the only one under which appellants could be prosecuted.

As to locality, he said the maps were properly put in. In support he cited the case of Nichols v. Parker (14 East, 33, 1) and Phipson's Evidence (p. 304). There was a proclamation No. 76 of 1887, and this must be the one the Magistrate must have taken judicial notice of. This mentioned the boundary lines between Caledon and Bredasdorp.

He also cited Queen v. Adams (10 C.T.R., 757), in which it was held that judicial notice could be taken of a proclamation without its being actually put in in evidence.

Mr. Upington was heard in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 19th).

Maasdorp, J.: There are three cases before the Court of a similar character, and I have taken the case of Rex v. Holland first because that deals more fully with all the circumstances, and the decision of that case will really dispose of the other two cases. The defendant in this case was charged with contravening section 5 of Act 36, 1886, in that he did wrongfully and unlawfully kill one antelope, known as a steenbok, the said antelope being specially protected in terms of Proclamation No. 25, 1905, issued in terms of section 11 of the said Act. No. 36, 1886, the said proclamation creating a close season for all kinds of antelope in the district of Caledon for the period of two years commencing from the 1st March, 1905. Before pleading, exception was taken by the defendant in the following terms: "The defendant excepts to the charge preferred against him on the ground that the crime or offence with which he stands charged and is arraigned, to wit the killing of certain antelope, known as steenbok, during the close season as ascertained to the division of Caledon and as defined by Proclamation No. 25, 1905, a proclamation duly issued in terms of section 11 of Act 36, 1886, is not one contemplated by, referred to in, or amenable to section 5 of Act 36, 1886, which the accused is charged with having contravened." The Magistrate dealt rather summarily with this exception and, it seems, without giving his reasons for his decision. Now, it seems to me that the point required certainly a little more consideration than the Magistrate was prepared to give it. The Proclamation in question is issued by the Governor on the 20th January, 1905, and is to the following effect: "Under and by virtue of the powers and authorities in me vested by section 11, Act 36, 1886, entitled an Act for the Better Preservation of Game, I do hereby proclaim that in the area named in the schedule hereto the animals therein described shall be protected and not destroyed during the period mentioned in such schedule, and that the said period shall be a close season for the animals in question under the provisions of section 5 of the said Act, No. 36, 1886." In the schedule the area described is the division of Caledon, and the protected animals are described as all kinds of antelope for a period of two years commencing from the 1st March, 1905. This proclamation was issued under the powers vested in the Governor by the 11th section of the Act. The question now arises whether, in contravening the terms of this proclamation, the defendant has brought himself within the terms of section 5 of this Act. In section 5 it is provided that no person shall shoot at game in any district in the Colony during the close season. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the close season here described is confined to the period of protection granted under section 3 of this Act. Under section 3 it is made lawful for the Governor by proclamation to fix and prescribe for each district in the Colony a close time or fence season within which it shall not be lawful to kill game. Now, the contention is that it is contemplated by the Legislature that the Governor should fix for the protection of game some period annually, in his discretion, during which it shall be unlawful to kill game. Under the old law a period was fixed, running from the 1st July to the 30th November, for the protection of all game. Apparently, such a hard and fast rule was not found to be expedient, and it was, therefore, considered by the Legislature advisable to give the Governor discretion to fix periods for the protection of game, and under this section, in my opinion, the discretion is given him to fix different periods for different kinds of game. Apparently, under this section proclamations do exist for establishing annually periods during which game should be protected, and it is contended that the section 5 only refers to the close season contemplated under section 3. Upon reference to section 11, it will appear that the powers of the Governor are extended beyond merely prescribing annual periods for the protection of game; power is given to him to fix periods, not exceeding three years, during which any kind of animal, which he, in his discretion, feels should be protected, is not to be destroyed. The term "close season" is not used in this section, but it seems to me that the absence of the term does not prevent the period which is fixed by the Governor for the protection of game, even if it should exceed the annual period contemplated in section 3, from being regarded as a close season. In section 3 it is provided that the Governor may prescribe periods during which it shall not be lawful to kill game. It was not absolutely necessary to designate that period by any particular name, but that period is called a "close season." In my opinion it would have been a "close season" even if that term had not been used in that section and it was not necessary, in order to bring that section under section 5, that the special description of the period should be given. In the same way when the Governor proclaims a certain period extending for more than one year for the protection of a certain animal, that period may properly be called a "close season" for the protection of that animal for that period, and if it may be so termed, then I see no difficulty in bringing it within the terms of section 5. It was argued by Mr. Upington that some regard must be had to the fact that this power only appears in a section of the Act subsequent to section 5, which had already disposed of the penalties respecting close season, but, although at times the position of a provision in an Act may be of some importance in the interpretation of the Act, I come to the conclusion that the period in section 11 can be called a "close season," and the fact that it is introduced in the Act later than the section providing the penalty ought not to influence the conclusion. Mr. Upington has called my attention also to the fact that not only is the power of the Governor extended to giving larger periods for protection, but his power is also extended for the purpose of embracing other animals than those called "game," and the section specially provides that with regard to those other animals they shall then be regarded as game under the other provisions of the Act. Here we have certainly one portion of the section brought specially, in terms of the section, under the other powers relative to a close season, and I think that the word "close season" should also be extended to the period within which animals are protected under section 11. The charge is, therefore, properly laid as a contravention under section 5, which would embrace offences relative both to sections 3 and 11. After the exception was disposed of, the Magistrate proceeded to try the case, and a ground of appeal is now raised to the effect that there was no evidence that the offence was committed within the district of Caledon. Upon reference to the evidence, I find there were positive statements to that effect. We have Dyer, who knows the boundary very well, and who must have had dealings with respect to the situation of the farm in its relations to the district, stating his opinion most clearly that the whole of the farm lies within the district of Caledon, and he says he knows the boundary line between Bredasdorp and Caledon, and in his opinion the buck were killed some distance inside the Caledon boundary. It is said some better evidence might have been produced, but I do not see that it was necessary in this case, after a strong prima facie case had been made out, to go any further. It would have been in the power of the defendant to have produced evidence to rebut the case of the prosecution, and if that had been done then it might have been necessary to establish the point by other evidence, or the prosecution must necessarily have failed. I think these are the only two points which the Court has now to consider. Some others were mentioned, but counsel stated that he did not intend to rely upon them. The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed. The appeals in the other cases against Van Breda and Wrensch will also be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BRITISH FREE RIGHTS BENEFIT SOCIETY V. RUNCIMAN. 1906.
FIF SOCIETY V. RUNCIMAN. { Dec. 19th.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why applicants should not be granted leave to sign judgment against him, with costs, for not proceeding in the cause by him against applicants, and also why the costs of the application on the 12th July, 1906, should not be paid by respondent.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicants, who are officers of the Free Rights Benefit Society, Rondebosch; Mr. Gutsche was for respondent (Wm. Runciman).

Mr. Benjamin said that this matter arose out of an action brought by the present respondent against applicants to recover £75 15s., balance due of moneys advanced to the subordinate lodge at Simon's Town. Judgment was given against the then defendants by default. Application was then made by those defendants for leave to re-open the matter on certain grounds, and his lordship granted leave accordingly, but ordered the question of costs to stand over. Subsequently, however, the plaintiff (Mr. Runciman) withdrew the summons, so that it would not be necessary now to ask for leave to sign judgment, and applicants would be entitled to costs of that application. The only question remaining to be determined by the Court was as to the costs of the previous application for leave to purge default, and enter appearance. Mr. Benjamin submitted that, the plaintiff having admitted that he had not sued the proper parties, applicants were entitled to their costs.

[Maasdorp, J.: Yes, but that is not sufficient; there may have been gross negligence on applicants' part in not taking steps more promptly.]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that plaintiff had shown an undue amount of haste in bringing the matter into court, and that he had been entirely unreasonable in his dealings with the applicants.

Mr. Gutsche contended that, if the trustees should have been sued and not the committee, the applicants themselves were to blame, because it was only after his lordship's judgment that they took steps to appoint trustees. The only question was whether the applicants were not negligent in regard to entering appearance, and thus saving wasted costs. Their conduct in that respect, counsel submitted, had certainly been very lax, and the Court would not order the respondent to pay costs wasted by the applicants' negligence.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that the plaintiff in this case had dealings with the subordinate lodge at Simon's Town of the British Free Rights Benefit Society, and they incurred debts to him. He instituted proceedings for the recovery of these debts against the Grand Lodge of the British Free Rights Benefit Society at Rondebosch. It now appears that the plaintiff is quite satisfied that he has no claim against the lodge at Rondebosch for the debt contracted at Simon's Town, and I may go further, and say that there seems to have been no reasonable ground which ought to have induced the plaintiff to believe that he had any such claim. When the claim was made against the Rondebosch Lodge, they were naturally taken by surprise, and they certainly would require time to make some inquiries as to the nature of the debt and why they should be held responsible for it. At the same time, it also appears that the defendants, who were regarded as the responsible officers of the lodge by plaintiff, were scattered in different districts, and it would have been necessary for them to meet and consider their position, and, when reference is made to the manner in which the service was effected, it appears that service was effected upon them at the lodge at Rondebosch. If they were the proper persons to sue for that lodge, then that would be the proper place to effect service, and the plaintiff need not have followed them up in their different residences, but there is nothing to show that they were the proper officers who should be the defendants in an action. They were entitled, under the circumstances, to separate, due and legal service upon themselves, but that was not effected. I do not now go so much into the question of the legal effect of this as to point out that here again there was a further ground entitling them to delay if they requested it. When the action was proceeding, they did represent to the plaintiff's representatives that it was impossible for them to be ready to answer the action on the day on which it was set down, and requested that it should not be pressed. In spite of that, it was pressed. The applicants were, therefore, bound to come to the Court, to ask that the judgment so obtained should be set aside; costs were incurred in that application, and costs were ordered to stand over, because the Court was not quite satisfied then that the applicants were not liable for the debt, and, perhaps, were not right in setting up technical difficulties in the way of payment; and, further, the question as to the delay and the ground of the delay upon the part of the applicants did not clearly appear. But, as the case now stands, I think it would have been only reasonable of the plaintiff to have allowed further delay in the difficulties which the defendants were then placed through his own action in the matter. As it now appears, he had absolutely no claim at all, and the fact that he made a claim against persons who were utterly ignorant of the debt should have induced him to give them time to consider their position, and not have pressed the claim and rendered the application necessary. The result will be that the costs were really incurred through the unreasonable conduct of the plaintiff in this case, and the Court will order that costs incurred be paid by the respondent, including costs of the application for reopening the case.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte CILLIERS. { 1906.
{ Dec. 20th.

Mr. De Waal moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of T. C. W. Johnson, deputy sheriff, as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Jacobus Johannes Swart, a farmer, of Hoeko, Ladismith, pending the election of a permanent trustee.

Mr. Johnson was appointed provisional trustee, with power to carry on the farming operations, and to sell the perishable articles and ostrich feathers, costs of this application to come out of the estate.

NIEUWOUDT V. R.M. OF RICHMOND.

Recusation of judge — Judex suspectus — Enmity — Partiality — Malice.

The appellant, on being charged with assault before a Resident Magistrate, excepted to his adjudicating in the case on the ground of personal feeling or malice in that he had before hearing the case said to the appellant's attorney, "I am going to have the accused locked up, I cannot have the public disturbed; the public must be protected." The exception was overruled and the accused was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of £3.

Held, that the use of these words was not conclusive proof of enmity, partiality, or malice; and that, as the Magistrate probably meant to convey no more than that if the evidence which he understood would be given was correct, then it was a case in which the man should, in the public interest, be locked up, the Court should not, on review, set aside the conviction, seeing that, according to the evidence, the assault had been clearly committed.

This was an application for review of certain proceedings in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Richmond, in which the applicant, a European police-constable named Hermias Jacobus Nieuwoudt, had been charged with assaulting one Barend Kivido, thereby inflicting upon the said Kivido, "certain wounds, bruises, and injuries and other wrongs and injuries." Nieuwoudt had been convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of £3 or one month's imprisonment.

Applicant asked the Court to review the proceedings on the following grounds: (1) That the statement of the charge in question was not made out by the Public Prosecutor, nor were the complaints and depositions taken by him, but by the said Resident Magistrate, who thereby acted as prosecutor, and rendered himself incompetent to try the case; (2) that after accused had been charged on November 13, and an exception had been taken on his behalf had been overruled, no postponement until a further date was ordered, and the case was summarily called upon two days afterwards; (3) that the Resident Magistrate was incompetent to try the case on the ground of interest and personal feeling or malice, having prior to the hearing of any evidence expressed his opinion that the accused was guilty in the following words, viz.: "I am going to have the accused locked up; I cannot have the public disturbed. The public must have some protection," and, further, in that he wrongfully and unlawfully issued a warrant for the arrest of the accused in a matter that should have been summarily dealt with; (4) that there was not sufficient evidence against the prisoner to justify the Magistrate in convicting him."

Mr. Uppington was for applicant; Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Attorney-General.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court might as well dispose of the fourth ground at once, because it was a ground of appeal, and not of review.

Mr. Uppington admitted that, strictly speaking, it was a ground of appeal.

Mr. Jones said that a report had been received from the Resident Magistrate dealing briefly with this case.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the case should be decided upon what appeared on the record.

Some question was raised as to whether the Magistrate had made use of the remarks set out in the third ground before or after the accused had been arrested, and at length

Mr. Jones, with the consent of Mr. Uppington, read a portion of the Magistrate's report. The Magistrate said that he did not consider he was incompetent to try the case, as he had absolutely no interest, personal feeling, or malice towards accused. In the interests of law and order, in duty bound, he did make use of the words mentioned in paragraph 3, as accused only very shortly before this case disturbed the peace, and was discharged, on his (the Resident Magistrate's) recommendation, and he had given him careful warning as to his future conduct. On the affidavits he (the Magistrate) thought he had a perfect right, and was justified in issuing a warrant for the arrest of accused.

Mr. Uppington submitted that there was partiality on the part of the Magistrate in taking such a personal interest in this case. It was altogether against the spirit of the times. The Chief Constable was really the public prosecutor of the district, and yet the Magistrate practically took the case out of his hands, and conducted the prosecution. He submitted that under all the circumstances it would be really impossible for the Magistrate to have given an impartial decision. Furthermore, the Magistrate's explanation as to how he came to make use of what, at the very least, was a most indiscreet expression, could not for a moment hold water.

Mr. Jones submitted that the first ground was wholly bad and invalid, and that it was perfectly regular and competent for the Magistrate to act as he had done. He thought this was the first they had heard in this court of a Magistrate showing partiality against a constable. They generally heard of the opposite thing. Counsel submitted that the words said to have been used by the Magistrate did not disclose any interest, personal feeling, or malice on his part. The complaints of irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings had not been shown to be well founded.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an important application, and it is to be regretted that the Court has not been favoured with any authority bearing upon the important question which has been raised. The question, briefly, is this, what degree of imprudence on the part of the Magistrate in making statements before a case is heard would amount to proof of such partiality or enmity or malice as would entitle the accused to recuse the Magistrate as Judge. My own impression of the law is that frivolous causes of suspicion would not be admissible, and that the clearest possible proof of such enmity, partiality or malice must be given. There should be no doubt in the mind of the Court, to whom an appeal is made to set aside the proceedings of the Magistrate, as to the improper motives which influenced the Magistrate in deciding the case. The question is whether, in the present case, sufficient evidence has been given to justify this Court in branding the Magistrate as a person who, in deciding this case, had been guilty either of enmity towards the accused or of malice. Well, this statement is made by the attorney of the accused that, on the morning of the 10th November, while he was standing in the office of the Clerk of the Court, the Magistrate came in and made a statement to the following effect: "I am going to have Nieuwoudt locked up; I cannot allow the public to be disturbed; the public must have some protection." That is a vague statement which cannot be considered as expressing the deliberate opinion of the Magistrate that the accused would be punished whatever the nature of the evidence against him might be. The attorney of the accused would have been the last person to whom the Magistrate would have made this statement if that were his deliberate intention. What the Magistrate probably meant to convey was this, "if the evidence, which I understand is to be given, is correct, then it is a case in which the man should be locked up, because the public interest requires that the people who are disturbed should have some protection." It is said, as proof of partiality, that the Magistrate took a very prominent part in the re-examination of the witnesses. It seems that the Magistrate understood Dutch, and that the Chief Constable did not understand Dutch. The Public Prosecutor was the Chief Constable, but the Magistrate took the examination of the witnesses into his own hands, but that does not prove that he did so in order to find evidence against the accused. He did so as a matter of convenience, and not from any malicious motive. The 5th section of Ordinance 40 of 1828 mentions among the grounds of review interest in the cause and malice. In the present case the Magistrate certainly had no interest in the cause, and as to malice, that should be more clearly proved than by evidence such as has been adduced. The application for review must therefore be refused. I am reminded that the result of the case shows that the Magistrate did not give any very deliberate meaning to the words he used, because he imposed a very moderate fine, and, judging from the nature of the assault, which was clearly proved, there was not much enmity or partiality disclosed in the final result. The application must be refused. I am bound to add this remark, that it was certainly an indiscreet thing on the part of the Magistrate to express his opinion, and that it is in every way advisable for Magistrates to keep their minds perfectly open before they hear a case, and avoid expressing any opinion, whether to the attorney of the accused or any one, before the case actually comes into Court.

REX V. PAPERT.

Liquor licence—Condition—Ultra vires.

A condition indorsed on a liquor licence that "after close of canteens no liquor be sold, delivered or supplied in any hotel bar to farm servants, labourers or to persons of the class habitually frequenting canteens,"

Held to be ultra vires.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch, who had convicted the appellant, Jacob Papert, proprietor of the Grand National Hotel, Dorp-street, Stellenbosch, of a contravention of the liquor laws, in that, on Saturday, October 25, he did supply certain three coloured labourers after the hours prescribed in his licence for closing of canteens, to wit, three p.m., with liquor, contrary to a condition indorsed upon his licence. The licence stipulated that the licence-holder should not supply liquor after certain hours to "farm servants, labourers, or persons habitually frequenting canteens." Accused was sentenced to pay a fine of £25, or three months' imprisonment.

The ground of appeal was that the condition in question was ultra vires of the Licensing Court.

Mr. Alexander was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Jones, at the outset, said that he did not think he could support the conviction.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the stipulation on the licence was clearly ultra vires, and he cited the following cases: Orchard v. Bredaadorp Licensing Court (21 Sup. Co. Reports, 379), Queen v. Transveldt (5 Juta, 181), Pearson v. Licensing Board of Uitenhage (3 Juta, 365), Rex v. Heydenrych (2 E.D. (t.), 248), Rex v. Robertson (9 Juta, 299), Municipality of East London v. Umvato (9 Juta, 465), and Queen v. Smith (3 E.D. Ct., 465).

De Villiers, C.J.: The appellant in this case was charged with having, on a certain day, at his licensed premises known as the Grand National Hotel, wrongfully and unlawfully, after the hours prescribed on his licence for the closing of canteens, to wit 3 p.m., sold, delivered, or supplied, or allowed to be sold, delivered, or supplied to one Klaas Theron, a coloured labourer, two bottles of liquor commonly called Cape wine. There are two other similar counts in regard to other labourers. One of the conditions of the licence was this: "After close of canteen no liquor to be sold, delivered, or supplied in any hotel bar to farm servants, labourers, or to persons of the class habitually frequenting canteens." It appears in this case there is only an hotel bar, there is no canteen, properly so-called, attached to these licensed premises, and the Court has frequently decided that conditions of this kind cannot be imposed, which introduce class or social distinctions not recognised by the Liquor Licensing Acts. It is unnecessary to discuss the several cases in which this principle has been decided, but there is the case of Queen v. Transveldt (5 Juta, 181), which might, at first sight, appear to be in favour of this condition. In that case there was a condition annexed to a licence that liquor may be sold after nine o'clock up to midnight within the hotel and billiard-room to persons frequenting, and being in such hotel or billiard-room of the class commonly admitted to the table d'hôte of such hotel. There it seems a Hottentot boy had gone to get some brandy. Well, that Hottentot boy was not "frequenting and being in such hotel," and consequently the Court held that the condition so far as it affected that case, was not ultra vires. In that case special privileges were given to sell after nine o'clock up to midnight, and it was in emendation of this special privilege that the condition was annexed. If in that case the person to whom the liquor was sold had been an inmate of the hotel or a player in the billiard-room, but not of the class commonly admitted to the table d'hôte, the decision might have been different, and the case is certainly not an authority for holding that the condition now in question could be properly imposed. In my opinion it was ultra vires of the Licensing Board to introduce the condition; and the appeal must accordingly be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HAMP.

{ 1906.
Dec. 20th.

Mr. Louwrens moved on the petition of Sarah Ann Hamp for leave to sue her husband (Alfred Hy. Hamp), in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The matter had been before the Court previously, but had been ordered to stand over for further information as to respondent's whereabouts. Counsel now read a further affidavit by petitioner, from which it appeared that her husband was employed by a firm of drapers in Dunedin, New Zealand. He quoted ex parte Brink (vol. 16, part 2, C.T. Reports, 439) as authority for leave being given to sue without the usual rule being issued.

Hopley, J., said that, as defendant had gone to another country, and had left his wife apparently in a state of destitution, leave would be given at once.

Subject to counsel certifying probabilis causa, leave was granted to petitioner to sue in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, personal service to be effected. Mr. P. S. T. Jones to be counsel and Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton to be attorneys of the petitioner. citation to be returnable on March 20, with leave to serve intendit, and notice of trial with citation.

Ex parte INDWE MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Mr. Watermayer applied for leave to effect substituted service upon the respondent, Gert Johannes Botha, in the event of personal service being impossible. Counsel said he was instructed that Botha had left Indwe, and, it was thought, had gone to Johannesburg.

Hopley, J., granted leave to effect substituted service by one publication in the "Times of the Frontier" in the event of personal service being impossible.

Accomplices — Arson — Brandstichting — Burning house with intent to defraud or otherwise injure Insurance Company—Ordinance 72 of 1830, Sec. 12.

While it is the duty of a judge presiding at a criminal trial at which accomplices give evidence against the accused, to warn the jury against convicting without corroboration on material facts, the Court will not interfere with the conviction, after such warning, if the jury believed the accomplices, and there was satisfactory evidence aliunde that the offence charged had been actually committed by some one, although there be no other corroboration.

On the trial of the appellant for arson, two accomplices, who had already been convicted, gave evidence that they had been employed by him to set fire to the house, and there was the independent evidence of two constables that there were clear indications of the fire having been wilfully caused.

Held, that there was not sufficient ground for disturbing the verdict.

Accomplices—Attempt to commit arson.

On a trial of the appellants for an attempt to commit arson, two witnesses, who had already been convicted, swore that they had been employed by the appellants to set fire to the house. A police constable deposed that he saw one of the two witnesses at the time of the attempt enter the house with some parcels, and then come out with the parcels, which, on his being then and there arrested, were found to contain benzine, while the other witness had been watching outside; and the accused, as well as other witnesses for the defence, admitted that the offence of attempt to commit arson had been actually committed by some one.

Held, on a question reserved, that there was not sufficient ground for disturbing the conviction of the appellants by a jury.

Company—Winding up—Contributories—Fully paid-up shares—Companies Act (No. 25 of 1892), Sec. 97—Eas-toppel.

The owner of a manufactory sold his business to the promoters of a company, and one of the terms of the agreement was that he should receive a certain number of fully paid-up shares in the company. The company was floated, but the agreement was not filed with the Registrar in terms of the 97th section of Act 25 of 1892. Thereafter the company was ordered to be wound up.

Held, that as the company had issued the scrip for such vendor's shares as being fully paid up, the liquidators were not entitled to place the names of bona fide purchasers of such shares, without notice of any illegality, upon the list of contributories in respect of such shares.

Held further, that directors who had obtained such scrip without giving value for them, or purchasers who had notice of the illegality, were liable to be placed on the list.

Construction of contract of sale—Demurrage.

The plaintiffs, by letter dated from London, offered to supply the defendant with 5,400 tons of coal for Cape Town at a certain price per ton c.i.f. on monthly shipments for six months, and stipulated that the defendant was "to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay at the rate of 120 tons per day, or the defendant to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per nett registered ton per day." The coal was conveyed in ships chartered by the plaintiffs in unequal shipments, so that in the first two months less than 9,000 tons per month, and in the 4th and 5th months more than 9,000 tons were delivered and accepted. Under the charter parties the coal was to be received at the average rate of 120 tons per day, but the lay days were to commence 24 hours after notice of arrival of ship, and the rate of demurrage was to be 3d. per nett registered ton per day.

Held in an action for demurrage for the 4th and 5th months at 4d. per ton per day, that according to the true construction of the contract the defendant was liable only for the rate of demurrage payable by the plaintiffs themselves not exceeding, however, 4d. per ton per day.		Rhodesia, that the parties must be presumed to have intended that there shall be a corresponding obligation on M. to take and pay for the light and that it was for M. to fix the 250 nights when the lamps should be lit.

Held further, that after accepting the cargoes of the ships which arrived in excessive quantities during the 4th and 5th months, the defendant was not relieved from paying the demurrage for which the plaintiffs were liable in respect of those ships, whatever damages the defendant might claim for failure to deliver the cargo in equal monthly shipments.		In consideration of the undertakings given by W., M. undertook and agreed to pay W. at such rate as would yield to W. a return equal to ten per cent. over the actual cost of generating the light.
Colonial Government v. Houlder Bros. and Co., Ltd. ...	983	Held, that the cost of generating the light included the cost of generating the electric current as well as transmitting the current to the lamps, and that "actual cost" did not include interest on capital, but did include depreciation of plant and machinery as well as rents, rates and taxes, so far as they relate to the electrical works.

The defendants, however, possessed only pros- pecting rights for a short period and were unable to pass legal transfer of title author- izing the purchasers to exercise the full mining rights pur- chased. The purchase price was not paid, but before the plaintiffs discovered that the defendants would not be able to give full title, they had incurred certain expenditure in Portuguese Africa for the protection of their interests in connection with the purchase, including the expenses of a drill which, under the contract, the plaintiffs had to buy and maintain.	the plaintiff intended to deliver white instead of red mahogany sleepers, gave notice to the plaintiff that the former could only be accepted at a reduced price. The plaintiff raised no objection beyond asking the defendant to reconsider the matter, and thereafter not only delivered the white mahogany sleepers, but received the re- duced price and signed vouchers prepared on behalf of the defendant, which shewed the deduction on the face of the account.
Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled by means of the redhibitory action to be placed in the same position as if the sale had not been effected and were consequently entitled to have the sale cancelled and to claim as damages the expendi- ture reasonably incurred in connection with the purchase.	Held in an action for pay- ment of the balance of the price originally agreed upon, that, although there was no express contract for a reduc- tion of price, the conduct of the plaintiff amounted to an acceptance of the terms on which the defendant had con- sented to accept white instead of red mahogany sleepers.

of the vessels in Table Bay and Algoa Bay respectively at the rate of 120 tons a day for sailing vessels and 250 for steamers, or to be liable for demurrage at the rate of 4d. per ton for sailing vessels and 6d. for steamers. The coal arrived by 18 sailing ships, but not within the stipulated 6 months: and the quantity received in certain months considerably exceeded that received in others. Eight of these vessels were not discharged within contract time, and in respect of these the plaintiffs now claimed demurrage. The defendants pleaded (1) the irregularity of the shipments and their consequent inability to take delivery as per contract: (2) novation of the original contract, inasmuch as plaintiffs had chartered vessels at a rate of demurrage less than that stipulated for in the contract and that the bills of lading of these vessels, some of them expressly incorporating the conditions of the charter parties, were transferred to, and accepted by the defendants. A regatta being about to be held in the River, the Harbour Master ordered the temporary removal of the vessels, and as he knew that they had no master or crew on board, he employed servants of the Board to attach them to a hulk lying nearer the side of the river. Horse—Contraband of war—Trading with "enemy"—Booty—Res nullius.
During the late war one K., a member of a hostile commando, exchanged a horse for a stallion and a sum of money with the appellant, a British subject. Appellant was afterwards ordered by the Military to send his horses to a "protection camp," when, seeing that the horse in question bore K.'s mark, they claimed it as booty and eventually sold it to one D. On D.'s death, it was sold as part of his estate to one B., from whom it was purchased by respondent, who offered to restore it to appellant on payment of a certain price. Having obtained possession of the horse, appellant claimed it as his own property, and refused to pay for it. In the Court below the Magistrate gave judgment for £32 in favour of respondent, and against this judgment appellant now appealed.
Held, that inasmuch as trading with an enemy, especially in contraband of war, is illegal during time of war, appellant had not a good title to the horse; that it was legally a res nullius, and that by confiscating it as booty the Military had acquired a good title to it, and that the subsequent sales were all good in law. That appellant, having been legally divested of his former ownership in the horse, could recover the same only by purchase from the present lawful owner (respondent): and that hence the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Illegal contract—Agreement not to prosecute—Par delictum—Duress—Costs.

P. stole two heifers from W., who, after incurring certain expenses in sending for them, estimated by the Magistrate at £1, found them in possession of T., to whom P. had sold them. W. consulted V., an attorney, on the subject, and P. was induced by them to hand over a horse and an ox to W., which were subsequently sold by V., in his capacity as an auctioneer, and realized £13 1s. 6d. There was a conflict of evidence as to the precise value of this consideration, but the Magistrate found, as a fact, that V. and W. led P. to believe that in consideration of the delivery of these animals he would not be prosecuted for the theft. A complaint, however, was subsequently laid by W., P. was convicted, and V., who assisted in the prosecution, was paid by W. £3 10s. fees out of the £13 1s. 6d. for his services in the matter. P., after serving his sentence of imprisonment, sued them for the proceeds of the sale of his horse and ox, on the ground of failure of consideration. The defendants excepted that the alleged agreement was illegal and that an action could not be founded on its breach. The Magistrate over-ruled the exception and gave judgment against the defendants, jointly and severally, for the amount claimed, less £1, which he allowed W. for his expenses as above.

Held on appeal, that the parties were not in pari delicto, and the respondent having been subjected by the appellants to duress, that in the circumstances he was entitled to recover from W. the proceeds of the sale, but that the liability of V. must be limited to the amount which he had received for his "professional assistance."

Held also, that in the civil cases, notwithstanding this variation of the order, the costs of appeal should be paid by appellants.

Immigration Act (47 of 1902)—
Deportation of undesirables
—Notice of motion for release
—Contempt of Court—Restoration to jurisdiction.

The applicants were deported from the Colony as prohibited immigrants under the 8th section of Act 47 of 1902. Before they were actually removed, notice was served on the respondent, viz.: the Colo-

Held on an application that the applicants be restored to the jurisdiction, that as the evidence shewed that the applicants were prohibited immigrants under the Act and were not domiciled in S. Africa, or otherwise exempt from the operation of the Act, the Court could not order their restoration to the Colony.	Held, that the mortgagee's rights attached to the building.
Held further, on an application that the respondents be punished for contempt of Court, that, as the respondents had not disobeyed any order of the Court and had deported the applicants bona fide in pursuance of arrangements made before they were served with notice of the application for the release of the applicants and not with the ulterior object of preventing the application from being duly heard, they could not be found guilty of contempt of Court. Upon the insolvency of M. & Co., the respondent trustee awarded to the bank a preference over the movables in respect of debts incurred by M. & Co. to C. after the date of the cession.
Held, that it was no valid ground of objection on the part of the appellant, in whose favour a special covering bond, with the general clause, had been passed after C.'s bond, that the debts proved by the bank were incurred after the date of the cession.
Held, however, that inasmuch as a mortgage under a covering bond only takes effect as the debts thereby covered are incurred, the bank was not entitled to a preference over the appellant in respect of debts incurred by M. & Co. to C. after the date of debts incurred by M. & Co. to the appellant under his duly registered covering bond.

Liquor Acts—Penalty.

Under the 75th section of Act 28 of 1883, the maximum penalty for a first conviction of certain offences is £25. Under the 2nd section of Act 28 of 1898, a person convicted of breach of a condition imposed by virtue of that section is liable, on conviction, to the penalties prescribed by the 75th section of Act 28 of 1883. By the 5th section of Act 34 of 1904, the maximum pecuniary penalty under Sec. 75 of Act 28 of 1883 is increased.

Held, that by virtue of such increase there is not, without a special provision to that effect, a corresponding increase of the penalty for a contravention of a condition imposed under Sec. 2 of Act 28 of 1898.

Locatio operarum—Scab inspector—Salary—Pleading—Estoppel—Acquiescence.

In an action brought by the plaintiff against the Government for his salary for twelve months as scab inspector for the District of C., the plea was that he had been deported from C. under Martial Law, and that he was entitled to salary only until the date of such deportation. The replication was to the effect that the plaintiff was in no way to blame for the deportation, and that he was always ready and willing to perform his duties. The evidence shewed that he was ready to perform his duties, but was prevented by the Military authorities before and after his removal, whilst the Government neither dismissed him nor insisted upon his performance of his duties. Some months afterwards the Government asked him when he would resume his duties, and his answer was that he had lost a leg by an accident, but would be ready to resume work two months afterwards. He was thereupon summarily dismissed.

Held, on appeal, that the plaintiff was entitled to his salary for the period of his deportation until he became personally unfit for the performance of his duties.

At the trial it was proved that some months before the plaintiff's deportation the Government informed him, by letter, that the payment of his emoluments would be stopped from a certain date, that the plaintiff, in his answer, asked to be paid for the full month within which the notice was given, signing his name as "late inspector," that the Government thereafter tendered payment of salary up to the date of deportation, and that, but for such deportation, the Government would have paid him full salary subsequent thereto notwithstanding the Government letter. The Court below held that the plaintiff was estopped by his acquiescence in the Government notice from claiming salary subsequent thereto.

Held, on appeal, that as the defence of estoppel was quite inconsistent with the pleadings and raised a defence which the plaintiff might have been able to meet if pleaded, the evidence as to the Government letter should not prejudice his claim to full salary.

An application having been made to the Eastern Districts Court to have W. declared of unsound mind and a curator appointed to his estate, that Court declared him to be incapable of managing his own affairs and appointed curators to his property. Upon the death of W., the curators continued the administration of the estate under the authority of the Master, who acted under the 41st section of Act 1 of 1897.

Held, that as W. had not been declared to be of unsound mind, the 41st section did not apply, and the Master was directed to call a meeting of next of kin for the selection of an executor dative.

	In an action in a Magistrate's Court for damages for £20, the defendant filed a counter-claim for £4 10s. and another counterclaim for £20, both being illiquid. The Magistrate, after dismissing the counter-claims, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, gave judgment for the plaintiff and decided that the second counter-claim could not be sustained on the merits.	Magistrate's finding on facts over-ruled — Spoor evidence — Caning of juvenile offenders — Act 21 of 1869, Sec. 2.

Held, that a plaintiff may in the same action include liquid and illiquid claims, provided that the total sum of the liquid claims does not exceed the Magistrate's jurisdiction in liquid cases and the total sum of the illiquid claims does not exceed his jurisdiction in illiquid cases.	Rex v. Du Plessis ... 714
Held further, that as the total sum of the illiquid counter-claims in this case exceeded £20, the Magistrate would not have had jurisdiction if the defendant had been the original plaintiff.	Magistrate—Finding on facts—Tainted evidence.
Held further, that it would have been competent for the Magistrate to allow the defendant to elect to proceed on one of the counter-claims, and that as he had given a decision on the second counterclaim after dismissing both counter-claims and without hearing the defendant's evidence thereon, the case should be remitted for the purpose of a decision, after due evidence, on the second counter-claim. Held, that as the interdict was in a suit between the landlord and tenant, the respondent may have reasonably believed that he was not bound by it, but that it was his duty not to proceed beyond attachment of the goods after being informed of the interdict against their removal, and that he should, at all events, pay the costs of the application for attachment as a penalty for contempt of Court.

In 1898 a municipality was established for the township under Act 45 of 1882, and the lessees were always, without any objection on their part, assessed in the plaintiff Council's books as the owners liable to the owners' or landlords' rent, no tenants' rent being ever imposed.

Juritz v. Kalk Bay Municipality	162	Held, that in terms of Act 25 of 1897, Sec. 1, the street was not a "new street," and that in so far as the Council's regulations went beyond the Act in defining a "new street," they were ultra vires, and hence that the Council had no power to insist on the widening of the street to 40 feet as a condition for passing the plans.

The plaintiff sold certain produce to the defendant, who signed a document in his own name, acknowledging the purchase and promising to pay on delivery of the purchase. It was held in the Court below that as the plaintiff had the means of knowing that the defendant had a partner in the purchase of the produce; such partner should have been joined as co-defendant.

Partnership—Agency—Giving of credit.

Before the marriage of the defendant to B., she carried on a hotel business, and after her marriage out of community she continued, ostensibly, to carry on the business in her own name; the licence was in her name and the premises belonged to her, but there was an oral understanding between B. and his wife that the business should belong to B. The plaintiff regarded B. as his wife's manager, but in the books debiting the hotel business the name of B. only appeared.

Held, that as the Court found on the facts that credit had been given to the defendant, she was liable.

Held further, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the plaintiff's claim the amount of certain "good-fors" given to the defendant by the plaintiff's partner S. for liquors supplied in the premises to such partner.

Partnership—Dissolution—Errors or omissions—Bad debts—Depreciation of assets.

The plaintiff and the defendant, who were partners in trade, agreed to a dissolution upon the following terms: the defendant to purchase the plaintiff's interest for £5,000, but in case the defendant should discover any "errors or omissions" in the partnership books and accounts within six months after dissolution, such accounts shall be rectified at joint cost. It appeared that, according to the books, the value of the plaintiff's share of assets was £7,000. It appeared also that the defendant knew before the agreement was made that there were bad debts owing to the partnership, and that there had been depreciation in some of the assets.

Held in an action for the balance of the purchase price, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the price as part of the "errors or omissions" the amount of bad debts and depreciation.

in excess of his authority; the principal is not entitled, as against such third person, to claim the benefit of part of the contract while rejecting the rest.

The manager of the plaintiff Company entered into a written contract with the defendant, whereby the latter undertook to supply to the Company a certain quantity of corn at a fixed price and within a given time, whilst it was orally agreed that the manager should advance to the defendant the sum of £200 for which amount the latter was to sign his promissory note in favour of the manager to be kept in his safe as a security for such advances. The manager deposited the note with his banker as security for his overdraft, and at the due date of the note the defendant was obliged to pay part of the amount to the banker. The manager had no authority from the Company to take the defendant's note in his own favour for the advance, and there was no evidence of collusion between the defendant and the manager.

Held on appeal from the High Court of S. Rhodesia, that the plaintiff Company was not entitled to claim from the defendant more than the balance of the advance after deduction of the amount which he had been compelled to pay to the banker.

Private Bill—Interpretation.

A Bill promoted by the Cape Town Town Council to amend and consolidate its Municipal statutes was duly passed, and by the 110th section of the Act so passed (26 of 1893) the property in the G.P. Common was vested in the Council.

Held, that a strip of land which had from the beginning of the century been regarded as part of the Common, but had recently been occupied by the defendant Board, became vested in the Council notwithstanding that the Act originated as a private Bill.

When, however, a channel has for 30 years or more existed on such man's land for the conveyance of rain-water collected from a neighbouring road, he is not liable if, in a storm, he diverts part of the water into such channel, even though the result should be that through the bursting of the channel the neighbour's land is injured.	The declaration in an action brought by the plaintiff against his attorney for wrongful delivery to a third party of a document delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff, for safe keeping, claimed as damages the loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of his being subjected to a false prosecution for forgery as a result of the defendant not having retained possession of the document.

Held, that the use of these words was not conclusive proof of enmity, partiality, or malice; and that, as the Magistrate probably meant to convey no more than that if the evidence which he understood would be given was correct, then it was a case in which the man should, in the public interest, be locked up, the Court should not, on review, set aside the conviction, seeing that, according to the evidence, the assault had been clearly committed.	The tacit hypothecation of a landlord in respect of rent due on premises let to a company must, in case of the company being ordered to be wound up, be confined to the proceeds of goods that were on the premises at the time of such order.

	Transfer dues—Date of purchase—Reclaimed and reclaimable land—Act 5 of 1884, Sec. 2.
	The Colonial Government had agreed with C. & Co. to allow them to reclaim certain land near the shore of Table Bay, on condition that such land should become the property of C. & Co., if reclaimed within 10 years. Some 6 years before the conclusion of this agreement, C. & Co. had entered into an agreement with another company, whereby they sold some 70,000 square feet of ground "lately reclaimed from the sea," and other certain land thereunto adjoining and covered by the sea, which the vendors had a right to reclaim. Further sales of the property took place, until finally the rights of C. & Co. vested in the applicants. These sales were all made with the consent of the Government. Finally, in June, 1905, the Government granted to C. & Co. the original land reclaimed by them, together with a portion which had been reclaimed by their original successors in title, but refused to make a separate grant to the applicants of the land not reclaimed by them, on the ground that they had consented to the applicants taking over all rights from their predecessors in title. The applicants now desired to obtain transfer of all the reclaimed ground, but in order to do so, it was necessary to pay transfer dues, which the Civil Commissioner could not accept without the customary declarations of purchaser and seller. Applicants asked to have a special date, as the date of sale to them, fixed by the Court for transfer purposes. Under Act 5 of 1884, Sec. 2, transfer duty is payable only upon freehold and quitrent property.

Held, that as applicants had purchased a right to obtain freehold property from the Government within a certain time, of which property the sellers were not at the time of sale in a position to give transfer, it was not competent for the Court to fix a date of sale for transfer purposes.

Transkei — Magistrate's jurisdiction—Courts of appeal—Acts 21 of 1876, 38 of 1877, Sec. 2, 43 of 1885.

The civil jurisdiction of Resident Magistrates in the Transkei as to amount and in respect of claims founded on liquid documents was regulated by Act 21 of 1876; and Act 43 of 1885 does not apply. By Act 38 of 1877, Sec. 2 (see also Act 29 of 1897, Sec. 1), the Governor is empowered to legislate for the Transkei by proclamation, and by such proclamation he subsequently conferred upon the Resident Magistrates of that Territory unlimited jurisdiction as to amount in illiquid civil cases, and the Magistrate has no power to remove such cases.

But non constat that the effect of this proclamation was to extend the jurisdiction under Sec. 3 of Act 21 of 1876.

Semble, the only Superior Court having appellate jurisdiction in native cases in the Transkei is that of the Chief Magistrate: but in cases in which a European is concerned an appeal lies either to the Supreme Court, the Eastern Districts Court, or a Circuit Court within the District.

Trespass—Cutting down trees— Measure of damages.
Where, in an action for trespass, it is proved that trees which enhance the value of the property have been cut down, the measure of damages is not the actual value of the trees, but the damage done to the property by deteriorating its value.
Arend v. Rix... ..	364
Trespass—Right of road—Mis- take in laying out a road— Road of necessity.
In an action for trespass in breaking a fence on the plaintiff's land, the defendant, whose land adjoined the plaintiff's, pleaded that he had broken the fence at a point where it crossed a roadway made by him to give him access to a main road recently constructed by the Government on the boundary of his land. The evidence, however, shewed that although the Government had intended to make the main road on his boundary, the main road, as actually constructed, was well within the plaintiff's land, and that the alleged trespass had been committed where the defendant's roadway crossed the plaintiff's land.
Held, that so long as the main road remains in its present position, the plaintiff is entitled to an interdict restraining the defendant from trespassing for the purpose of reaching the main road by a roadway on the plaintiff's land to which the defendant had no right from necessity or otherwise.

insurance policy on certain of C.'s property for £1,500. Subsequently the policy was taken out in G.'s name, but C. continued to pay the premiums. Thereafter a fire broke out on the premises insured, and arbitrators assessed the damage done at £207 odd. C. wished to restore the premises, but to that G. objected and accepted a tender from an architect to restore the premises for a sum less than the £207 : C. now claimed the balance.
Held, that as it had not been proved that the premises were properly restored, and as G. was liable to the heirs in the estate (among whom there were certain minors) for the condition of the buildings, absolution from the instance must be granted with costs.

Vindication—Sale by bailee—Mobilia non habent sequelam.

It is not an unqualified rule of law that if any one to whom a thing has been lent or otherwise entrusted, alienates it without authority, the owner has no action against the person who has obtained it by a just title and in good faith.

If, however, the thing has been so entrusted under circumstances which might reasonably lead others to believe that the ostensible owner was the true owner, or had authority from the true owner to dispose of it, the owner cannot claim it from a person, who has acquired it in such belief and for value, without tendering to repay such value.

A., being the driver of a post-cart owned by the plaintiff, who was a post contractor, left one of the plaintiff's horses, which became disabled on the road, in the charge of B., and borrowed a mule from B. to prosecute the journey. B. sold and delivered the horse to the defendant.

Held on appeal, that in the absence of proof of such circumstances as just stated, the Magistrate erred in granting absolution from the instance.

Water—Public perennial stream—Furrow—Right of entry on land of upper riparian proprietor for the purpose of repairing furrow.

Mulder and another v. Olivier and others ... 639

Water—Perennial stream—Boundary—Prescription—Aqua erumpens in suo—Servitude.

Plaintiff was the proprietor of a farm situate on the Ongars River. Defendant was the proprietor of a farm situate higher up the river. It had been held by a Circuit Court that at a certain upper part of its course the river was a public perennial stream. but it was shown that as far as the portion in dispute was concerned, the "river" consisted merely of certain pools fed by springs which originated on various private properties, the water of which the owners of such properties had used as their own beyond the term of prescription. There was no continuous flow in the river save after heavy rains, and then only for a few days.

Held, that the portion of the Ongars River in question was not a public perennial stream.

Held further, that the evidence did not disclose that the plaintiff had any servitude or pre-

On the death of P. G., G. G. adiated and sold a bond with secured value of £750 to one H. M. for £100. The plaintiff now sued for (a) a refund of the said £750 (less £100), or (b) of half that amount (less £50), being a portion of P. G.'s estate.
Kock v. Theron ...	173	Held, that as the terms of the will did not contemplate any diminution of the joint estate during the life time of the survivor, it was not the intention of the testators to constitute a fidei-commissum residui, and that judgment must be given in terms of prayer (b).
Water Court—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Act 40 of 1899.		Held further, that the bequest to the child of H. M. was null and void on the ground of uncertainty, and that parol evidence of the testators' intentions was not admissible.
A Water Court established under Act 40 of 1899 has jurisdiction to decide a question of damages alleged to have been sustained by a party to a dispute concerning the diversion of water from a stream alleged by him to be a public perennial stream, and if the Water Court decides that the stream is not perennial, there is an appeal to the Supreme Court under the 15th section of the Act.		Estate Gouws v. The survivor was appointed sole heir, with the proviso that he or she should have power on the death of the first dying to sell the estate by public auction.
